PART C—DEPARTMENT OF THE AIR FORCE

SEC. 521. THE AIR FORCE SECRETARIAT

(a) AMENDMENTS TO CHAPTER 803.—(1) Sections 8010, 8011, 8012, 8013, and 8014 are redesignated as sections 8011, 8012, 8013, 8014, and 8015, respectively.

(2) Section 8019 is transferred to the end of chapter 805 and is redesignated as section 8038.

(3) Chapter 803 is amended by striking out sections 8013, 8014, and 8015 (as redesignated by paragraph (1)) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"§ 8013. Secretary of the Air Force

"(a)(1) There is a Secretary of the Air Force, appointed from civilian life by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Secretary is the head of the Department of the Air Force.

"(2) A person may not be appointed as Secretary of the Air Force within 10 years after relief from active duty as a commissioned officer of a regular component of an armed force.

"(b) Subject to the authority, direction, and control of the Secretary of Defense and subject to the provisions of chapter 6 of this title, the Secretary of the Air Force is responsible for, and has the authority necessary to conduct, all affairs of the Department of the Air Force, including the following functions:

"(1) Recruiting.
"(2) Organizing.
"(3) Supplying.
"(4) Equipping (including research and development).
"(5) Training.
"(6) Servicing.
"(7) Mobilizing.
"(8) Demobilizing.
"(9) Administering (including the morale and welfare of personnel).
"(10) Maintaining.
"(11) The construction, outfitting, and repair of military equipment.
"(12) The construction, maintenance, and repair of buildings, structures, and utilities and the acquisition of real property and interests in real property necessary to carry out the responsibilities specified in this section.

"(c) Subject to the authority, direction, and control of the Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of the Air Force is also responsible to the Secretary of Defense for—

"(1) the functioning and efficiency of the Department of the Air Force;

"(2) the formulation of policies and programs by the Department of the Air Force that are fully consistent with national security objectives and policies established by the President or the Secretary of Defense;

"(3) the effective and timely implementation of policy, program, and budget decisions and instructions of the President or the Secretary of Defense relating to the functions of the Department of the Air Force;

"(4) carrying out the functions of the Department of the Air Force so as to fulfill (to the maximum extent practicable) the current and future operational requirements of the unified and specified combatant commands;

"(5) effective cooperation and coordination between the Department of the Air Force and the other military departments and agencies of the Department of Defense to provide for more effective, efficient, and economical administration and to eliminate duplication;

"(6) the presentation and justification of the positions of the Department of the Air Force on the plans, programs, and policies of the Department of Defense; and

"(7) the effective supervision and control of the intelligence activities of the Department of the Air Force.

"(d) The Secretary of the Air Force is also responsible for such other activities as may be prescribed by law or by the President or Secretary of Defense.

"(e) After first informing the Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of the Air Force may make such recommendations to Congress relating to the Department of Defense as he considers appropriate.

"(f) The Secretary of the Air Force may assign such of his functions, powers, and duties as he considers appropriate to the Under Secretary of the Air Force and to the Assistant Secretaries of the Air Force. Officers of the Air Force shall, as directed by the Secretary, report on any matter to the Secretary, the Under Secretary, or any Assistant Secretary.

"(g) The Secretary of the Air Force may—

"(1) assign, detail, and prescribe the duties of members of the Air Force and civilian personnel of the Department of the Air Force;

"(2) change the title of any officer or activity of the Department of the Air Force not prescribed by law; and

"(3) prescribe regulations to carry out his functions, powers, and duties under this title.

"§ 8014. Office of the Secretary of the Air Force

"(a) There is in the Department of the Air Force an Office of the Secretary of the Air Force. The function of the Office is to assist the Secretary of the Air Force in carrying out his responsibilities.

"(b) The Office of the Secretary of the Air Force is composed of the following:

"(1) The Under Secretary of the Air Force.
"(2) The Assistant Secretaries of the Air Force.
"(3) The General Counsel of the Department of the Air Force.
"(4) The Inspector General of the Air Force.
"(5) The Air Reserve Forces Policy Committee.
"(6) Such other offices and officials as may be established by law or as the Secretary of the Air Force may establish or designate.

"(c)(1) The Office of the Secretary of the Air Force shall have sole responsibility within the Office of the Secretary and the Air Staff for the following functions:

"(A) Acquisition.
"(B) Auditing.
"(C) Comptroller (including financial management).
"(D) Information management.
"(E) Inspector General.
"(F) Legislative affairs.
"(G) Public affairs.

"(2) The Secretary of the Air Force shall establish or designate a single office or other entity within the Office of the Secretary of the Air Force to conduct each function specified in paragraph (1). No office or other entity may be established or designated within the Air Staff to conduct any of the functions specified in paragraph (1).

"(3) The Secretary shall prescribe the relationship of each office or other entity established or designated under paragraph (2) to the Chief of Staff and to the Air Staff and shall ensure that each such office or entity provides the Chief of Staff such staff support as the Chief of Staff considers necessary to perform his duties and responsibilities.

"(4) The vesting in the Office of the Secretary of the Air Force of the responsibility for the conduct of a function specified in paragraph (1) does not preclude other elements of the executive part of the Department of the Air Force (including the Air Staff) from providing advice or assistance to the Chief of Staff or otherwise participating in that function within the executive part of the Department under the direction of the office assigned responsibility for that function in the Office of the Secretary of the Air Force.

"(d)(1) Subject to paragraph (2), the Office of the Secretary of the Air Force shall have sole responsibility within the Office of the Secretary and the Air Staff for the function of research and development.

"(2) The Secretary of the Air Force may assign to the Air Staff responsibility for those aspects of the function of research and development that relate to military requirements and test and evaluation.

"(3) The Secretary shall establish or designate a single office or other entity within the Office of the Secretary of the Air Force to conduct the function specified in paragraph (1).

"(4) The Secretary shall prescribe the relationship of the office or other entity established or designated under paragraph (3) to the Chief of Staff of the Air Force and to the Air Staff and shall ensure that each such office or entity provides the Chief of Staff such staff support as the Chief of Staff considers necessary to perform his duties and responsibilities.

"(e) The Secretary of the Air Force shall ensure that the Office of the Secretary of the Air Force and the Air Staff do not duplicate specific functions for which the Secretary has assigned responsibility to the other.

"(f)(1) The total number of members of the armed forces and civilian employees of the Department of the Air Force assigned or detailed to permanent duty in the Office of the Secretary of the Air Force and on the Air Staff may not exceed 2,639.

"(2) Not more than 1,585 officers of the Air Force on the active-duty list may be assigned or detailed to permanent duty in the Office of the Secretary of the Air Force and on the Air Staff.

"(3) The total number of general officers assigned or detailed to permanent duty in the Office of the Secretary of the Air Force and on the Air Staff may not exceed the number equal to 85 percent of the number of general officers assigned or detailed to such duty on the date of the enactment of this subsection.

"(4) The limitations in paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) do not apply in time of war or during a national emergency declared by Congress. The limitation in paragraph (2) does not apply whenever the President determines that it is in the national interest to increase the number of officers assigned or detailed to permanent duty in the Office of the Secretary of the Air Force or on the Air Staff.

"(5) The limitations in paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) do not apply before October 1, 1988.

"§ 8015. Under Secretary of the Air Force

"(a) There is an Under Secretary of the Air Force, appointed from civilian life by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

"(b) The Under Secretary shall perform such duties and exercise such powers as the Secretary of the Air Force may prescribe.

"§ 8016. Assistant Secretaries of the Air Force

"(a) There are three Assistant Secretaries of the Air Force. They shall be appointed from civilian life by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

"(b)(1) The Assistant Secretaries shall perform such duties and exercise such powers as the Secretary of the Air Force may prescribe.

"(2) One of the Assistant Secretaries shall be the Assistant Secretary of the Air Force for Manpower and Reserve Affairs. He shall have as his principal duty the overall supervision of manpower and reserve component affairs of the Department of the Air Force.".

(4) Section 8017 is amended—

(A) by striking out "(a)" at the beginning of the text of such section;

(B) by striking out clause (2) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(2) The Assistant Secretaries of the Air Force, in the order prescribed by the Secretary of the Air Force and approved by the Secretary of Defense."; and

(C) by striking out subsection (b).

(5) Chapter 803 is further amended by adding at the end the following new sections:

"§ 8018. Administrative Assistant

"The Secretary of the Air Force may appoint an Administrative Assistant in the Office of the Secretary of the Air Force. The Administrative Assistant shall perform such duties as the Secretary may prescribe.

"§ 8019. General Counsel

"(a) There is a General Counsel of the Department of the Air Force, appointed from civilian life by the President.

"(b) The General Counsel shall perform such functions as the Secretary of the Air Force may prescribe.

"§ 8020. Inspector General

"(a) There is an Inspector General of the Air Force who shall be detailed to such position by the Secretary of the Air Force from the general officers of the Air Force. An officer may not be detailed to such position for a tour of duty of more than four years, except that the Secretary may extend such a tour of duty if he makes a special finding that the extension is necessary in the public interest.

"(b) When directed by the Secretary or the Chief of Staff, the Inspector General shall—

"(1) inquire into and report upon the discipline, efficiency, and economy of the Air Force; and

"(2) perform any other duties prescribed by the Secretary or the Chief of Staff.

"(c) The Inspector General shall periodically propose programs of inspections to the Secretary of the Air Force and shall recommend additional inspections and investigations as may appear appropriate.

"(d) The Inspector General shall cooperate fully with the Inspector General of the Department of Defense in connection with the performance of any duty or function by the Inspector General of the Department of Defense under the Inspector General Act of 1978 (5 U.S.C. App. 3) regarding the Department of the Air Force.

"(e) The Inspector General shall have such deputies and assistants as the Secretary of the Air Force may prescribe. Each such deputy and assistant shall be an officer detailed by the Secretary to that position from the officers of the Air Force for a tour of duty of not more than four years, under a procedure prescribed by the Secretary.".

(6) Section 8033 is transferred to the end of chapter 803 (as amended by paragraph (5)), redesignated as section 8021, and amended—

(A) in subsection (a)—

(i) by striking out "Policy which" and inserting in lieu thereof "Policy. The Committee";

(ii) by inserting "and the mobilization preparedness" after "reserve components";

SEC. 531. CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

(a) AMENDMENTS TO TITLE 10.—(1) Sections 175(d) and 523(b)(1)(B) are amended by striking out "3033" and "8033" and inserting in lieu thereof "3021" and "8021", respectively.

(2) Section 641(1)(B) is amended by striking out "3015, 3019, 3033, 3496, 5251, 5252, 8019, 8033," and inserting in lieu thereof "3021, 3038, 3040, 3496, 5251, 5252, 8021, 8038,".

(b) AMENDMENTS TO TITLE 37.—Section 204((a)(2) of title 37, United States Code, is amended by striking out "3033" and "8033" and inserting in lieu thereof "3021" and "8021", respectively.

SEC. 532. TRANSITION

(a) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The provisions of subsections (c) and (d) of each of sections 3014, 5014, and 8014 of title 10, United States Code, as added by sections 501, 511, and 521, respectively, shall be implemented not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) REPORT.—Not later than 210 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of each military department shall submit to Congress a report on the actions that have been taken to implement the provisions referred to in subsection (a) with respect to that military department.

(c) WAIVER OF QUALIFICATIONS FOR APPOINTMENT AS SERVICE CHIEF.—(1) The President may waive, as provided in paragraph (2), the requirements provided for in section 3033(a)(2), 5033(a)(2), 5043(a)(2), and 8033(a)(2) of title 10, United States Code (as added or amended by sections 502, 512, 513, and 522, respectively).

(2) In exercising such waiver authority, the President may, in the case of any officer—

(A) waive the requirement under section 664 of such title (as added by section 401 of this Act) for the length of a joint duty assignment if the officer has served in such an assignment for not less than two years; and

(B) consider as a joint duty assignment any tour of duty served by the officer as a general or flag officer before the date of the enactment of this Act (or being served on the date of the enactment of this Act) that was considered to be a joint duty assignment or a joint equivalent assignment under regulations in effect at the time the assignment began.

(3) A waiver under paragraph (2) may not be made in the case of any officer more than four years after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(4) A waiver under this subsection may be made only on a case-by-case basis.

TITLE VI—MISCELLANEOUS

SEC. 601. REDUCTION IN PERSONNEL ASSIGNED TO MANAGEMENT HEADQUARTERS ACTIVITIES AND CERTAIN OTHER ACTIVITIES

(a) MILITARY DEPARTMENTS AND COMBATANT COMMANDS.—(1) Effective on October 1, 1988, the total number of members of the Armed Forces and civilian employees assigned or detailed to duty described in paragraph (2) may not exceed the number equal to 90 percent of the total number of such members and employees assigned or detailed to such duty on September 30, 1986.

(2) Duty referred to in paragraph (1) is permanent duty in the military departments and in the unified and specified combatant commands to perform management headquarters activities or management headquarters support activities.

(3) In computing and implementing the limitation in paragraph (1), the Secretary of Defense shall exclude members and employees who are assigned or detailed to permanent duty to perform management headquarters activities or management headquarters support activities in the following:

(A) The Office of the Secretary of the Army and the Army Staff.

(B) The Office of the Secretary of the Navy, the Office of the Chief of Naval Operations, and the Headquarters, Marine Corps.

(C) The Office of the Secretary of the Air Force and the Air Staff.

(D) The immediate headquarters staff of the commander of each unified or specified combatant command.

(4) If the Secretary of Defense applies any reduction in personnel required by the limitation in paragraph (1) to a unified or specified combatant command, the commander of that command, after consulting with his directly subordinate commanders, shall determine the manner in which the reduction shall be accomplished.

(b) DEFENSE AGENCIES AND DOD FIELD ACTIVITIES.—(1)(A) Not later than September 30, 1988, the Secretary of Defense shall reduce the total number of members of the Armed Forces and civilian employees assigned or detailed to permanent duty in the management headquarters activities and management headquarters support activities in the Defense Agencies and Department of Defense Field Activities by a number that is at least 5 percent of the total number of such members and employees assigned or detailed to such duty on September 30, 1986.

(B) Not later than September 30, 1989, the Secretary shall carry out an additional reduction in such members and employees of not less than 10 percent of the number of such members and employees assigned or detailed to such duty on September 30, 1988.

(C) If the number of members and employees reduced under subparagraph (A) or (B) is in excess of the reduction required to be made by that subparagraph, such excess number may be applied to the number required to be reduced under paragraph (2).

(2)(A) Not later than September 30, 1988, the Secretary of Defense shall reduce the total number of members of the Armed Forces and civilian employees assigned or detailed to permanent duty in the Defense Agencies and Department of Defense Field Activities, other than members and employees assigned or detailed to duty in management headquarters activities or management headquarters support activities, by a number that is at least 5 percent of the total number of such members and employees assigned or detailed to such duty on September 30, 1986.

(B) Not later than September 30, 1989, the Secretary shall carry out an additional reduction in such members and employees of not less than 5 percent of the number of such members and employees assigned or detailed to such duty on September 30, 1988.

(3) If after the date of the enactment of this Act and before October 1, 1988, the total number of members and employees described in paragraph (1)(A) or (2)(A) is reduced by a number that is in excess of the number required to be reduced under that paragraph, the Secretary may, in meeting the additional reduction required by paragraph (1)(B) or (2)(B), as the case may be, offset such additional reduction by that excess number.

(4) The National Security Agency shall be excluded in computing and making reductions under this subsection.

(c) PROHIBITION AGAINST CERTAIN ACTIONS TO ACHIEVE REDUCTIONS.—Compliance with the limitations and reductions required by subsections (a) and (b) may not be accomplished by recategorizing or redefining duties, functions, offices, or organizations.

(d) ALLOCATIONS TO BE MADE BY SECRETARY OF DEFENSE.—(1) The Secretary of Defense shall allocate the reductions required to comply with the limitations in subsections (a) and (b) in a manner consistent with the efficient operation of the Department of Defense. If the Secretary determines that national security requirements dictate that a reduction (or any portion of a reduction) required by subsection (b) not be made from the Defense Agencies and Department of Defense Field Activities, the Secretary may allocate such reduction (or any portion of such reduction) (A) to personnel assigned or detailed to permanent duty in management headquarters activities or management headquarters support activities, or (B) to personnel assigned or detailed to permanent duty in other than management headquarters activities or management headquarters support activities, as the case may be, of the Department of Defense other than the Defense Agencies and Department of Defense Field Activities.

(2) Among the actions that are taken to carry out the reductions required by subsections (a) and (b), the Secretary shall consolidate and eliminate unnecessary management headquarters activities and management headquarters support activities.

(e) TOTAL REDUCTIONS.—Reductions in personnel required to be made under this section are in addition to any reductions required to be made under other provisions of this Act or any amendment made by this Act.

(f) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section, the terms "management headquarters activities" and "management headquarters support activities" have the meanings given those terms in Department of Defense Directive 5100.73, entitled "Department of Defense Management Headquarters and Headquarters Support Activities" and dated January 7, 1985.

SEC. 602. REDUCTION OF REPORTING REQUIREMENTS

(a) POLICY.—It is the policy of Congress to reduce the administrative burden placed on the Department of Defense by requirements for reports, studies, and notifications to be submitted to Congress through the elimination of outdated, redundant, or otherwise unnecessary reporting requirements.

(b) COMPILATION OF EXISTING REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.—(1) The Secretary of Defense shall compile a list of all provisions of law in effect on the date of the enactment of this Act or enacted after such date and before February 1, 1987, that require the President, with respect to national defense functions of the Government, or any official or employee of the Department of Defense to submit a report, notification, or study to Congress or any committee of Congress. The preceding sentence does not apply to a requirement for a report, notification, or study to be submitted one time.

(2) The Secretary shall submit to Congress the list compiled under paragraph (1) not later than six months after the date of the enactment of this Act. The Secretary shall include with such list (with respect to each report, notification, or study shown on the list) the following:

(A) The date the requirement for such report, notification, or study was first imposed by law and the current legal citation for such requirement.

(B) The Secretary's assessment of the continuing utility of such requirement to Congress and to the executive branch.

(C) The Secretary's assessment of the administrative burden of such requirement and how such burden relates to the utility of the report, notification, or study.

(D) The Secretary's recommendation as to whether such requirement should be retained, modified, or repealed.

(3) The matter submitted under paragraph (2) shall also include—

(A) any recommendation of the Secretary for consolidation of different requirements for reports, notifications, and studies; and

(B) a draft of legislation to implement any changes in law recommended by the Secretary and to conform statutory provisions to the elimination of reporting requirements under subsection (c).

(c) TERMINATION OF REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.—Except as provided in subsection (d), effective on January 1, 1987, each provision of law that is contained in title 10, 32, or 37, United States Code, or in any Act authorizing appropriations or making appropriations for military functions of the Department of Defense (including military construction and military family housing functions) shall not be effective to the extent such provision requires the submission of a report, notification, or study.

(d) EXCEPTIONS.—Subsection (c) does not apply—

(1) to a requirement for a report, notification, or study to be submitted one time;

(2) to a provision of law enacted on or after the date of the enactment of this Act (including any provision enacted by this Act); or

(3) to a provision of law that requires the submission of the reports, notifications, and studies described in subsections (e) through (u).

(e) PROVISIONS OF TITLE 10.—The exception provided in subsection (d)(3) applies to the following reports, notifications, and studies required by title 10, United States Code:

(1) The annual report required by section 113(c) of such title (as redesignated by section 101(a)), relating to the accomplishments of the Department of Defense.

"7. Boards, Councils, and Committees. 171
"8. Defense Agencies and Department of Defense Field Activities..... 191".

(b) The tables of chapters at the beginning of subtitle A, and at the beginning of part IV of such subtitle, are amended by inserting after the item relating to chapter 143 the following new item:

"144. Oversight of Cost Growth in Major Programs..... 2431."

And the House agree to the same.

That the Senate recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate to the title of the bill and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the amendment of the House, insert the following: "An Act to reorganize the Department of Defense and strengthen civilian authority in the Department of Defense, to improve the military advice provided to the President, the National Security Council, and the Secretary of Defense, to place clear responsibility on the commanders of the unified and specified combatant commands for the accomplishment of missions assigned to those commands and ensure that the authority of those commanders is fully commensurate with that responsibility, to increase attention to the formulation of strategy and to contingency planning, to provide for more efficient use of defense resources, to improve joint officer management policies, otherwise to enhance the effectiveness of military operations and improve the management and administration of the Department of Defense, and for other purposes.".

And the House agree to the same.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 3622) to amend title 10, United States Code, to strengthen the position of Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, to provide for more efficient and effective operation of the Armed Forces, and for other purposes, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

The Senate amendment to the text of the bill struck out all of the House bill after the enacting clause and inserted a substitute text.

The House amendment to the Senate amendment to the text of the bill struck out all of the Senate amendment and inserted a substitute text.

The Senate recedes from its disagreement to the amendment of the House with an amendment which is a substitute for the Senate amendment and the House amendment thereto. The differences between the Senate amendment, the House amendment, and the substitute agreed to in conference are noted below, except for clerical corrections, conforming changes made necessary by agreements reached by the conferees, and minor drafting and clarifying changes.

BACKGROUND

On November 20, 1985, by a vote of 383-27, the House of Representatives passed H.R. 3622, the Joint Chiefs of Staff Reorganization Act of 1985. On April 14, 1986, the Senate Committee on Armed Services reported an original bill, S. 2295, the Department of Defense Reorganization Act of 1986. After Senate consideration, this bill was substituted for the text of H.R. 3622, and H.R. 3622 (as amended) passed the Senate by a vote of 95-0 on May 7, 1986. During consideration by the Senate, the short title of the bill was amended to become the Barry Goldwater Department of Defense Reorganization Act of 1986.

On July 21, 1986, the House Committee on Armed Services reported H.R. 4370, the Bill Nichols Department of Defense Reorganization Act of 1986. On August 5, 1986, H.R. 4370 was offered as an amendment to H.R. 4428, the Department of Defense Authorization Act, 1987 and was approved by the House of Representatives by a vote of 406-4.

On August 11, 1986, the House of Representatives amended the Bill Nichols Department of Defense Reorganization Act of 1986 to add the text of the original H.R. 3622 as title VI. The House of Representatives then substituted the text of this bill (as amended) for the text of the Senate amendment to H.R. 3622.

The conference committee convened on August 13, 1986 and completed action on September 11, 1986.

SUMMARY OF MAJOR PROVISIONS

The major provisions of the conference substitute amendment are summarized below.

TITLE I—DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE GENERALLY

1. Requires the Secretary of Defense to provide annually to Department of Defense (DoD) components written policy guidance for the preparation of the components' program and budget proposals.

2. Requires the Secretary of Defense to provide annually to the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff (JCS) written policy guidance for the preparation and review of contingency plans.

3. Specifies that the Under Secretary of Defense for Policy is to assist the Secretary of Defense in preparing guidance for contingency plans and in reviewing those plans.

4. Retains the existing number (11) of Assistant Secretaries of Defense but eliminates their statutory titles, except for the Assistant Secretaries of Defense for Reserve Affairs and for Command, Control, Communications, and Intelligence.

5. Requires the Secretary of Defense to keep the Secretaries of the Military Departments informed of military operations and DoD activities that directly affect their responsibilities.

6. Requires the Secretary of Defense to advise the President on the qualifications needed by DoD political appointees.

7. Repeals the Secretary of Defense's authority to reorganize DoD positions and activities that have been established in law.

8. Requires the Secretary of Defense, the JCS Chairman, the Secretaries of the Military Departments (jointly), and an independent contractor to conduct separate studies on the functions and organization of the Office of the Secretary of Defense (OSD).

TITLE II—MILITARY ADVICE AND COMMAND FUNCTIONS

PART A—JOINT CHIEFS OF STAFF

Advisory Role of the Chairman and Other JCS Members

1. Designates the JCS Chairman as the principal military adviser to the President, the National Security Council (NSC), and the Secretary of Defense.

2. Specifies that the other JCS members are military advisers to the President, the NSC, and the Secretary of Defense, as provided in items #5 and #6 below.

3. Requires the JCS Chairman, as appropriate, to consult with and seek the advice of the other JCS members and the unified and specified combatant commanders.

4. Requires the JCS Chairman, in presenting advice, to inform, as appropriate, the President, the NSC, or the Secretary of Defense of the range of military advice on a matter.

5. Requires the JCS Chairman to submit to the President, the NSC, and the Secretary of Defense any JCS member's opinion in disagreement or in addition to the Chairman's advice.

6. Requires JCS members, individually or collectively, to provide advice on a particular matter whenever the President, the NSC, or the Secretary of Defense request it.

Appointment and Duties of the JCS Chairman

7. Allows the President to reappoint the JCS Chairman to a third two-year term; specifies that if a JCS Chairman does not complete his term, his successor shall serve for the remainder of the unexpired term and then may be reappointed to two two-year terms; specifies that the JCS Chairman's term begins on October 1st of odd-numbered years.

8. Requires, subject to the President's waiver, that an officer have served as the JCS Vice Chairman, a Service Chief of Staff, or a unified or specified combatant commander in order to be appointed as the JCS Chairman.

9. Transfers responsibility for the duties currently performed by the corporate JCS to the Chairman; updates and expands those duties to specify the following new statutory duties for the JCS Chairman:

preparing fiscally constrained strategic plans;

performing net assessments;

providing for the preparation and review of contingency plans which conform to policy guidance from the President and the Secretary of Defense; advising the Secretary of Defense on the critical deficiencies and strengths in force capabilities that are identified during the preparation of contingency plans and their effect on meeting national security objectives; establishing and maintaining a uniform system of evaluating the readiness of the unified and specified combatant commands; advising the Secretary of Defense on the priorities of the unified and specified combatant commanders' requirements; advising the Secretary of Defense on the extent to which the Services' budget proposals conform with the priorities established in strategic plans and for the requirements of the unified and specified combatant commanders; submitting to the Secretary of Defense alternative budget proposals in order to achieve greater conformance with the priorities established in strategic plans and for the requirements of the unified and specified combatant commands; recommending to the Secretary of Defense a budget proposal for activities of each unified and specified combatant command; assessing military requirements for acquisition programs; and developing joint doctrine.

10. Requires the JCS Chairman to submit a report every 3 years to the Secretary of Defense on the roles and missions of the Armed Forces.

11. Authorizes the JCS Chairman, subject to the direction of the President, to attend and participate in National Security Council meetings.

Appointment and Duties of the JCS Vice Chairman

12. Creates the new position of Vice Chairman of the JCS with the rank of a four-star officer.

13. Designates the Vice Chairman as the second-ranking military officer just below the Chairman.

14. Requires the JCS Chairman and Vice Chairman to be from different Services.

15. Specifies that the Vice Chairman may serve up to three two-year terms.

16. Requires, subject to the President's waiver, that an officer have the joint specialty (established in title IV of the conference substitute amendment) and have served in at least one joint duty assignment as a general or flag officer in order to be appointed as the Vice Chairman.

17. Specifies that the Vice Chairman is to perform whatever duties are prescribed or delegated to him by the Chairman with the Secretary of Defense's approval.

18. Designates the Vice Chairman as the acting JCS Chairman in the absence or disability of the Chairman.

19. Authorizes the Vice Chairman to participate in all JCS meetings and to vote only when acting as Chairman.

Joint Staff

20. Specifies that the Joint Staff is to assist the JCS Chairman and, subject to the authority, direction, and control of the Chairman, the other JCS members and the Vice Chairman in carrying out their responsibilities.

21. Specifies that the JCS Chairman manages the Joint Staff; the Chairman is to prescribe the duties and staffing procedures of the Joint Staff.

PART B—COMBATANT COMMANDS (UNIFIED AND SPECIFIED COMMANDS)

1. Specifies that the operational chain of command, unless otherwise directed by the President, runs from the President to the Secretary of Defense to the unified and specified combatant commanders.

2. Authorizes the President to direct that communications between the President or the Secretary of Defense and the unified and specified combatant commanders run through the JCS Chairman.

3. Authorizes the President to assign duties to the JCS Chairman to assist the President and the Secretary of Defense in performing their command function.

4. Authorizes the Secretary of Defense to assign responsibility to the JCS Chairman for overseeing the activities of the unified and specified combatant commands.

5. Specifies that the JCS Chairman is to serve as the spokesman for the unified and specified combatant commanders, especially on their operational requirements.

6. Requires, subject to the President's waiver, that an officer have the joint specialty and have served in at least one joint duty assignment as a general or flag officer in order to be selected as a unified or specified combatant commander.

7. Specifies the command functions included in the authority, direction, and control of the unified or specified combatant commander over the commands and forces within his command.

8. Authorizes the Secretary of Defense to assign authority to the unified or specified combatant commander for those aspects of administration and support that the Secretary considers necessary to accomplish that commander's missions.

9. Specifies that commanders within a unified or specified combatant command are under the authority, direction, and control of the unified or specified combatant commander on all matters for which the unified or specified combatant commander has been assigned authority.

10. Requires subordinate elements of a unified or specified combatant command and other DoD elements to communicate with each other (on matters for which the unified or specified combatant commander has been assigned authority) in accordance with procedures established by the unified or specified combatant commander.

11. Authorizes the unified or specified combatant commander to direct subordinate elements within his command to advise him of all communications to and from other DoD elements (on matters for which he has not been assigned authority).

12. Requires that the selection of directly subordinate commanders and members of the unified or specified combatant command staff be made only with the unified or specified combatant commander's concurrence.

13. Requires the unified or specified combatant commander to evaluate the duty performance of directly subordinate commanders.

14. Authorizes the unified or specified combatant commander to suspend from duty and recommend the reassignment of any officer assigned to his command.

15. Requires the Secretary of Defense to include in the annual defense budget request a separate budget proposal for those activities of the unified and specified combatant commands that he determines to be appropriate.

TITLE III—DEFENSE AGENCIES AND DOD FIELD ACTIVITIES

1. Requires the Secretary of Defense to assign supervisory responsibility for each Defense Agency and Field Activity (except the Defense Intelligence Agency and the National Security Agency) to an OSD official or the JCS Chairman.

2. Directs the JCS Chairman to review and advise the Secretary of Defense on the readiness of certain Defense Agencies to carry out their wartime support missions.

3. Requires the JCS Chairman to provide for the participation of certain Defense Agencies in joint training exercises.

4. Requires the JCS Chairman to develop a readiness reporting system for certain Defense Agencies.

5. Directs the Secretary of Defense, the JCS Chairman, and the Secretaries of the Military Departments to conduct separate studies of the functions and organizational structure of the Defense Agencies and Field Activities.

6. Directs the Secretary of Defense to undertake, 2 years after the initial report required by item #5, a biennial review of the Defense Agencies and Field Activities.

7. Reduces the number of headquarters and non-headquarters personnel serving in the Defense Agencies and Field Activities; imposes a cap at the reduced levels of September 30, 1989.

TITLE IV—JOINT OFFICER PERSONNEL POLICY

1. Establishes an occupational category, referred to as the "joint specialty", for the management of officers who are trained in and oriented toward joint matters.

2. Provides that joint specialty officers shall be selected the Secretary of Defense from nominees submitted by the Secretaries of the Military Departments.

3. Requires that an officer may not be selected for the joint specialty until he completes a joint education program and a full joint duty tour.

4. Requires that 50 percent of joint duty positions in grades above captain/Navy lieutenant be filled by officers who have been nominated or selected for the joint specialty.

5. Directs the Secretary of Defense to designate at least 1,000 critical joint duty assignments that must always be filled by joint specialty officers.

6. Requires the Secretary of Defense to establish career guidelines for joint specialty officers.

7. Requires, subject to a waiver by the Secretary of Defense, that all officers promoted to general or flag rank must attend an education course (CAPSTONE) on working with the other armed forces.

8. Requires all joint specialty officers and a high proportion of other officers who graduate from a joint school to be assigned immediately to a joint duty position.

9. Prescribes, subject to a waiver by the Secretary of Defense, that joint duty tours shall be at least 3 years in length for general and flag officers and at least 3½ years in length for other officers.

10. Requires the Secretary of Defense to exclude joint training assignments and assignments within the Military Departments in the definition of "joint duty assignment".

11. Specifies that each promotion board, subject to a waiver for the Marine Corps, that will consider officers who have served in joint duty assignments shall include at least one joint duty officer designated by the JCS Chairman.

12. Establishes the following promotion review process for officers who are serving, or have served, in joint duty assignments:

requires the Secretary of Defense to furnish to the Military Departments guidelines to ensure that promotion boards give appropriate consideration to joint duty performance; directs the JCS Chairman to review promotion board reports before they are submitted to the Secretary of Defense; authorizes the Secretary of a Military Department, if the JCS Chairman determines that the promotion board acted contrary to the Secretary of Defense's guidelines, to return the report to the promotion board (or a subsequent promotion board) for further proceedings, convene a special promotion board, or take other appropriate action; directs the Secretary of Defense to take appropriate action to resolve any remaining disagreement between the Secretary of a Military Department and the JCS Chairman.

13. Requires the Secretary of Defense to ensure that the qualifications of officers assigned to joint duty assignments are such that certain promotion rates will be achieved.

14 Requires, subject to a waiver by the Secretary of Defense, that an officer may not be promoted to general or flag rank unless he has served in a joint duty assignment.

15. Requires the JCS Chairman to evaluate the joint duty performance of officers recommended for three- and four-star rank.

16. Requires the Secretary of Defense to advise the President on the qualifications needed by officers to serve in three- and four-star positions.

TITLE V—MILITARY DEPARTMENTS

1. Specifies the responsibilities of the Secretaries of the Military Departments to the Secretary of Defense.

2. Specifies that the functions of the Military Departments are to be carried out so as to fulfill the operational requirements of the unified and specified combatant commands.

3. Makes consistent the appointment and statutory descriptions of the roles and authorities of the Secretaries of the Military Departments, Chiefs of Staff and other officials and officers.

4. Retains the civilian Secretariat and the military headquarters staff as separate staffs in each Military Department.

5. Consolidates sole responsibility for the following functions in each Service Secretariat: acquisition, auditing, comptroller, information management, inspector general, legislative affairs, and public affairs, prohibits the establishment or designation of any office within the military headquarters staffs to conduct any of these functions.

6. Consolidates sole responsibility for research and development in each Service Secretariat but specifies that the Secretaries of the Military Departments may assign to the military headquarters staffs responsibility for those aspects of research and development that relate to military requirements and test and evaluation.

7. Directs the Secretaries of the Military Departments to prescribe the relationship of offices within the Secretariats responsible for these functions to the Chiefs of Staff and the military headquarters staffs.

8. Retains the existing number and statutory titles (including Manpower and Reserve Affairs) of the Services' Assistant Secretaries.

9. Limits each military headquarters staff to five Deputy Chiefs of Staff and three Assistant Chiefs of Staff.

10. Reduces the number of general and flag officers on each military headquarters staff by 15 percent by September 30, 1988.

11. Reduces the number of personnel serving in the Secretariat and military headquarters staff of each Military Department; imposes a cap on such personnel at the reduced levels of September 30, 1988.

12. Requires the Chiefs of Staff to inform the Secretary of their Military Department of military advice rendered by JCS members on matters affecting their Military Departments, to the extent that such action does not impair the independence of the Chiefs of Staff in the performance of their JCS duties.

13. Requires the Chiefs of Staff, subject to the authority, direction, and control of the Secretary of Defense, to keep the Secretary of their Military Department fully informed of significant military operations affecting the duties of the Secretary of their Military Department.

14. Makes the functional assignments of the Navy consistent with those of the other Services by removing the statutory assignment of certain roles and missions (naval reconnaissance, antisubmarine warfare, and protection of shipping).

TITLE VI—MISCELLANEOUS

1. Reduces the number of defense reports required by the Congress from the President and the Defense Department by about two-thirds of the total.

2. Reduces the number of personnel serving on the lower-level headquarters staffs of the Military Departments and the unified and specified combatant commands; imposes a cap on such personnel at the reduced levels of September 30, 1988.

3. Requires the President to submit an annual report to the Congress on the national security strategy of the United States.

DEFENSE DEPARTMENT PERSONNEL REDUCTIONS

The conference substitute amendment reduces the number of military and civilian personnel serving on Defense Department staffs in order to streamline the administrative and operational chains of command.

DOD Element	Total personnel (fiscal year 1986) [1]	Conference reduction
		Number	Percent/ years
Defense agencies/DOD field activities [2]	98,731	−9,788	−9.9/3
a. HQ element	(3,370)	(−489)	−14.5/3
b. Non-HQ element	(95,361)	(−9,299)	−9.75/3
2. Military departments	10,130	−1,520	−15.0/2
a. Secretariats	(1,544)	(−232)	−15.0/2
b. Military HQs	(8,586)	(−1,288)	(−15.0/2
3. Remaining DOD HQs [3]	52,050	−5,205	−10.0/2
Total	160,911	−16,513	−10.3

[1] All of these personnel figures include both military and civilian personnel.
[2] The conference substitute amendment authorizes the Secretary of Defense to allocate all or part of the reductions specified for the Defense Agencies and DoD Field Activities to other elements of the Defense Department.
[3] The conference substitute amendment exempts the immediate headquarters staffs of the Commanders-in-Chief of the unified and specified combatant commands.

TITLE I—DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE GENERALLY

SEC. 101. ORGANIZATION OF THE DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

Reorganization of Code

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 104) that would redesignate 16 existing sections of chapter 4 of title 10, United States Code. The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 110) that would reorganize chapter 4, transfer one existing section of chapter 4 to chapter 165, establish a new chapter 171, and transfer five existing sections of chapter 4 to chapter 171.

The House amendment contained no similar provisions.

The House recedes with amendments to:

(1) establish a new chapter 2 (Department of Defense) of title 10;

(2) transfer six existing sections of chapter 4 to chapter 2;

(3) transfer four existing sections of chapter 4 to chapter 3;

(4) establish a new chapter 144 (Oversight of Cost Growth in Major Programs);

(5) transfer four existing sections of chapter 4 to chapter 144;

(6) revise the heading of chapter 3 (General Powers and Functions);

(7) revise the heading of chapter 4 (Office of the Secretary of Defense);

(8) revise existing section 138; and

(9) reorganize chapter 4.

The resulting reorganization of chapters 2, 3, 4, and 144 (including the repeal of section 124 as provided in section 211 of the conference substitute amendment) are shown below with existing section numbers shown in brackets after the new section numbers.

2433. [139b.] Unit cost reports.
2434. [139c.] Independent cost estimates.

Composition of the Department of Defense

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 102) to prescribe the composition of the Department of Defense.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment to require the President to notify the Congress within 60 days of establishing or designating an office, agency, activity, or command in the Department of Defense of a kind other than those described in section 111 of title 10 (as redesignated by section 101(a) and amended by section 101(b) of the conference substitute amendment). This requirement would not apply to any office, agency, activity, or command that would be, after establishment or designation, under the control or supervision of any element described in section 111 of title 10.

SEC. 102. POWERS AND DUTIES OF THE SECRETARY OF DEFENSE

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 103) that would specify the following three additional duties for the Secretary of Defense:

(1) to inform the President, whenever a vacancy in a political position in the Department of Defense occurs, of the qualifications needed by an appointee to carry out effectively the duties and responsibilities of that position;

(2) to provide annually to the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff (JCS) written policy guidance for the preparation and review of contingency plans; and

(3) to keep the Secretaries of the Military Departments informed on military operations and activities of the Department of Defense that directly affect their responsibilities.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with two amendments. First, the Secretary of Defense would be required to include in his guidance for the preparation and review of contingency plans the specific force levels and specific supporting resource levels projected to be available for the period of time for which the contingency plans are to be effective. The second amendment would require the Secretary of Defense, with the advice and assistance of the JCS Chairman, to provide annually to the heads of Department of Defense components written policy guidance for the preparation and review of the program recommendations and budget proposals of their respective components.

With respect to the additional duty assigned to the Secretary of Defense concerning the qualifications of political appointees, the conferees remain concerned about the lack of sufficient experience and expertise by persons appointed to political positions in the Department of Defense. In a field as complex as national defense, inexperienced political appointees are a fundamental weakness in achieving sound and effective management. Although the executive branch can most effectively solve this problem through its selection process, the Senate conferees agreed to establish and exercise more rigorous confirmation standards for persons nominated for these political positions.

Section 113(b) of title 10 (as redesignated by section 101 of the conference substitute amendment) provides that:

The Secretary [of Defense] is the principal assistant to the President in all matters relating to the Department of Defense. Subject to the direction of the President and to this title and section 2 of the National Security Act of 1947 (50 U.S.C. 401), he has authority, direction, and control over the Department of Defense.

This current provision ensures that the Secretary has full power over every facet of the Department of Defense. The Secretary has sole and ultimate power within the Department of Defense on any matter on which the Secretary chooses to act. Provisions of the conference substitute amendment refer to various activities as being subject to the powers of the Secretary of Defense, using the phrase "subject to the authority, direction, and control of the Secretary of Defense". The conferees agreed that use of this phrase is solely for purposes of emphasis and that the absence of this phrase elsewhere in the conference substitute amendment is not to be construed as limiting the power of the Secretary under section 113(b) to exercise authority, direction, and control over an activity. Likewise, the conferees agreed that provisions of the conference substitute amendment concerning the decisionmaking process or requiring the Secretary to act with the advice or assistance of another officer or official do not limit the power or responsibility of the Secretary of Defense in the exercise of his authority, direction, and control.

SEC. 103. MODIFICATION OF AUTHORITY OF SECRETARY OF DEFENSE TO REORGANIZE THE DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 101) that would repeal the authority of the Secretary of Defense to change functions, powers, and duties vested by law in the Department of Defense or in an officer, official, or agency of the Department of Defense.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

SEC. 104. OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF DEFENSE

Senate amendment contained a provision (section 105) that would establish in law the Office of the Secretary of Defense, specify its function and composition, and reenact section 718 and section 136(d) of title 10 as part of this provision.

House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with two amendments. First, the function of the Office of the Secretary of Defense would be broadened from "to assist the Secretary of Defense in carrying out his duties and responsibilities" to include "and to carry out such other duties as may be prescribed by law." The conferees determined that including the additional phrase reflects more accurately the function of the Office of the Secretary of Defense, especially in light of the broad responsibilities assigned to the Inspector General of the Department of Defense by the Inspector General Act of 1978 (5 U.S.C. App. 3).

The second amendment relates to existing section 718 of title 10 which reads: 13

Officers of the armed forces may be detailed for duty as assistants or personal aides to the Secretary of Defense. However, the Secretary may not establish a military staff other than that [the Joint Chiefs of Staff] established by section 141(a) of this title.

The conferees determined that both sentences of section 718 were ambiguous. To provide necessary clarification, the conferees agreed that section 131(c) of title 10 (as added by section 104 of the conference substitute amendment) should specify that military officers may be assigned or detailed to permanent duty in the Office of the Secretary of Defense and that the Secretary may not establish a military staff in the Office of the Secretary of Defense.

SEC. 105. UNDER SECRETARY FOR POLICY AND DIRECTOR OF DEFENSE RESEARCH AND ENGINEERING

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 106) that would repeal the current prohibition against a person being appointed Under Secretary of Defense for Policy within 10 years after his relief from active duty as a commissioned officer of a regular component of an Armed Force.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes. The conferees determined that such a prohibition was an appropriate civilian control mechanism for this important policymaking position. In a related action, the conferees determined to specify a duty for the Under Secretary of Defense for Policy to assist the Secretary of Defense in preparing written policy guidance for the preparation and review of contingency plans and in reviewing such plans. This action by the conference committee reflected continuing concern over the absence of effective civilian oversight of the contingency planning process. The assignment of this duty to the Under Secretary of Defense for Policy is connected to the additional duty regarding guidance for contingency plans that would be assigned to the Secretary of Defense by subsection (g)(2) of section 113 of title 10 (as added by section 102 of the conference substitute amendment).

The Military Retirement Reform Act of 1986 (Public Law 99-348) created the position of Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition and established the position of Director of Defense Research and Engineering in the same section (section 135) of title 10 in which the position of Under Secretary of Defense for Policy is established. The conferees agreed that the Director of Defense Research and Engineering and the Under Secretary of Defense for Policy should be established in separate sections of title 10. Section 105 of the conference substitute amendment would merely make appropriate technical changes to establish the Under Secretary of Defense for Policy and the Director of Defense Research and Engineering in section 134 and section 135 of title 10, respectively.

The conferees agreed that none of the actions of the conference committee prejudge consideration of the duties of the new Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition as contained in the versions of the Department of Defense Authorization Act for fiscal year 1987 passed by the Senate on August 9, 1986 (S. 2638) and by the House of Representatives on August 15, 1986 (H.R. 4428).

SEC. 106. ASSISTANT SECRETARIES OF DEFENSE

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 107) that would repeal the specification in law of the titles and duties of the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Health Affairs; the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Manpower and Logistics; the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Command, Control, Communications, and Intelligence; and the Assistant Secretary of Defense (Comptroller).

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment to retain the statutory specification of the title and duties of the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Command, Control, Communications, and Intelligence. The conferees agreed that this action by the conference committee does not prejudge the statutory specification of the title and duties of an Assistant Secretary of Defense for Special Operations and Low Intensity Conflict, as would be provided by the Department of Defense Authorization Bill for fiscal year 1987 passed by the Senate on August 9, 1986 (S. 2638).

SEC. 107. COMPTROLLER OF THE DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 108) that would establish the position of Comptroller of the Department of Defense and would assign to that position the same duties now assigned to the Assistant Secretary of Defense (Comptroller).

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment to require that the Comptroller of the Department of Defense be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The conferees agreed that the important duties of the Comptroller justify these appointment requirements. While agreeing to establish this position in law, the conferees intend that the President may, in his discretion, designate the Comptroller of the Department of Defense as an Assistant Secretary of Defense.

SEC. 108. INSPECTOR GENERAL OF THE DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 109) that would recognize in title 10, by a cross reference to the Inspector General Act of 1978 (5 U.S.C. App. 3), the appointment and duties of the Inspector General of the Department of Defense.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

SEC. 109. MANAGEMENT STUDIES OF OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY OF DEFENSE

The House amendment contained a provision (section 502) that would require studies of the functions and organization of the Office of the Secretary of Defense by the Secretary of Defense, the Secretary of each Military Department, the JCS Chairman, and an independent contractor.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with amendments to require the Secretaries of the Military Departments to conduct a joint study and to revise the matters to be considered by each study. The conferees agreed that the Deputy Secretary of Defense should be responsible for supervising the study by an independent contractor of the Office of the Secretary of Defense.

SEC. 110. TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

Section 110 of the conference substitute amendment would amend title 10 to make appropriate conforming and technical changes to implement the actions of the conference committee relating to title I of the conference substitute amendment.

71-059 O-87-32 (Pt. 16)

TITLE II—MILITARY ADVICE AND COMMAND FUNCTIONS

PART A—JOINT CHIEFS OF STAFF

SEC. 201. REVISED FUNCTIONS OF CHAIRMAN; ESTABLISHMENT OF VICE CHAIRMAN

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 111) that would make several changes in chapter 5 (Joint Chiefs of Staff) of title 10, United States Code.

The House amendment contained several provisions (sections 102 and sections 601-610) that would make similar changes in chapter 5 of title 10.

Sec. 151. Joint Chiefs of Staff: composition; functions

Composition of the Joint Chiefs of Staff

The House amendment contained a provision (section 601) that would specify that the Joint Chiefs of Staff (JCS) are "headed" by the Chairman.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 111) that would designate the Vice Chairman as a member of the JCS.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 606) that would designate the Deputy Chairman as the Director of the Joint Staff.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to delete the designation of the Vice Chairman as the Director of the Joint Staff. Although the Vice Chairman will not be a member of the JCS, the conferees expect him to make an extremely important contribution to the work of the Chairman and the other JCS members. Under section 154(g) of title 10 (as amended by section 201 of the conference substitute amendment), the Vice Chairman outranks all other officers of the Armed Forces except the Chairman. In addition, section 154(d) of title 10 (as amended by section 201 of the conference substitute amendment) assigns the Vice Chairman the duty to act as the Chairman in the absence or disability of the Chairman or in the case of a vacancy in the office of Chairman. The conferees expect that when the Vice Chairman is acting for the Chairman, he shall be considered a full member of the JCS with the duties, authority, responsibilities, and status of the Chairman.

JCS Members as Military Advisers

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 111) that would designate the members of the JCS as military advisers to the President, the National Security Council, and the Secretary of Defense, "as specified in this section" (section 151 of title 10, as amended by section 111 of the Senate amendment).

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment to clarify that the phrase "as specified in this section" refers to subsections (d) and (e) of section 151 of title 10, as amended by section 201 of the conference substitute amendment.

JCS as Military Staff to Secretary of Defense

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 111) that would designate the Joint Chiefs of Staff, assisted by the Joint Staff, as the immediate military staff of the Secretary of Defense.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Consultative Duties of the Chairman

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 111) that would require the JCS Chairman to take the following actions in the course of performing his duties: to convene regular JCS meetings; unless impracticable, to consult with and seek the advice of the other JCS members; and, when appropriate, to consult with and seek the advice of the unified and specified combatant commanders.

The House amendment contained a similar provision (section 601) that would require the JCS Chairman to perform his duties in consultation, as appropriate, with the other JCS members and with the unified and specified combatant commanders.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to require the Chairman to convene regular JCS meetings. The conferees intend that the Chairman shall consult, unless impracticable, with the other JCS members on issues which he judges to be of major importance. On matters that the Chairman considers to be of lesser significance, the conferees expect him to consult, when he considers appropriate, with the other members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Chairman to Present Range of Advice

The House amendment contained a provision (section 606) that would amend existing section 142(b)(3) of title 10 to require the JCS Chairman to inform the Secretary of Defense, and, when the President or the Secretary of Defense considers it appropriate, the President, of the military advice of the JCS as a body on those matters for which advice is requested by the President or the Secretary of Defense (including advice on matters on which JCS members have not agreed).

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with two amendments. First, the Chairman is required, as he considers appropriate, to inform the President, the National Security Council, or the Secretary of Defense of the range of military advice and opinion on a matter for which advice has been requested. Second, the relationship of this provision to section 151(d) of title 10 (as amended by section 201 of the conference substitute amendment) is clarified. The conferees do not intend to alter the responsibility of the Chairman to submit other JCS members' dissenting views (under section 151(d) of title 10, as amended by section 201 of the conference substitute amendment) by giving the Chairman discretion in informing senior civilian officials of the range of military advice.

Dissenting Views of JCS Members

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 111) that would authorize any JCS member to submit advice in disagreement or in addition to the advice provided by the Chairman to the President, the National Security Council (NSC), or the Secretary of Defense. If a member submits such advice, the Chairman would be required to present that advice at the same time he presented his own advice to the President, the NSC, or the Secretary of Defense.

The House amendment contained a similar provision (section 606).

The House recedes with an amendment to ensure that the dissenting views of other JCS members will not unduly delay the presentation of the Chairman's advice.

JCS Members' Advice Upon Request

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 111) that would direct JCS members (other than the Chairman), in their capacity as military advisers, to provide advice on a particular matter in response to a request from the President, the National Security Council, or the Secretary of Defense.

The House amendment contained a similar provision (section 606) that would direct the JCS, as a body, to provide advice to the President and the Secretary of Defense on matters for which such advice was requested.

The House recedes with an amendment to require the members of the JCS, individually or collectively, in their capacity as military advisers, to provide advice to the President, the NSC, or the Secretary of Defense on a particular matter whenever it is requested.

Sec. 152. Chairman: appointment; rank

Term of the JCS Chairman

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 111) that would authorize the President to appoint the JCS Chairman to three 2-year terms.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 605) that would authorize the President to appoint the JCS Chairman to two 4-year terms.

The House recedes.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 111) that would specify that the term of the JCS Chairman would expire not later than 6 months after the beginning of a new Presidency. The purpose of this requirement was to give a newly elected President an automatic opportunity to retain or release the military officer who would serve as his principal military adviser.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 605) that would specify that, if a JCS Chairman did not complete his term, his successor would serve only for the remainder of the unexpired term.

The Senate recedes with the following two amendments: to specify that the Chairman's term will begin on October 1st of odd-numbered years, and to clarify that a successor to a Chairman who failed to complete his term may be reappointed to two 2-year terms.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 605) that would specify that the first appointment of a JCS Chairman made on or after the date of enactment of the House amendment would be for a term ending on June 30, 1990.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Combined Service as Chairman and Vice Chairman

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 111) that would limit to 6 years the combined length of time that a military officer could serve as JCS Chairman and Vice Chairman. The President would be authorized to extend this limitation to 8 years if he determined such action was in the national interest.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Qualifications for Appointment as JCS Chairman

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 111) that would require, subject to a waiver by the President, that JCS members have served in at least one joint duty position for a substantial period of time before their assignment to the JCS.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 301) that would require that, whenever practicable, an officer recommended to the President for appointment as JCS Chairman have served as a Chief of Service or as a unified or specified combatant commander.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to require, subject to a waiver by the President, that the Chairman have served as the Vice Chairman, a Service Chief, or a unified or specified combatant commander before his appointment.

Grade of the JCS Chairman

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 111) that would specify that the JCS Chairman, while so serving, holds the grade of general or admiral.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Sec. 153. Chairman: functions

Duties of the JCS Chairman

Both the Senate and House amendments would make several changes in the duties assigned to the Joint Chiefs of Staff and would transfer responsibility for those duties, as amended, to the JCS Chairman.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 111) that would amend existing section 141(c)(1) of title 10 to require the JCS Chairman to prepare strategic plans to provide for the strategic direction of the armed forces, including plans which conform with resource levels projected by the Secretary of Defense.

The House amendment contained no similar provision. Therefore, it would assign to the Chairman the duty prescribed by existing section 141(c)(1) of title 10 to prepare strategic plans and provide for the strategic direction of the armed forces.

The House recedes with an amendment to provide that the JCS Chairman shall assist the President and the Secretary of Defense in providing for the strategic direction of the armed forces.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 111) that would amend existing section 141(c)(2) of title 10 to clarify that the purpose of the joint logistic and mobility plans prepared by the JCS Chairman would be to support contingency plans.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment to broaden the purpose to include strategic plans as well as contingency plans.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 102) that would require the JCS Chairman to perform net assessments.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes. The conferees agreed to direct that, in conducting net assessments, the JCS Chairman shall include the wartime capabilities of the U.S. Coast Guard.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 111) that would require the JCS Chairman to provide for the preparation and review of contingency plans which conform to policy guidance from the President and the Secretary of Defense.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 111) that would require the JCS Chairman to advise the Secretary of Defense on critical deficiencies and strengths in force capabilities which are identified during the preparation and review of contingency plans. The Chairman would then be required to assess the effect of such deficiencies and strengths on meeting national security objectives and on strategic plans.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 102) that would require the JCS Chairman to establish and maintain a uniform system of evaluating the preparedness of the unified and specified combatant commands.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 111) that would require the JCS Chairman to advise the Secretary of Defense on the extent to which the annual program recommendations and budget proposals of components of the Defense Department conform with strategic priorities and the unified and specified combatant commanders' operational requirements.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 102) that would specify two duties for the JCS Chairman. First, the Chairman would submit to the Secretary of Defense an annual recommendation for the broad allocation of defense resources based upon the Secretary's guidance, the unified and specified combatant commanders' recommendations, and the recommendations of other Defense Department components.

Second, the Chairman would recommend to the Secretary of Defense the changes that would be necessary to make the program objectives and budget proposals of the Military Departments and the combat support agencies consistent with the Chairman's recommendation for the broad allocation of defense resources.

The House recedes with two amendments. First, the Chairman is required to advise the Secretary of Defense on the priorities of the requirements identified by the unified and specified combatant commanders.

Second, the Chairman is required to submit to the Secretary of Defense alternative program recommendations and budget proposals, within projected resource levels and guidance provided by the Secretary, in order to achieve greater conformance with the priorities established in strategic plans and with the priorities established for the unified and specified combatant commanders' requirements.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 102) that would require the JCS Chairman to recommend to the Secretary of Defense a budget for each unified and specified combatant command.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 111) that would require the JCS Chairman to assess joint military requirements for defense acquisition programs.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment to broaden the duty to encompass all military requirements. Despite the broad nature of this responsibility, the conferees strongly believe that the Chairman should not be required to spend too much time and energy on the acquisition of defense systems. The Chairman's unique role in planning and operational matters is far too important to allow him to be preoccupied with acquisition issues. The conferees' only purpose in broadening his duty to assess military requirements is to give the Chairman and the Secretary of Defense flexibility in delineating the Chairman's role in the acquisition process.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 102) that would require the JCS Chairman to monitor the extent to which each Military Department provided officers for joint duty assignments.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with amendments to clarify the information required on each Military Department's share of joint duty assignments and to transfer this provision to section 667 of title 10, as added by section 401 of the conference substitute amendment.

Report on the Services' Roles and Missions

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 111) that would require the JCS Chairman to submit a periodic report to the Secretary of Defense on the assignment of functions or roles and missions to the four military Services.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Sec. 154. Vice Chairman

Title of the Vice Chairman

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 111) that would establish the position of Vice Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 606) that would establish the position of Deputy Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

The House recedes.

Term of the Vice Chairman

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 111) that would authorize the President to appoint the Vice Chairman to three 2-year terms.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 606) that would authorize the President to appoint the Deputy Chairman to two 4-year terms.

The House recedes.

Duties of the Vice Chairman

The Senate and House amendments contained identical provisions (sections 111 and 606, respectively) that would require the Vice Chairman to perform the duties delegated by the Chairman with the approval of the Secretary of Defense.

Like the duties of other deputy officials and officers in the Defense Department, those of the Vice Chairman would not be specified by title 10. Subject to the approval of the Secretary of Defense, the Chairman would enjoy substantial flexibility in determining the duties of the Vice Chairman.

Despite this broad grant of authority, the conferees strongly believe that the Vice Chairman, like the Chairman, should not be required to participate too deeply in the defense acquisition process. Instead, the Vice Chairman should assist the Chairman in carrying out the significant responsibilities he already bears as well as the many new ones assigned by this conference substitute amendment. In particular, the Chairman performs unique planning and advisory duties (including representing the interests of the unified and specified combatant commanders) that would greatly benefit from the assistance of the Vice Chairman.

Qualifications for Appointment as Vice Chairman

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 111) that would require, subject to a waiver by the President, that JCS members (including the Vice Chairman) have served in at least one joint duty position for a substantial period of time before their assignment to the JCS.

The House amendment contained no similar provision for the Vice Chairman.

The House recedes with an amendment to require, subject to a waiver by the President, that the Vice Chairman have the joint specialty (established in title IV of the conference substitute amendment) and have served in at least one joint duty assignment as a general or flag officer before his appointment. In addition, the conferees provided, in section 204 of the conference substitute amendment, a transition provision for use by the President before full application of these new requirements.

Vice Chairman as the Acting Chairman

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 111) that would provide that the Vice Chairman, unless otherwise directed by the President or Secretary of Defense, would act for the Chairman when there was a vacancy in the office of Chairman or in the absence or disability of the Chairman.

The House amendment contained an identical provision (section 606), except that it did not include authority for the President or Secretary of Defense to direct that the Vice Chairman would not act for the Chairman in his absence.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to direct the President to designate a JCS member to act for the Chairman if both the Chairman and Vice Chairman should be absent or disabled.

Sec. 155. Joint Staff

Assistance to the Chairman and Other JCS Members

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 111) that would specify that, subject to the authority, direction, and control of the Chairman, the Joint Staff would assist the Chairman and the other JCS members in carrying out their responsibilities.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment to specify that the Joint Staff is to assist the Vice Chairman, as well as the Chairman and the other JCS members, in carrying out his responsibilities.

Selection of the Director of the Joint Staff

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 111) that would authorize the JCS Chairman to select the Director of the Joint Staff.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Management of the Joint Staff

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 111) that would specify that the JCS Chairman would manage the Joint Staff and its Director.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Duties and Staffing Procedures of the Joint Staff

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 111) that would require the Joint Staff to perform the duties prescribed by the JCS Chairman under such procedures as he directed.

The House amendment contained a provision that would require the Joint Staff to perform the duties prescribed by the Chairman.

The House recedes.

Operation of the Joint Staff

The House amendment contained a provision (section 607) that would require the Secretary of Defense to ensure that the Joint Staff was independently organized and operated so that it could support the JCS Chairman in meeting the congressional purpose set forth in the National Security Act of 1947.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Organization of the Joint Staff Along Conventional Staff Lines

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 111) that would amend existing section 143(d) of title 10 to authorize the Joint Staff to be organized and operated along conventional staff lines to support the JCS Chairman and the other JCS members in discharging their responsibilities.

The House amendment contained an identical provision (section 607), except that it referred only to the Chairman (and not to the other JCS members as well).

The Senate recedes with an amendment to delete the reference to the support that the Joint Staff is to provide the Chairman. The conferees determined that this provision need not specify that the Joint Staff is to support the Chairman or the other JCS members because that function is already specified in section 155(a) of title 10 (as amended by section 201 of the conference substitute amendment). Instead, the primary purpose of this provision is to prohibit the Joint Staff from exercising executive authority and from being organized and operated as a General Staff. These prohibitions are fully preserved in the conferees' action.

Authority to Suspend Joint Staff Officers

As part of the action of the conference committee on part B of title II of the conference substitute amendment, the conferees agreed to authorize the commander of a unified or specified combatant command to suspend from duty and recommend the reassignment of any officer within his command. The conferees believe that the JCS Chairman should be able to exercise similar authority over Joint Staff officers.

Therefore, the conferees agreed to clarify existing section 143(a)(3) of title 10 to authorize the Chairman to suspend from duty and recommend the reassignment of any officer assigned to the Joint Staff. However, the conferees agreed that procedures required by this provision pertain solely to the relationships between the Chairman and the Military Department concerned with respect to service by an officer on the Joint Staff. The conferees agreed that nothing in this provision confers on an officer assigned to the Joint Staff any procedural rights concerning suspension from duty or reassignment.

Organization of the Joint Staff to Perform Net Assessments

The House amendment contained a provision (section 102) that would require the JCS Chairman to ensure that the Joint Staff was organized and staffed so as to enable the Chairman to perform net assessments.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes. The conferees did not believe it was necessary to specify in statute that the JCS Chairman should ensure that the Joint Staff is capable of assisting him in performing net assessments. Section 201 of the conference substitute amendment includes the performance of net assessments among the duties of the Chairman. Therefore, the conferees fully expect the Chairman to organize and operate the Joint Staff so that it is able to assist him in carrying out this important responsibility.

Limitation on Size of Joint Staff

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 111) that would impose, as of October 1, 1988, a limitation of 1,617 on the number of civilian and military personnel serving on the Joint Staff. The Joint Staff would be defined to include all civilian and military personnel assigned or detailed to permanent duty to assist the JCS Chairman and Vice Chairman in carrying out their responsibilities and to assist the other JCS members in carrying out their JCS responsibilities.

The House amendment contained no similar provision. Therefore, it would continue the limitation specified in existing section 143(a)(1) of title 10 of 400 officers on the size of the Joint Staff (without defining the Joint Staff).

The House recedes with the following two amendments: to set the limitation at 1,627 and to clarify the definition of the Joint Staff to include only those personnel assigned or detailed to permanent duty in the executive part of the Defense Department to perform the Joint Staff functions and duties prescribed under sections 155 (a) and (c) of title 10, as amended by section 201 of the conference substitute amendment.

Report on Further Changes

The House amendment contained a provision (section 610) that would require the Secretary of Defense to submit a report to the Congress on the manner in which several changes to the JCS system, the unified and specified combatant commands, and the management of joint duty officers could be implemented.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes. Most of the matters that would have been included in the Secretary's report are addressed elsewhere in the conference substitute amendment.

SEC. 203. PARTICIPATION IN NATIONAL SECURITY COUNCIL MEETINGS

The House amendment contained a provision (section 609) that would require the JCS Chairman, subject to the direction of the President, to attend meetings of the National Security Council (NSC) and would authorize the Chairman, as directed by the President, to participate in its deliberations.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to authorize the Chairman, in his role as the principal military adviser to the NSC and subject to the direction of the President, to attend and participate in NSC meetings.

SEC. 204. TRANSITION

Preparedness Evaluation System

As part of the action of the conference committee on section 153(a)(3)(D) of title 10 (as added by section 201 of the conference substitute amendment), the conferees agreed to require that the uniform system of evaluating the preparedness of the unified and specified combatant commands be established not later than 1 year after the date of enactment.

Date for First Report on Services' Roles and Missions

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 111) that would require the Chairman to submit his first report on the military Services' roles and missions not later than 1 year after the date of enactment.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment to require the first report to be submitted 2 years after the date of enactment.

Waiver of Qualifications for Appointment as Vice Chairman

As part of the action of the conference committee on section 154(b) of title 10 (as added by section 201 of the conference substitute amendment), the conferees agreed to authorize the President to waive the qualifications for appointment as the JCS Vice Chairman during a transition period before full application of the requirements of section 154(b). Under section 204(c) of the conference substitute amendment, the President would be authorized to waive:

(1) for a 2-year period after enactment, the requirement that the Vice Chairman have the joint specialty;

(2) for a 4-year period after enactment, the requirement that the Vice Chairman have served in a joint duty assignment for 3 years if the Vice Chairman has served in such an assignment for not less than 2 years; and

(3) for a 4-year period after enactment, the requirement that the Vice Chairman have served in a joint duty assignment as a general or flag officer if the Vice Chairman served as a general or flag officer in an assignment that was considered a joint duty assignment or a joint equivalent assignment under regulations in effect at the time the assignment began.

Although section 154(b)(2) of title 10 (as added by section 201 of the conference substitute amendment) provides the President with authority to waive the requirements for appointment as the Vice Chairman, the conferees agreed to provide a specific waiver for a limited transition period so that the exercise of a Presidential waiver, as would be required in the immediate future, would not become standard practice. After the transition period, the conferees expect the President to exercise his permanent waiver authority only in an extremely limited number of cases and only for officers of exceptional talent who may fail to meet the specified criteria.

PART B—COMBATANT COMMANDS

SEC. 211. ESTABLISHMENT OF COMBATANT COMMANDS AND AUTHORITY OF COMMANDERS

Sec. 161. Combatant commands: establishment

Review of Combatant Command Structure

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 112) that would require the President to review periodically, but not less often than every 2 years, the missions, tasks, responsibilities (including geographic boundaries), and force structure of each unified and specified combatant command and to make whatever revisions are necessary to respond to changing conditions.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 101) that would require the JCS Chairman periodically (not less often than every other year) to review the overall structure of the combatant commands and to recommend to the President, through the Secretary of Defense, any changes that the Chairman considers necessary or appropriate.

The Senate recedes.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 112) that would require the President to notify Congress, except during time of hostilities, at least 60 days before establishing a new combatant command or before significantly revising the missions, tasks, responsibilities, or force structure of an existing combatant command.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 101) that would require the President to inform Congress promptly of any action taken in response to recommendations made by the Chairman.

The House recedes with an amendment to require the Presidential notification at least 60 days after establishing a new combatant command or after significantly revising the missions, responsibilities, or force structure of an existing combatant command.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 112) that would define four terms for chapter 6 of title 10: unified combatant command, specified combatant command, combatant command, and combatant forces.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment to delete the definition of the term "combatant force" which is not used in chapter 6 of title 10 (as provided by the conference substitute amendment).

Social Combatant Commands

The House amendment contained a provision (section 101) that would authorize the President to establish special combatant commands if the President determined that the situation warranted such a force to perform a specific military mission. This provision would also require the President to prescribe the shortest practicable chain of command for each force deployed consistent with proper supervision and support.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes. The conferees agreed that the President already has authority, as Commander in Chief, to establish such special combatant commands and to prescribe their chains of command. The conferees do believe that considerable study of how the President can more effectively use such authority in crises is needed. The role of the President and the Secretary of Defense in crises during the last 30 years has been inconsistent. In some instances, the President and the Secretary have failed to take prompt action to ensure the effective organization, employment, direction, and control of U.S. military forces committed to combat operations. As a consequence, streamlined command arrangements and other necessary adjustments tailored to the situation have not been established. In other instances, the President and the Secretary have been over-involved and have engaged in unnecessary micro-management of tactical operations.

The conferees agreed that there is a genuine requirement for effective Presidential control in efforts to manage certain crises, especially those with the potential for superpower confrontation. In today's international security environment, in which both the United States and the Soviet Union possess substantial nuclear arsenals and in which the two superpowers are locked in competition either directly or indirectly in numerous world areas, the need to manage and terminate confrontations before they escalate to war has become increasingly important.

To begin the necessary study of how the President can more effectively manage crises, the conferees agreed to direct that the initial review of the combatant commands (Unified Command Plan), as required by section 212 of the conference substitute amendment, should develop procedures by which the President could systematize his evaluation of command arrangements, including the chain of command. Such procedures should produce more effective responses to, and management of, any crisis, however unique, that may occur.

Sec. 162. Combatant commands: assigned forces; chain of command

Assignment of Forces

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 112) that would require all combatant forces of the Military Departments to be assigned to combatant commands, unless otherwise directed by the Secretary of Defense. This provision would also require each Secretary of a Military Department, with the approval of the Secretary of Defense and consistent with the force structure prescribed by the President for each combatant command, to assign combatant forces of his Military Department to combatant commands.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 101) that would require the Secretaries of the Military Departments to assign all forces under their jurisdiction, except for forces assigned to the recruiting, organizing, training, or supplying of the armed forces, to combatant commands. This provision would also require such assignments to be made as directed by the Secretary of Defense, including direction as to the command to which forces are to be assigned. In addition, this provision would specify that a force not assigned to a combatant command remains in the Military Department concerned.

The Senate recedes with amendments to: (1) require the Secretary of Defense to ensure that assignments of forces to combatant commands are consistent with the force structure prescribed by the President; (2) provide that forces required to be assigned to combatant commands do not include forces assigned to carry out the functions of the Secretaries of the Military Departments; and (3) delete the specification that a force not assigned to a combatant command remains in the Military Department concerned. The conferees agreed to the third amendment because this specification was unnecessary.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 101) that would require the commanders of combatant commands (hereafter referred to as "combatant commanders") and the Secretaries of the Military Departments, as directed by the Secretary of Defense, to assign forces under their jurisdiction to special combatant commands.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 101) that would provide, unless otherwise directed by the Secretary of Defense, that all forces operating within the geographic area of a unified combatant command would be assigned to and under the command of the commander of that command. This provision would also provide that this requirement would apply to forces of specified or special combatant commands only as prescribed by the Secretary of Defense.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to delete the portion of the House provision relating to special combatant commands.

Chain of Command

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 112) that would specify that, unless otherwise directed by the President, the chain of command for the operational direction of the combatant commands runs from the President to the Secretary of Defense to the combatant commanders. This provision would also authorize, subject to the limitations that the JCS Chairman may not exercise military command over the Joint Chiefs of Staff or any of the armed forces, the President or the Secretary of Defense to direct communications from the Secretary of Defense to the combatant commanders to run through the JCS Chairman.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 603) that would authorize the President or Secretary of Defense to direct that the national military chain of command runs to the combatant commanders through the JCS Chairman.

The House recedes with three amendments. First, the phrase "for the operational direction" would be dropped from the description of the chain of command. The conferees agreed that this phrase may serve as an unintended limitation or may cause confusion. The second amendment would authorize only the President to direct that communications between the President or the Secretary of Defense and the combatant commanders be transmitted through the JCS Chairman. The third amendment would authorize the President to assign duties to the Chairman to assist the President and Secretary of Defense in performing their command function.

The conferees agreed that the JCS Chairman should not be, or appear to be, placed in the chain of command. Moreover, the conferees determined that the extremely important chain of command to the warfighting commands should be clearly prescribed. Without infringing upon the President's authority as Commander in Chief to direct otherwise, the conference substitute amendment would specify the normal chain of command that the Congress finds to be preferable in terms of meeting national security needs and preserving civilian control of the military.

At the same time, the conferees agreed that the President and the Secretary of Defense will need the assistance of the JCS Chairman in exercising their command function. The conference substitute amendment would authorize the President to direct communications to and from the combatant commanders to be transmitted through the JCS Chairman and to assign duties to the JCS Chairman to assist the President and Secretary of Defense. Should such communications run through the JCS Chairman, the orders that come from the Chairman must be initiated by, authorized by, and in the name of the President or the Secretary of Defense. Even if the President should exercise these authorities, the conferees intend that (1) the JCS Chairman would not be part of the chain of command, and (2) the chain of command would not run through the JCS Chairman. The conferees determined that the role of the JCS Chairman regarding operational matters must be carefully prescribed in order to ensure the absolute and unquestioned integrity of the fundamental principle of civilian control of the military.

Sec. 163. Role of Chairman of Joint Chiefs of Staff

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 112) that would authorize the Secretary of Defense to assign responsibility to the JCS Chairman for overseeing the activities of the combatant commands. This provision would also specify that such an assignment to the JCS Chairman, however, would not (1) confer any command authority, or (2) alter the direct responsibility of the combatant commanders to the Secretary of Defense.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 101) that would specify that the JCS Chairman, subject to the authority, direction, and control of the Secretary of Defense, supervises the combatant commanders.

The House recedes. The conferees agreed that this authority would provide the Secretary of Defense with a means of providing for the more effective control and coordination of the combatant commands. Because the Secretary's span of control is great and the time that he can devote to supervisory activities is limited, the conferees believe that the JCS Chairman could usefully assist the Secretary in overseeing the combatant commands.

The conferees have purposely framed this provision to allow the Secretary of Defense complete latitude in defining the JCS Chairman's oversight role. The conferees believe that the Chairman's oversight of the combatant commanders should assume whatever character the Secretary of Defense considers appropriate. The conferees intend that the Chairman act only as the Secretary's agent in exercising oversight; that is, for and on behalf of the Secretary, and only by his authority. The conferees contemplate, however, that the Secretary would employ the Chairman in oversight capacities such as coordinating matters that involve two or more combatant commanders, directing the combatant commanders' submissions of requirements, overseeing the state of readiness of each combatant command, and verifying the execution of orders issued by the President and the Secretary of Defense.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 112) that would reenact with amendments subsection (c)(2) of the current section 124 of title 10 that designates the JCS Chairman, subject to the authority, direction, and control of the Secretary of Defense, as the spokesman for the combatant commanders on their operational requirements. This provision would specify activities of the JCS Chairman in performing his responsibility as spokesman for the combatant commanders.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 101) that would provide that the JCS Chairman, subject to the authority, direction, and control of the Secretary of Defense, is the spokesman of the commanders of the combatant commands at the seat of Government.

The House recedes with an amendment to provide that the JCS Chairman will serve as the spokesman for the combatant commanders on all requirements of their commands, but especially on operational requirements.

Sec. 164. Commanders of combatant commands: assignment; powers and duties

Assignment of Combatant Commanders

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 112) that would provide that the President may assign to serve as commanders of unified combatant commands only officers who have served in one or more joint duty positions for a substantial period of time. This provision would also provide a Presidential waiver of this requirement in the case of any officer if the President determines that such action is necessary in the national interest.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 301) that would require the Secretary of Defense to establish policies to ensure, whenever practicable, the application of certain criteria to the selection of an officer for recommendation to the President for assignment as the commander of a unified or specified combatant command. The specified criteria would be that the officer have the joint specialty (as provided in section 301 of the House amendment) and have had at least one joint duty assignment as a general or flag officer.

The Senate recedes with amendments to require that the President may assign an officer to serve as a combatant commander only if he meets the criteria specified in the House provision, to provide a Presidential waiver of this requirement if the President determines that such action is necessary in the national interest, and to provide an appropriate transition provision for use by the President before full application of these new requirements. The transition provision is provided in section 214 of the conference substitute amendment.

Responsibilities of Combatant Commanders

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 112) that would specify that each combatant commander performs his duties under the authority, direction, and control of the Secretary of Defense and is directly responsible to the Secretary for the performance of his command and its preparedness to execute assigned missions.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with amendments to specify that, subject to the direction of the President, the combatant commander performs his duties and is responsible as provided in the Senate provision and to delete the portion of the Senate provision relating to "the performance of his [combatant commander's] command." The conferees agreed to the second amendment because a combatant commander is responsible to both the President and the Secretary of Defense for the performance of his command as provided in section 164(b)(1) of title 10 (as added by section 112 of the conference substitute amendment).

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 112) that would prescribe the basic responsibilities of each combatant commander concerning maintaining security, carrying out missions, and assigning tasks to, and directing coordination among, his subordinate commanders.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes. The conferees determined that these basic responsibilities would be more appropriately prescribed by administrative regulation.

Command Authority of Combatant Commanders

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 112) that would assign to each combatant commander the following authority over forces assigned to his command:

(1) exercising full operational command over assigned forces, including all aspects of military operations and joint training.,

(2) prescribing the chain of command to, and organizational relationship among, the commands and forces within the command; and

(3) coordinating and approving, as assigned by the Secretary of Defense after consultation with the Secretaries of the Military Departments and the combatant commander, those aspects of administration and support necessary for accomplishment of the missions assigned to the command.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 101) that would assign to each combatant commander the following authority over forces assigned to his command:

(1) exercising command over assigned forces, meaning the authority to give authoritative direction to subordinate forces necessary to accomplish assigned missions;

(2) training assigned forces; and

(3) employing assigned forces to accomplish assigned missions.

The conferees determined that neither the term "full operational command" nor the term "command", as currently used within the Department of Defense, accurately described the authority that combatant commanders need to carry out effectively their duties and responsibilities. Accordingly, the conferees agreed to avoid the use of either term in the conference substitute amendment, but instead to specify the authority that the conferees believe a combatant commander needs.

The conference substitute amendment would provide that, unless otherwise directed by the President or the Secretary of Defense, the authority, direction, and control of the combatant commander over assigned commands and forces would include the command functions of:

(1) giving authoritative direction to subordinate commands and forces necessary to carry out assigned missions, including authoritative direction over all aspects of military operations, joint training, and logistics;

(2) prescribing the chain of command to the commands and forces within the command;

(3) organizing commands and forces within the command as he considers necessary to carry out assigned missions;

(4) employing forces within the command as he considers necessary to carry out assigned missions;

(5) assigning command functions to subordinate commanders;

(6) coordinating and approving those aspects of administration and support (including control of resources and equipment, internal organization, and training) and discipline necessary to carry out assigned missions; and

(7) exercising the authority with respect to selecting subordinate commanders, selecting combatant command staff, suspending subordinates, and convening courts-martial, provided, respectively, in subsections (e), (f), and (g) of section 164 of title 10 (as added by section 211 of this conference substitute amendment) and in section 822(a) of title 10 (as amended by section 211 of the conference substitute amendment).

The House amendment contained a provision (section 101) that would require the Secretary of Defense to ensure that combatant commanders have sufficient authority over assigned forces to exercise effective command over those forces.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with two amendments. First, the Secretary of Defense is to ensure, after consultation with the JCS Chairman, that the combatant commander has sufficient authority, direction, and control over both assigned commands and forces. The second amendment would require the Secretary of Defense to review periodically and, after consultation with the Secretaries of the Military Departments, the JCS Chairman, and the combatant commander, assign authority to the combatant commander for those aspects of administration and support that the Secretary considers necessary to carry out assigned missions.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 101) that would require a combatant commander to inform the Secretary of Defense promptly if at any time he considers his authority to be insufficient.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Authority over Subordinate Commanders

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 112) that would provide, unless directed otherwise by the President or the Secretary of Defense, that commanders of commands and forces assigned to a combatant command are under the authority, direction, and control of, and are responsible to, the combatant commander on all matters for which he has been assigned full operational command or other authority.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment to delete "full operational command or other authority" and substitute "authority under subsection (c)" of section 164 of title 10 (as added by section 211 of the conference substitute amendment).

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 112) that would authorize, unless directed otherwise by the President or the Secretary of Defense, a combatant commander (1) to establish procedures for the communications of his subordinate commanders with other elements of the Department of Defense on any matter for which he has been assigned full operational command or other authority, and (2) to direct that he be advised of all other communications by his subordinate commanders.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with amendments to delete "full operational command or other authority" and substitute "authority under subsection (c)" of section 164 of title 10 (as added by section 211 of the conference substitute amendment) and to make these requirements apply to communications to and from the subordinate commanders.

Selection of Subordinate Commanders

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 112) that would require that the selection of a directly subordinate commander be made only with the concurrence of a combatant commander. This provision would authorize the Secretary of Defense to waive this requirement if he determines such action is necessary in the national interest.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 101) that would require the selection or the selection for recommendation to the President of a principal subordinate officer to be made by the combatant commander. The selection would be made from a list of officers submitted by the Secretary of the Military Department concerned, with the number of officers on such list to be specified by the combatant commander.

The House recedes with an amendment to require the concurrence of the combatant commander in the assignment or recommendation for assignment of an officer as a directly subordinate commander. The distinction between "assignment" and "recommendation for assignment" is necessary because 3- and 4-star officers are nominated by the President (under section 601 of title 10) to positions of importance and responsibility and are subject to confirmation by the Senate for service in those positions. Only after confirmation by the Senate are these officers actually "assigned" to their positions. Thus, for those positions, the officer is not directly assigned, but instead, is recommended to the President for assignment.

In agreeing to this provision, the conferees intend that the subordinate commanders perceive the combatant commander, rather than officers in the Military Departments, as the superior whom they serve. The requirement for concurrence should be exercised by a combatant commander to demonstrate unequivocably that he is the "hiring" authority.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 112) that would require a combatant commander to evaluate the duty performance of each directly subordinate commander. The evaluation would be submitted to the Secretary of the Military Department concerned.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment to require each evaluation to be submitted to the JCS Chairman as well as to the Secretary of the Military Department concerned. The conferees intend that each evaluation of a directly subordinate commander submitted by a combatant commander to the Secretary of a Military Department concerned shall be made a part of the personnel record of the subordinate commander.

Combatant Command Staff

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 112) that would require each unified combatant command to have a joint staff with officers in key positions of responsibility from each Military Department having forces assigned to the command.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with two amendments. The first House amendment requires the specified combatant commands to have such a staff as well. This provision of the conference substitute amendment does not use the term "joint staff" as was used in the Senate amendment. Because the House amendment broadened this provision to include specified combatant commands, the term "staff" is more appropriate. Under certain circumstances, a specified combatant command may not have a joint staff.

The second House amendment specifies that positions of responsibility on the staff of the combatant command shall be filled by officers from each of the Armed Forces having significant forces assigned to the command. If significant forces of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, or Air Force are assigned to the combatant command, the unified or specified combatant commander should be assisted by officers in positions of responsibility from that Armed Force.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 112) that would require that all officers on the staff of a unified combatant command in the grade of colonel or Navy captain and above may be selected only with the concurrence of the unified combatant commander and only in accordance with procedures established by the Secretary of Defense.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 101) that would require the selection or the selection for recommendation to the President of all officers on the staffs of a unified or specified combatant command to be made by the combatant commander. The selection would be made from a list of officers submitted by the Secretary of the Military Department concerned, with the number of officers on such list to be specified by the combatant commander.

The House recedes with amendments to apply the Senate provision to the staffs of specified combatant commands as well as to the staffs of unified combatant commands, to apply the Senate provision to officers of all grades, to require the concurrence of the combatant commander in the selection or recommendation for nomination of each officer, and to provide authority for the Secretary of Defense to waive this requirement.

Authority to Suspend Subordinates

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 112) that would authorize combatant commanders to suspend from duty and recommend the reassignment of any officer assigned to their commands.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 101) that would make the tenure of an officer assigned to a combatant command subject to the approval of the combatant commander.

The House recedes. For clarification, the authority of a combatant commander provided by this provision of the conference substitute amendment would apply to each officer of his command at any level. The conferees agreed that procedures required by this provision pertain solely to the relationships between a combatant commander and the Military Department concerned with respect to service by an officer in a combatant command. The conferees agreed that nothing in this provision confers on an officer assigned to a combatant command any procedural rights concerning suspension from duty or reassignment.

Sec. 165. Combatant commands: administration and support

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 112) that would assign to the Secretary of Defense, with the advice and assistance of the JCS Chairman, responsibility for providing for the administration and support of forces assigned to each combatant command.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 101) that would require that the functions of the Secretary of Defense regarding the administration and support of forces assigned to combatant commands be carried out with the advice and assistance of the JCS Chairman.

The House recedes.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 112) that would continue the current responsibility of the Secretaries of the Military Departments, subject to the authority, direction, and control of the Secretary of Defense, to provide administration and support for the forces that they have assigned to combatant commands. This provision would require this responsibility to be exercised consistent with the authority assigned to the combatant commanders for coordinating and approving certain aspects of administration and support.

The House amendment contained a similar provision (section 101) except that it would only cover the administration of forces assigned to combatant commands and that it would not make the exercise of the responsibility of the Secretaries of the Military Departments consistent with the authority assigned to combatant commanders.

The House recedes. The conferees agreed that, if there is a disagreement as to whether a particular disciplinary matter should be handled by a Military Department or a combatant command, the Secretary of Defense has ample authority to resolve the matter with respect to a particular case or class of cases.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 112) that would authorize the Secretary of Defense, after consultation with the Secretaries of the Military Departments, to assign responsibility (or any part of the responsibility) for the administration and support of forces assigned to combatant commands to other components of the Department of Defense. Such responsibility would be exercised under the authority, direction, and control of the Secretary of Defense and consistent with the authority assigned to combatant commanders.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 101) that would authorize the Secretary of Defense to assign responsibility (or any part of the responsibility) for the support of forces assigned to a combatant command to one or more of the Military Departments, other agencies of the Department of Defense, or the combatant commander concerned. Unless the Secretary of Defense directs otherwise, the Secretary of each Military Department would be responsible for the support of forces assigned by that department to combatant commands.

The House recedes with an amendment to clarify that other components of the Department of Defense include Defense Agencies and combatant commands.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 101) that would provide that a combatant commander may submit to the Secretary of Defense a proposal for his command to perform a support function.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes. The conferees agreed that combatant commanders should actively identify support functions that their commands should, in their judgment, perform and forward appropriate recommendations to the Secretary of Defense. However, the conferees believed that this provision of the House amendment need not be specified in law.

Sec. 166. Combatant commands: budget proposals

The House amendment contained a provision (section 101) that would require the Secretary of Defense, after consultation with the JCS Chairman, to submit to the Congress a separate budget proposal for activities of the combatant commands which may include joint exercises, force training, contingencies, and selected operations.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 101) that would assign various responsibilities to the combatant commanders, the JCS Chairman, and the Secretary of Defense for submission and preparation of, and guidance for, the budget proposal for the activities of combatant commands.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes. The conferees believed that this provision of the House amendment was too detailed to include in statute. The conferees agreed, however, that the procedure specified in the House provision should be followed. In particular, the Chairman should review and analyze requests submitted by the combatant commanders, establish priorities in accordance with guidance provided by the Secretary, and recommend a budget for each command.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 101) that would specify that combatant commanders may have access to any net assessment conducted by an organization of the Department of Defense, may request assistance in preparing net assessments, and must include the results of net assessments performed by their commands in certain submissions.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes. The conferees believed that the House amendment was too detailed to include in statute. The conferees agreed, however, that:

(1) procedures should be established under which (a) a combatant commander could obtain the assistance of the Joint Staff and other Department of Defense organizations in performing net assessments required by the command; and (b) the findings, conclusions, and recommendations of net assessments conducted within the Department of Defense are made available to combatant commanders; and

(2) combatant commanders should (a) contribute, as appropriate, to net assessments performed by the Joint Staff; and (b) consider the findings and conclusions of net assessments relevant to their commands in evaluating the capabilities of their commands and in developing contingency plans.

Joint Commanders Council

The House amendment contained a provision (section 101) that would establish a Joint Commanders Council consisting of the JCS Chairman and the combatant commanders.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes. The conferees agreed that there is a need to improve communications among and between combatant commanders and urge the Secretary of Defense to take appropriate actions to achieve necessary improvements.

Court-Martial Jurisdiction

The House amendment contained a provision (section 101(b)) that would amend section 822(a) of title 10 to provide court-martial jurisdiction to the Secretary of Defense and to the commanding officer of a combatant command.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

SEC. 212. INITIAL REVIEW OF COMBATANT COMMANDS

The House amendment contained a provision (section 104) that would specify the matters to be considered in the initial review of the Unified Command Plan (as required by section 101 of the House amendment) and would require submission of the report of this initial review to the President not later than one year after the date of enactment.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with amendments to revise the matters to be considered in the initial review of the combatant commands (Unified Command Plan).

SEC. 213. REPEAL OF CERTAIN LIMITATIONS ON COMMAND STRUCTURE

The House amendment contained a provision (section 105(b)) that would repeal the prohibition in section 8106 of the Department of Defense Appropriations Act, 1986 (as contained in the Continuing Resolution for fiscal year 1986) against altering the command structure for military forces in Alaska.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

SEC. 214. TRANSITION

Assignment of Forces to Combatant Commands

The House amendment contained a provision (section 106(b)) that would require the assignment of forces to combatant commands, as provided in section 162 of title 10 (as added by section 101 of the House amendment), to take effect at the end of the 90-day period beginning on the date of enactment.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Waiver of Qualifications for Assignment as Combatant Commander

As part of the action of the conference committee on section 164(a) of title 10 (as added by section 211 of the conference substitute amendment), the conferees agreed to authorize the President to waive the qualifications for assignment as a combatant commander during a transition period before full application of the requirements of section 164(a). Under section 214(b) of the conference substitute amendment, the President would be authorized to waive:

(1) for a 2-year period after enactment, the requirement that a combatant commander have the joint specialty;

(2) for a 4-year period after enactment, the requirement that a combatant commander have served in a joint duty assignment for 3 years if the commander has served in such an assignment for not less than 2 years; and

(3) for a 4-year period after enactment, the requirement that a combatant commander have served in a joint duty assignment as a general or flag officer if the commander served as a general or flag officer in an assignment that was considered a joint duty assignment or a joint equivalent assignment under regulations in effect at the time the assignment began.

Although section 164(a)(2) of title 10 (as added by section 211 of the conference substitute amendment) provides the President with authority to waive the requirements for assignment as a combatant commander, the conferees agreed to provide a specific waiver for a limited transition period so that the exercise of a Presidential waiver, as would be required in the immediate future, would not become standard practice. After the transition period, the conferees expect the President to exercise his permanent waiver authority only in a very limited number of cases and only for officers of exceptional talent who may fail to meet the specified criteria.

Selection and Suspension from Duty of Subordinate Officers

The House amendment contained a provision (section 106(d)) that would require the provisions of section 166 of title 10 (as added by section 101 of the House amendment) relating to the selection and tenure of officers subordinate to a combatant commander to take effect at the end of the 90-day period beginning on the date of enactment.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with amendments to apply this transition provision to subsections (e), (f), and (g) of section 164 of title 10 (as added by section 211 of the conference substitute amendment) and to provide that the Secretary of Defense may prescribe any earlier date.

Budget Proposals

The House amendment contained a provision (section 106(c)) that would require the portion of section 165 of title 10 (as added by section 101 of the House amendment) concerning program and budget proposals for the combatant commands to take effect with respect to proposals for fiscal year 1989.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

TITLE III—DEFENSE AGENCIES AND DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE FIELD ACTIVITIES

SEC. 301. ESTABLISHMENT AND MANAGEMENT OF DEFENSE AGENCIES AND DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE FIELD ACTIVITIES

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 116) that would:

(1) redesignate sections 191 and 192 of chapter 8 of title 10 as sections 195 and 196;

(2) establish two subchapters in chapter 8; and

(3) add a new section 191 to chapter 8 dealing with Defense Agencies and Department of Defense Field Activities.

The House amendment contained a similar provision that would reorganize chapter 8 of title 10. The House amendment, however, would only apply to Defense Agencies and would not address Department of Defense Field Activities.

The House recedes to including provisions relating to Department of Defense Field Activities as a part of chapter 8 of title 10 and with an amendment to specify the organization of the chapter. The House amendment would:

(1) redesignate section 191 as section 201 and transfer such section to a new subchapter II of chapter 8 of title 10, entitled "Miscellaneous Defense Agency Matters"; and

(2) create a new subchapter I of chapter 8, entitled "Common Supply and Service Activities", with new sections 191 through 194 to accommodate the provisions contained in title III of the conference substitute amendment.

Sec. 191. Secretary of Defense: authority to provide for common performance of supply or service activities

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 116) that would provide authority for the Secretary of Defense to establish single agencies within the Department of Defense to perform common supply or service activities. The Senate provision would also require the Secretary of Defense to designate any such agency as a Defense Agency or a Department of Defense Field Activity.

The House amendment contained a similar provision (section 201).

The House recedes. Section 191 of title 10 (as added by section 301 of the conference substitute amendment) establishes a statutory framework for the Defense Agencies and Department of Defense Field Activities and governs the establishment of such specialized agencies and activities. Section 191 applies to all such agencies and activities including those in existence on the date of enactment. The conferees agreed that section 191 does not apply to the authority of the Secretary of Defense under section 113(d) of title 10 (as redesignated by section 101(a) of the conference substitute amendment) which permits the Secretary to designate a single Military Department as the executive agent for an activity that is common to more than one Military Department.

Sec. 192. Defense Agencies and Department of Defense Field Activities: oversight by the Secretary of Defense

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 116) that would require the Secretary of Defense to assign the overall supervision of each supply or service agency, except for the Defense Intelligence Agency and the National Security Agency, to certain officers within the Office of the Secretary of Defense or to the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff. The provision would also require an official who was assigned such supervisory responsibility to advise the Secretary of Defense on the extent to which the program recommendations and budget proposals of the agency conform with the material requirements of the Military Departments and the operational requirements of the unified and specified combatant commands.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees intend that the civilian officers within the Office of the Secretary of Defense who could be assigned supervisory responsibility include those officers established by law or established or designated by the Secretary of Defense under section 131 of title 10 (as amended by section 104 of the conference substitute amendment).

By not requiring the assignment of a civilian officer or the JCS Chairman to supervise the Defense Intelligence Agency and the National Security Agency, the conferees do not intend to alter the authority of the Secretary of Defense to take such action himself.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 116) that would require the Secretary of Defense to establish procedures to ensure the full and effective review of the program recommendations and budget proposals of each supply or service agency.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 116) that would require the Secretary of Defense periodically to assess the continuing need for each supply or service agency.

The House amendment contained a similar provision (section 201) that would require a review of Defense Agencies at least every other year to ensure that they, rather than the Military Departments, provide a more effective, economical, or efficient manner of providing common supplies and services. The House provision, in addition, would specify the Department of Defense officials whose views should be obtained as part of the review. Finally, the House provision would specify that the review requirement would apply to the National Security Agency only as determined appropriate by the Secretary of Defense.

The Senate recedes with two amendments. The first amendment requires the Secretary of Defense, in determining the extent of the National Security Agency review, to consult with the Director of Central Intelligence.

The second amendment deletes the specification of DoD officials whose views are to be obtained. The conferees agreed that, even though the requirement is not included in the conference substitute amendment, the Secretary of Defense should normally consult with the officials named in the House provision in conducting his review of the Defense Agencies. Those officials are the Directors of the Defense Agencies, the Secretaries of the Military Departments, the JCS Chairman, and the Chief of Staff of the Army, the Chief of Naval Operations, the Chief of Staff of the Air Force, the Commandant of the Marine Corps, and the commanders of the unified and specified combatant commands.

Sec. 193. Combat support agencies: oversight

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 116) that would make the JCS Chairman responsible for advising the Secretary of Defense on the preparedness of each supply or service agency that has wartime support responsibilities. The Chairman would be required, as a part of his duties, to assess the adequacy of contingency plans, participation in joint exercises, and readiness reporting systems of each supply or service agency.

The House amendment contained a similar provision (section 201) that would require the Chairman to:

(1) submit a report to the Secretary of Defense at least every 2 years on the readiness of combat support agencies (as would be defined by section 201 of the House amendment);

(2) review war-related support plans of combat support agencies in preparing the report to the Secretary of Defense and take action, in accordance with guidance provided by the Secretary of Defense, to revise the plans as needed;

(3) provide for the participation of combat support agencies in joint training exercises and assess their performance; and

(4) develop a uniform readiness reporting system for the combat support agencies in consultation with the agency directors.

The House amendment provision would apply to the National Security Agency only with respect to combat support functions the agency performs for the Department of Defense. The Secretary of Defense, after consultation with the Director of Central Intelligence, would be required to determine the application of the provision to the National Security Agency and report to the Congress any revision of the policies and procedures pertaining to the National Security Agency.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to delete the requirement that the Secretary of Defense report to the Congress on changes in the policies and procedures pertaining to the National Security Agency. The conferees agreed that, in carrying out his responsibilities under subsections (a), (b), and (c) of section 193 of title 10 (as added by section 301 of the conference substitute amendment), the JCS Chairman should:

(1) review the directives and other administrative regulations governing combat support agencies; and

(2) make recommendations to the Secretary of Defense on appropriate revisions to the directives and regulations.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 116) that would require the Secretary of Defense, in consultation with the Director of Central Intelligence, to develop policies and programs to correct any deficiencies the JCS Chairman or other Department of Defense officials identified in the wartime support capabilities of the Defense Intelligence Agency and the National Security Agency.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 201) that would define the term "combat support agency".

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 201) that would require the director of a combat support agency to assign a representative of that agency to the headquarters of a combatant command if requested to do so by the commander of a combatant command.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes. The conferees agreed that a request from a combatant commander for assignment to his command of a combat support agency representative should be seriously considered by the director of the agency.

Sec. 194. Limitations on personnel

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 117(f)) that would prohibit future increases in the number of personnel assigned to Defense Agencies and Department of Defense Field Activities above the number assigned on September 30, 1988. The National Security Agency would be exempt from the requirements of the provision. The Senate amendment also contained a provision that would require reductions in personnel by September 30, 1988. That provision is now contained in title VI of the conference substitute amendment.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment to change the effective date for the personnel cap to September 30, 1989.

SEC. 302. DEFINITIONS OF DEFENSE AGENCY AND DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE FIELD ACTIVITY

The House amendment contained a provision (section 201(b)) that would define the term "defense agency."

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with two amendments. The first Senate amendment specifies that the term "Defense Agency" applies to an organizational entity as described in the House provision or to an organizational entity of the Defense Department that is designated by the Secretary of Defense as a "Defense Agency." The second Senate amendment adds the definition of the term "Department of Defense Field Activity."

SEC. 303. REASSESSMENT OF DEFENSE AGENCIES AND DOD FIELD ACTIVITIES

The House amendment contained a provision (section 202) that would require the Secretary of Defense, the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and the Secretaries of the Military Departments to conduct separate studies of the functions and organizational structure of the Defense Agencies to determine the most appropriate means within the Department of Defense of providing the supplies and services now provided by the agencies.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with three amendments. The first Senate amendment includes Department of Defense Field Activities in the studies. The second Senate amendment deletes a requirement contained in the House amendment that the Secretary consult with certain DoD officials in preparing his study. The conferees agreed that this requirement is not needed; the Secretary will find it necessary to consult with most, if not all, of the named officials in the course of conducting the required study. The third Senate amendment adds a requirement that the study by the Secretary of Defense include plans to achieve reductions of 5, 10, and 15 percent of the total number of personnel employed in the Defense Agencies and Department of Defense Field Activities on September 30, 1988, together with a discussion of the implications of each level of personnel reductions.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 203) that would require a report on the improved application of computer systems to Defense Agency functions and activities.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to incorporate the computer report requirement into the report on the reassessment of Defense Agencies and Department of Defense Field Activities required by section 303 of the conference substitute amendment.

SEC. 304. TRANSITION

Periodic Review of Defense Agencies

The House amendment contained a provision (section 201(d)) that would require the first periodic review by the Secretary of Defense under section 192 of title 10 (as added by section 201 of the House amendment) to be completed within 3 years after enactment of the House amendment.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Oversight of Combat Support Agencies

The House amendment contained a provision (section 201(d)) that would establish dates for implementation of the requirements imposed on the JCS Chairman and the Secretary of Defense in section 193 of title 10 (as added by section 201 of the House amendment). The provision would require an interim report on implementation by the Secretary of Defense.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to delete the requirement for an interim report.

Combat Support Functions of the National Security Agency

The House amendment contained a provision (section 201(d)) that would require the Secretary of Defense to carry out within 120 days the requirements with respect to the National Security Agency contained in subsection (d)(2) of section 193 of title 10 (as added by section 201 of the House amendment).

The Senate amendment contained on similar provision.

The House recedes.

Title IV—Joint Officer Personnel Policy

The conferees determined that title IV of the conference substitute amendment provides the most effective policies for managing joint officers that can be developed with the information currently available to the Congress and the Department of Defense. Unfortunately, the Defense Department has given limited attention to the subject of joint officer management. Thus, only a limited base of information and only a few existing policies were available to guide the work of the conference committee. As a consequence, the conferees expect that unanticipated problems will be identified as the Defense Department implements the provisions of title IV of the conference substitute amendment and that adjustments will be necessary. It is for this reason that the conferees agreed to provide transition periods for use before many provisions become effective. In addition, the conferees expressed a willingness to consider promptly any adjustments to these provisions that the Secretary of Defense may recommend based upon insights that actual implementation may provide. This willingness should not, however, be interpreted as a lessening of the commitment of the Congress to an effective system for preparing and rewarding military officers for joint duty service or as permitting the Department to avoid or delay the required implementation.

SEC. 401. JOINT OFFICER MANAGEMENT

The House amendment contained a provision (section 301) that would add a new chapter 38 to title 10, United States Code, entitled Joint Officer Management.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes. The conferees agreed that the intent of the new chapter 38, and of the entire title IV of the conference substitute amendment, is to govern organizational relationships among elements of the Department of Defense (including the Office of the Secretary of Defense, the Military Departments, the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, and the combatant commands) with respect to personnel policies related to joint duty assignments. Nothing in this title is intended to confer any rights on individual officers, and allegations of non-compliance with any provisions in this title do not provide a basis for invalidating any personnel action.

Sec. 661. Management policies for joint specialty officers

The House amendment contained a provision (section 301) that would establish an occupational category, referred to in the amendment as the "joint specialty", for officers trained in and oriented toward joint military matters. In addition, the provision would set out various requirements pertaining to the specialty: (1) how the total number of joint specialty officers would be determined and the number and type of joint duty assignments to which they would be assigned; (2) how joint specialty officers would be selected, including the nomination procedure and education and experience requirements; and (3) career guidelines for joint specialty officers.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 115) that would require the Secretary of Defense to ensure that officers are well prepared to assume joint duty positions as a result of previous experience, formal education, and training.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that would change the requirement for the Secretary of Defense to establish "an occupational category" for joint officers to a requirement to establish "policies, procedures, and practices for the effective management of officers . . . trained in, and oriented toward, joint matters. . . ." The conferees noted that the paragraph changed by the Senate amendment was intended to give the Secretary of Defense sufficient latitude in establishing the "joint specialty", including designating it with another term. The conferees believe that the Senate amendment provides the necessary latitude and unambiguously states the intent of the Congress that an effective system for the management of joint specialty officers be established.

Under section 661(c) of title 10 (as added by section 401 of the conference substitute amendment), an officer who is nominated for the joint specialty may not be selected for the specialty until he (1) successfully completes an appropriate program at a joint professional military education school, and (2) after completing such a program, successfully completes a full joint duty assignment. The purpose of this precise sequence is to ensure that qualified officers are assigned to joint duty assignments. The conferees agreed, however, that implementation of these particular requirements may demonstrate the need for flexibility in the sequence in which they must be fulfilled. Therefore, the conferees agreed that the Committees on Armed Services of the Senate and House of Representatives would more closely examine during the next year whether a limited number of officers should be exempted from the required sequence.

The conferees request that the Secretary of Defense consult with the Secretary of Transportation and advise the Congress whether any provision of chapter 38 of title 10, as added by title IV of the conference substitute amendment, should be applied to officers of the Coast Guard.

The second Senate amendment would transfer to section 402 of the conference substitute amendment the requirement that career guidelines for joint specialty officers established by the Secretary of Defense include guidelines to be furnished to officer selection boards, would elaborate the requirement in more detail, and would add appropriate instructions for selection boards to section 615 of title 10, United States Code. This amendment is considered in the discussion of section 402 below.

Sec. 662. Promotion policy objectives for joint officers

The House amendment contained a provision (section 302) that would require the Secretary of Defense to establish policies to ensure that Joint Staff officers, as a group, are promoted at a rate not less than the rate of officers assigned to Service headquarters staffs. The provision contained the same promotion rate requirement for joint specialty officers. A third requirement would specify promotion rate policies for officers serving in other joint duty assignments.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 115) that would require the Secretary of Defense to ensure that the promotion, retention, and assignment policies of the Services provide sufficient incentives for officers to seek joint duty assignments.

The Senate recedes with two amendments. The first Senate amendment would eliminate the mandatory promotion rates and, instead, require the Secretary of Defense to ensure that the qualifications of officers assigned to joint duty assignments are such that the promotion rates specified in the House amendment will be achieved. The conferees agreed that the underlying objective of the provision concerning promotion rates is to ensure that highly capable officers are selected for joint duty assignments—in the case of the Joint Staff or joint specialty, outstanding officers who are, or will be, qualified as a group to be promoted at the same high rates as officers assigned to Service headquarters staffs. The Senate amendment, in focusing on the qualifications of officers selected for joint duty assignments, more accurately expresses congressional intent with respect to this provision.

The second Senate amendment would require the Secretary of Defense to report to the Congress no less often than every 6 months on the promotion rates of joint duty officers. In addition, if the promotion rates should fail to meet the established objectives, the Secretary of Defense would be required to notify the Congress immediately and explain what actions are being taken to prevent further failures. The conferees discourage any interpretation that the first Senate amendment suggests that the Congress is less committed to the objective of manning joint duty assignments with outstanding officers than the House amendment indicates. The second Senate amendment is intended to require notice whenever the Department of Defense fails to achieve the objectives originally established by the House amendment.

Sec. 663. Education

Capstone Course for New General and Flag Officers

The House amendment contained a provision (section 301) that would require, subject to a case-by-case waiver, that officers selected for promotion to brigadier general or rear admiral (lower half) attend a Capstone course to prepare them to work with the other armed forces.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Professional Military Education Schools

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 115) that would require the Secretary of Defense to ensure that the curricula of joint military colleges and schools are oriented to preparing officers for joint duty assignments and that the curricula of the military colleges and schools of the Army, Navy, Air Force, and Marine Corps give appropriate emphasis to instruction in joint military matters.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 301) that would require the Secretary of Defense to review and revise the curricula of schools of the National Defense University and of other professional military education schools to strengthen the education of officers in joint matters.

The Senate recedes.

Duty Assignments After Attending Military Education Schools

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 115) that would require that a substantial percentage of graduates of joint schools receive joint duty assignments.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 301) that would impose requirements for the subsequent assignment of officers who attend joint professional military education schools to joint duty assignments, including a requirement that a proportion significantly greater than 50 percent of non-joint specialty officers graduating from a joint professional military education school receive joint duty assignments.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to delete the word "significantly" in the House amendment.

Other Education Requirements

The House amendment contained a provision (section 301) that would require the Secretary of Defense to take all other practicable measures to improve the training and experience of officers serving in senior joint duty assignments.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Sec. 664. Length of joint duty assignments

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 115) that would require the Secretary of Defense to ensure continuity in joint organizations through appropriate joint tour lengths.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 301) that would establish 3 years as the length of a joint duty assignment for general and flag officers and 3½ years for all other officers. The tour length could be waived by the Secretary of Defense subject to certain limitations; also, the Secretary could establish shorter tour lengths for officers with critical combat operational skills, provided that their joint duty assignment was not less than two years.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to specify that the tour length requirements do not apply to officers who fail to complete a joint duty assignment as a result of retirement, separation from active duty, or suspension.

The conferees agreed that this provision is not intended to grant any individual tenure with respect to any assignment.

Sec. 665. Procedures for monitoring the careers of joint officers

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 115) that would require the Secretary of Defense to ensure that the personnel practices, policies, and procedures of the military Services enhance the abilities of joint duty officers.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 301) that would require the Secretary of Defense, with the advice of the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff (JCS), to establish procedures for overseeing the careers of officers with the joint specialty and other officers who serve in joint duty assignments.

The Senate recedes.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 301) that would make the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff responsible for advising the Secretaries of the Military Departments with respect to the duty assignments of joint specialty officers and other officers serving in joint duty assignments.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes. The conferees agreed that the JCS Chairman should, on his own initiative, assume the responsibility contained in the House amendment, but that there is no reason to specify this responsibility as a matter of law.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 301) that would require enhancement of Joint Staff capabilities to monitor the promotions and assignments of joint specialty officers and other joint duty officers and to advise the JCS Chairman on joint personnel matters.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Sec. 666. Reserve officers not on the active duty list

The House amendment contained a provision (section 301) that would require the Secretary of Defense to establish personnel policies emphasizing training and experience in joint matters for reserve officers.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Sec. 667. Annual report to Congress

The House amendment contained a provision (section 301) that would require the Secretary of Defense to submit, as a part of his annual report to Congress, a report on Joint Staff, joint specialty, and other officers who are serving, or have served, in joint duty assignments. The report would require information on:

(1) the officers chosen for the joint specialty, including their education and experience;

(2) the promotion rates for joint specialty officers and other officers serving in joint duty assignments compared with the promotion rates of officers in the Services;

(3) assignments of joint specialty officers;

(4) the average length of tours of duty in joint duty assignments; and

(5) other matters.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with three amendments. The first Senate amendment requires that the information in the report be shown separately for each Service as well as for the Department of Defense as a whole. The second Senate amendment requires the promotion rates to be shown for Joint Staff officers as well as joint specialty officers and other officers serving in joint duty assignments. The third Senate amendment requires an analysis of the extent to which each Military Department is providing its share of officers to fill joint duty assignments. (The House amendment contained a similar requirement in section 102.)

The conferees request that the information required by this provision be included in a portion of the annual report of the Secretary of Defense to Congress relating to management of the Department of Defense.

Sec. 668. Definitions

The House amendment contained a provision (section 301) that would define the term "joint matters" and would require the Secretary of Defense, subject to criteria set out in the provision, to define the term "joint duty assignment" and to publish a list of joint duty assignment positions.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

SEC. 402. PROMOTION PROCEDURES FOR JOINT OFFICERS

Composition of Selection Boards

The House amendment contained a provision (section 302) that would require that each selection (promotion) board that will consider officers who have served in joint duty assignments include at least one joint duty officer designated by the JCS Chairman. The House provision specified, however, that the 51 Secretary of Defense could waive the requirement in the case of Marine Corps selection boards.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes. The conferees agreed that the only reason for the waiver provision for the Marine Corps is to give the Secretary of Defense needed flexibility when there are insufficient numbers of Marine Corps officers of the requisite grade assigned to joint duty assignments to carry out crucial joint duty responsibilities and to meet this selection board membership requirement. The conferees expect the Secretary of Defense to exercise this waiver rarely, if at all.

Guidance to Selection Boards

The House amendment contained a provision (section 301) that would require the Secretary of Defense to establish career guidelines for officers with the joint specialty, including information and guidelines to be furnished to officer selection boards.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that transfers the requirement for promotion guidelines to this section of the conference substitute amendment, further elaborates the requirement, and adds appropriate instructions for selection boards to section 615 of title 10. With respect to the guidelines to be established by the Secretary of Defense, the Senate amendment requires that the Secretary be assisted by the JCS Chairman and that the guidelines be furnished to the Secretaries of the Military Departments. The amendment specifies that their purpose is to ensure that each selection board gives appropriate consideration to the performance in joint duty assignments of officers who are serving, or have served, in such assignments. With respect to guidelines to selection boards, the Senate amendment requires that they be based on the guidelines received by the Secretary of a Military Department from the Secretary of Defense.

Review of Promotion Lists by the JCS Chairman

The House amendment contained a provision (section 302) that would amend section 618 of title 10 to modify the procedures for the review and transmittal of the report of an officer selection board. The House amendment would:

(1) require the JCS Chairman to review the report, in accordance with guidelines prescribed by the Secretary of Defense, after the Secretary of the Military Department concerned has reviewed the report;

(2) authorize the JCS Chairman to recommend officers for promotion who were considered by the board and who had served, or were serving, in joint duty assignments;

(3) authorize the Secretary of the Military Department concerned, if he disagreed with the recommendations of the Chairman, to return the report to the promotion board for further proceedings, convene a special promotion board, or take other appropriate action; and

(4) require remaining disagreements between the Secretary of the Military Department and the Chairman, after the Secretary took such action as he considered necessary in response to the Chairman's submission, to be decided by the Secretary of Defense.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with four amendments. The first Senate amendment specifies that the JCS Chairman shall review the report of a selection board for the purpose of determining whether the board acted consistent with the guidelines established by the Secretary of Defense and otherwise gave appropriate consideration to the performance in joint duty assignments of officers who are serving, or have served, in joint duty assignments.

The second Senate amendment replaces the authority for the Chairman to recommend officers for promotion with a requirement that the Chairman, after reviewing the report of a selection board, return it with his determinations and comments to the Secretary of the Military Department concerned. The conferees recognize that the House amendment would have breached a long standing practice, with roots in law and tradition, that promotions are based on the action of impartial boards of officers rather than the judgment of any one individual. The conferees agree, however, that the Senate amendment is not intended to circumscribe the content (including the specificity) or presentation of the "deliberations and comments" prepared by the Chairman for the Secretary of the Military Department and, with respect to the fourth amendment described below, for the Secretary of Defense.

The third Senate amendment specifies actions that may be taken by the Secretary of the Military Department concerned if the Chairman determines that a board acted contrary to the guidelines of the Secretary of Defense or otherwise failed to give appropriate consideration to the performance of joint duty officers. The actions specified are the same as those contained in the House amendment for a Secretary of the Military Department to take in case the Chairman recommended officers for promotion, except that a Secretary is also authorized to convene a new selection board (as opposed to reconvening the original board).

The fourth Senate amendment modifies the remainder of the procedures contained in the House amendment to make them consistent with the first three amendments. It requires that remaining disagreements between the Chairman and the Secretary of a Military Department be referred to the Secretary of Defense with comments from both parties and that the Secretary of Defense take appropriate action.

SEC. 403. CONSIDERATION OF JOINT DUTY IN SENIOR GENERAL AND FLAG OFFICER APPOINTMENTS AND ADVICE ON QUALIFICATIONS

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 114) that would amend section 601 of title 10 to add a requirement that the JCS Chairman submit his evaluation of the joint service of officers recommended to the President for initial appointment to the grade of lieutenant general or vice admiral, or to the grade of general or admiral. The provision would further require that the Secretary of Defense submit the Chairman's evaluation to the President at the same time the recommendation for the appointment was submitted to the President.

The House amendment contained a similar provision.

The House recedes.

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 114) that would require the Secretary of Defense, each time a vacancy occurs in a military office or position within the Department of Defense that the President has designated as a position of importance and responsibility to carry the grade of general or admiral or lieutenant general or vice admiral, to inform the President of the qualifications needed by an appointee to carry out effectively the duties and responsibilities of that office or position.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment to apply the Senate requirement to offices for which the required grade is specified in law.

SEC. 404. JOINT DUTY ASSIGNMENT AS PREREQUISITE FOR PROMOTION TO GENERAL OR FLAG OFFICER GRADE

The House amendment contained a provision (section 303) that would require, subject to a case-by-case waiver by the Secretary of Defense, that an officer may not be promoted to brigadier general or rear admiral (lower half) unless he has served in a joint duty assignment.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

SEC. 405. ANNUAL REPORT ON IMPLEMENTATION

The House amendment contained a provision (section 304) that would require the Secretary of Defense to include in his annual report to the Congress a report on the implementation of the joint personnel policy title of the House amendment.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes. The conferees request that the information required by this provision be included in a portion of the annual report of the Secretary to the Congress relating to management of the Department of Defense.

SEC. 406. TRANSITION

Joint Duty Assignments

The House amendment contained a provision (section 305) that would require the Secretary of Defense to ensure that about one-half of the joint duty assignments in grades above captain or Navy lieutenant are always filled by officers who have (or have been nominated for) the joint specialty as rapidly as possible and not later than 2 years after the date of enactment.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes.

Joint Specialty

The House amendment contained a provision (section 305) that would provide special rules for the Secretary of Defense to apply in making the initial selection of officers for the joint specialty during a 2-year transition period.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment that modifies the procedures for the initial selection of joint specialty officers in several ways.

The amendment deletes the requirement that the Secretary of Defense make the initial selection of officers from among officers in such grades as the Secretary determines. The conferees agreed that the conference substitute amendment makes this requirement unnecessary. The Senate amendment eliminates the distinction between general and flag officers and all other officers in the "special rules" for initial selections in the House amendment. The conferees agree that the revised transition provisions make this distinction unnecessary. The Senate amendment further specifies how the specific provisions of title IV of the conference substitute amendment may be waived during the initial transition period. Finally, the amendment modifies the waiver procedure for the initial selection of joint specialty officers to require that the waiver authority may be delegated only to the Deputy Secretary of Defense, may be applied only on a case-by-case basis, and shall be exercised in a manner that ensures that the highest standards of performance, education, and experience are established and maintained for officers selected for the joint specialty.

Career Guidelines

The House amendment contained a provision (section 305) that would require the establishment of career guidelines, procedures for monitoring the careers of joint duty officers, and reserve officer personnel policies not later than 6 months after the date of enactment. The provision would also require the enhancement of the Joint Staff's capability to monitor joint personnel matters not later than 6 months after the date of enactment.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to extend the period of time for the establishment of these policies and capabilities to 8 months.

Education

The House amendment contained a provision (section 305) that would specify the transition periods for the requirements for the Capstone course and the review of the professional military education schools. The provision would require that the revised curricula at these schools take effect with respect to courses beginning after August 1987.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision. The Senate recedes with two amendments. First, the revised curricula is to take effect with respect to courses beginning after July 1987. Second, the requirements for post-education duty assignments are to take effect with respect to classes graduating from joint professional military education schools after January 1987.

Length of Joint Duty Assignments

As part of the action of the conference committee on section 664 of title 10 (as added by section 401 of the conference substitute amendment), the conferees agreed to apply the new requirements for the length of joint duty assignments to officers assigned to such positions after the end of the 90-day period beginning on the date of enactment. Moreover, the conferees intend that the Secretary of Defense, in computing the average required by section 664, consider only joint duty assignments to which the section applies.

Promotion Policy

The House amendment contained a provision (section 305) that would specify the transition periods for changes to the composition and review process of selection boards considering joint duty officers. The provision would also specify the transition period for implementation of the mandatory promotion rates provided in section 302 of the House amendment.

The Senate amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to delete the transition period for implementation of the mandatory promotion rates. This transition period is rendered unnecessary by a Senate amendment to section 302 of the House amendment.

Annual Report on Joint Duty Officers

As part of the action of the conference committee on section 667 of title 10 (as added by section 401 of the conference substitute amendment), the conferees agreed that the first annual report submitted by the Secretary of Defense after the date of enactment shall contain as much of the information required by section 667 as is available to the Secretary at the time of the preparation of the report.

TITLE V—MILITARY DEPARTMENTS

SEC. 501. THE ARMY SECRETARIAT; SEC. 511. THE NAVY SECRETARIAT; AND SEC. 521. THE AIR FORCE SECRETARIAT

Administrative Assistant

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 201(a)(2)) that would delete the statutory requirement, as provided in existing section 3016 of title 10, for an Administrative Assistant in the Department of the Army.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 401 (b)(7)) that would prohibit the abolishment of the position of Administrative Assistant in the Department of the Army and that would authorize the Departments of the Navy and Air Force to have a similar position.

The Senate recedes.

Composition of the Department of the Navy

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 304) that would establish a new chapter 518 of title 10 (Composition of the Department of the Navy) and would reenact in such chapter the third and fourth sentences of existing section 5011 and all of existing sections 5012 and 5013 of title 10.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 101(c)) that would:

(1) amend section 5012 of title 10 to delete the portion specifying that the Navy "is generally responsible for naval reconnaissance, antisubmarine warfare, and protection of shipping"; and

(2) provide a free-standing provision of law that would clarify the authority of the President and the Secretary of Defense to assign missions, roles, and functions to the Military Departments, unified and specified combatant commands, and other elements of the Department of Defense.

The House recedes to the establishment of a new chapter 507 (Composition of the Department of the Navy) of title 10, the transfer of existing sections 5012 and 5013 to such chapter, and the addition of a new section 5061 on the composition of the Department of the Navy. The Senate recedes to section 101(c) of the House amendment with an amendment to delete the free-standing provision. The conferees agreed that the amendment to the responsibilities of the Navy, as provided by section 101(c) of the House amendment, does not affect the authority of the President or the Secretary of Defense to assign responsibilities to the Navy.

Seal for the Department of the Navy

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 301) that would require the Secretary of the Navy to have a seal for the Department of the Navy, the President to approve the design of the seal, and judicial notice to be taken of the seal.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

Secretaries of the Army, Navy, and Air Force

The Senate amendment contained provisions (sections 201, 301, and 401) that would require the Secretary of a Military Department to be appointed from civilian life by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

The House amendment contained no similar provisions.

The House recedes.

The Senate amendment contained provisions (sections 201, 301, and 401) that would prohibit a person being appointed Secretary of a Military Department within 5 years after his relief from active duty as a commissioned officer of a regular component of an Armed Force.

The House amendment contained no similar provisions.

The House recedes with an amendment to increase the required period of separation from active duty to 10 years. The conferees determined that the key civilian control role of the Secretary of a Military Department requires a longer period of separation from active duty than would be provided by the provisions of the Senate amendment. The requirement for the Secretary of a Military Department, as provided by the conference substitute amendment, would be the same as is now required for the Secretary of Defense, Deputy Secretary of Defense, and Under Secretary of Defense for Policy.

The Senate amendment contained provisions (sections 201, 301, and 401) that would provide that the performance of duties by the Secretary of a Military Department is subject to the authority, direction, and control of the Secretary of Defense and to the provisions of chapter 6 of title 10 (as added by section 112 of the Senate amendment) related to the combatant commands.

The House amendment contained no similar provisions.

The House recedes.

The Senate amendment contained provisions (sections 201, 301, and 401) that would specify that the Secretary of a Military Department is responsible for and has the authority necessary to conduct all affairs of his Department, including 12 specified functions.

The House amendment contained no similar provisions.

The House recedes with an amendment to clarify that the specified function of "administering" includes the morale and welfare of personnel. The conferees determined that the functions of supplying, servicing, and maintaining, in combination, include the major elements of what is referred to as "logistics."

The Senate amendment contained provisions (sections 201, 301, and 401) that would specify seven responsibilities of the Secretary of a Military Department to the Secretary of Defense.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 404) that would specify two responsibilities for the Secretary of a Military Department. One of these responsibilities is identical to one specified by the Senate amendment. The other responsibility would require the Secretary of a Military Department to ensure the operational readiness of forces under his jurisdiction.

The House recedes.

The Senate amendment contained provisions (sections 201, 301, and 401) that would specify other powers and duties of the Secretary of a Military Department.

The House amendment contained no similar provisions.

The House recedes.

Offices of the Secretaries of the Army, Navy, and Air Force

The Senate amendment contained provisions (sections 201, 301, and 401) that would:

(1) establish in law the Office of the Secretary of each Military Department;

(2) specify the function and composition of each Office;

(3) require the Secretary of each Military Department to ensure that his Office is not duplicating specific functions that he has assigned to the military headquarters staff or staffs of his Department; and

(4) require a 15-percent reduction by September 30, 1988 in the number of personnel assigned to each Office, use the number of personnel assigned to each Office on September 30, 1985 as the baseline for each reduction, and set this reduced personnel level as a permanent ceiling after such date.

The Senate amendment also contained provisions (sections 202, 302, 303, and 402) that would:

(1) require a 15-percent reduction by September 30, 1988 in the total number of personnel assigned to each of the Army Staff, the Office of the Chief of Naval Operations, the Headquarters, Marine Corps, and the Air Staff; use the number of personnel assigned to each staff on September 30, 1985 as the baseline for each reduction; and set this reduced personnel level as a permanent ceiling for each staff after such date; and

(2) limit the number of officers that may be assigned after September 30, 1988 as follows:

(A) the Office of the Secretary of the Army and the Army Staff—1,825 officers;

(B) the Office of the Chief of Naval Operations—1,300 officers;

(C) the Headquarters, Marine Corps—325 officers; and

(D) the Office of the Secretary of the Air Force and the Air Staff—1,575 officers.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 401) that would:

(1) require the Secretary of Defense to reorganize the executive part of each Military Department in accordance with policies specified in section 401 of the House amendment;

(2) require a single integrated staff for the executive part of each Military Department;

(3) prohibit the organization of officers as a separate component within the single integrated staff (other than the personal staff of a Service Chief of Staff);

(4) require that the functional assignments of the assistant secretaries of the Military Departments be as uniform as possible across the Military Departments;

(5) specify that civilian political appointees shall not be placed in positions subordinate to military officers;

(6) direct that the size of the Military Department staffs be substantially reduced and that functions be shifted to appropriate joint staffs or to subordinate commands of the Military Departments;

(7) prohibit the abolishment or consolidation of functions relating to the reserve components with other elements of the staff (other than the consolidation of existing military staff and civilian staff functions relating to the reserve components);

(8) prohibit any future administrative reorganization of the Military Departments that are inconsistent with items (1) through (7); and

(9) specify that the authority of the Service Chief of Staff to exercise supervisory control over members of the Armed Forces under his jurisdiction, especially with respect to personnel matters, remains unchanged.

The House amendment also contained a provision (section 402) that would:

(1) specify the composition of the single integrated staff of each Military Department;

(2) provide that each Secretary of a Military Department and each Service Chief of Staff may have a personal staff of not more than 30 persons (not counting the Administrative Assistant and his staff);

(3) reduce the total number of personnel assigned to the single integrated staff in each Military Department by 15 percent from the combined number previously assigned to the Office of the Secretary of a Military Department and military headquarters staff or staffs; and

(4) require the Secretary of Defense to ensure that the personnel reduction required by item (3) results in a reduction in the number of persons assigned to duty in the Washington, D.C. area.

The House amendment also contained a provision (section 403) that would:

(1) require the Secretary of Defense to shift to the Joint Staff the operation and planning responsibilities in each Military Department that are duplicated by the Joint Staff; and

(2) require the Secretary of Defense and the Secretaries of the Military Departments to provide that functions that may be performed by subordinate commands outside the Washington, D.C. area are reassigned to those commands.

The House amendment also contained a provision (section 405) that would:

(1) require the implementation by September 30, 1987 of the integration of the top headquarters staffs of each Military Department and related personnel reductions;

(2) require the Secretary of Defense to submit a report on such implementation to Congress 30 days after implementation; and

(3) require such report to include a draft of legislation to make conforming changes to title 10 and other appropriate provisions of law.

The House amendment also contained a provision (section 406) that would define the term "Service Chief."

The House recedes with amendments to:

(1) require that each Office of the Secretary of a Military Department have sole responsibility for the following functions:

(A) acquisition;

(B) auditing;

(C) comptroller (including financial management);

(D) information management;

(E) inspector general;

(F) legislative affairs; and

(G) public affairs.

(2) require each Secretary of a Military Department to establish or designate a single office or other entity within his Office to conduct each function specified in item (1);

(3) provide that no office or other entity within the military headquarters staff or staffs may be established or designated to conduct any of the functions specified in item (1);

(4) require each Secretary of a Military Department to prescribe the relationship of each office or other entity established or designated under item (2) to the Chief of Staff and to the military headquarters staff or staffs;

(5) require each Secretary of a Military Department to ensure that each office or other entity established or designated under item (2) provides the Chief of Staff such staff support as the Chief of Staff considers necessary to perform his duties and responsibilities;

(6) specify that the vesting in each Office of the Secretary of a Military Department of the responsibility for the conduct of a function specified in item (1) does not preclude other elements of the executive part of the Military Department (including the military headquarters staff or staffs) from providing advice or assistance to the Chief of Staff or otherwise participating in that function within the executive part of the Department under the direction of the office assigned responsibility for that function in the Office of the Secretary of a Military Department;

(7) require that each Office of the Secretary of a Military Department have sole responsibility for the function of research and development, except that the Secretary may assign to the military headquarters staff or staffs those aspects of the function of research and development that relate to military requirements and test and evaluation;

(8) require each Secretary of a Military Department to establish a single office within his Office to conduct the function of research and development and to specify the relationship of such office to the Service Chief of Staff;

(9) require implementation of items (1) through (8) not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of the conference substitute amendment;

(10) require a report to the Congress from each Secretary of a Military Department on the implementation of items (1) through (8) not later than 210 days after the date of enactment of the conference substitute amendment;

(11) require each Secretary of a Military Department to ensure that his Office and the military headquarters staff or staffs of his Military Department do not duplicate specific functions for which he has assigned responsibility to the other;

(12) require a 15-percent reduction by September 30, 1988 in the combined number of personnel assigned to the Office of the Secretary of a Military Department and the military headquarters staff or staffs in each Military Department, use the number of personnel assigned to the Office and staff or staffs in each Military Department on September 30, 1986 (instead of 1985) as the baseline for each reduction, and set the reduced level as a permanent ceiling;

(13) limit the number of officers that may be assigned after September 30, 1988 as follows:

(A) the Office of the Secretary of the Army and the Army Staff—1,865 officers;

(B) the Office of the Secretary of the Navy, the Office of the Chief of Naval Operations, and the Headquarters, Marine Corps—1,720 officers; and

(C) the Office of the Secretary of the Air Force and the Air Staff-1,585 officers.

(14) require a 15-percent reduction by September 30, 1988 in the combined number of general and flag officers assigned to the Office of the Secretary of a Military Department and the military headquarters staff or staffs in each Military Department, use the number of general and flag officers assigned on the date of enactment as the baseline for each reduction, and set the reduced level as a permanent ceiling;

(15) establish in law the position of the General Counsel of each Military Department; and

(16) amend subsections (c) and (d) of existing section 3031 of title 10 to delete the authority for, and limitations on, the Army General Staff.

In designating functions for which each Office of the Secretary of a Military Department should have sole responsibility, the conferees selected functions that are either civilian in nature or key to effective civilian control. Although such offices would exist solely in the Secretariats of each Military Department, the conferees intend that such offices would provide necessary support to all organizations of the executive part of the Military Department concerned. In particular, the conferees fully expect that the Chief of Staff will have full access to these offices and that they will be completely responsive to his needs for support and assistance. Several of these functions are already consolidated in the Office of the Secretary of a Military Department. Under current practice, a deputy or another senior official in each office works closely with the Chief of Staff to ensure that his needs are met. The conferees expect that this practice will continue in existing consolidated offices and may be used in newly consolidated offices.

The conferees intend that the function of comptroller, for which each Office of the Secretary of a Military Department would have sole responsibility, need not include the functions of requirements and programs.

Sections 3014(c)(2), 5014(c)(2), and 8014(c)(2) of title 10 (as added by sections 501, 511, and 521 of the conference substitute amendment) provide that no office within the military headquarters staff or staffs may be established or designated to conduct any of the seven functions for which the Office of the Secretary of the Military Department is assigned sole responsibility. The conferees selected the language "no office" with care. The intent of the conferees is that no office within the military headquarters staff may be established, designated, or dedicated to performing any of these functions on a permanent basis. However, officers, officials, or members of the Armed Forces assigned to a military headquarters staff may provide advice or assistance to the Chief of Staff or otherwise participate in a function under the direction of the office assigned responsibility for that function in the Office of the Secretary of a Military Department.

In agreeing that no office shall be "established or designated" within the military headquarters staff to conduct functions which are the sole responsibility of the Office of the Secretary of a Military Department, the conferees intend "designated" to mean a formal designation of an existing office as responsible for such a function. The conferees do not intend that the mere direction to an office to provide advice or assistance or otherwise temporarily participate in a function is a designation within the meaning of this provision.

The conferees recognize that the consolidation of functions within the Office of each Secretary of a Military Department will pose unique problems for the Department of the Navy because of the existence of two separate Armed Forces within that Department—the Navy and the Marine Corps. The conferees want it clearly understood that nothing in the legislation is intended to impair the ability of the Commandant of the Marine Corps to carry out his responsibilities to the Secretary of the Navy to organize, train, and equip Fleet Marine Forces of combined arms, together with supporting air components, for service with the fleet, or any other of his responsibilities under section 5203 of title 10 (as added by section 513 of the conference substitute amendment).

With regard to the seven functions for which the Office of the Secretary of the Navy is to have sole responsibility, the conferees recognize that certain aspects of those functions are unique to the interests of the Marine Corps. The conferees intend that the performance of these functions should fully recognize, as the Commandant considers to be appropriate, the particular interests of the Marine Corps and should fully enable the Commandant to represent those interests in the same manner as the other Chiefs of Staff are able to represent the particular interests of their Armed Force.

In this regard, the conferees appreciate that particular care must be taken by the Secretary of the Navy to ensure that the Marine Corps, which has fewer personnel to devote to staff duty than the Navy, receives evenhanded treatment in organizing, manning, establishing work priorities, and otherwise structuring and operating the consolidated offices. The conferees determined that consolidated offices should include appropriate numbers of Marine generals and other Marine officers to ensure that the interests of the Marine Corps will be represented and that the Commandant will receive appropriate support from these offices.

The conferees also intend that the Headquarters, Marine Corps, shall have an appropriate share of the total number of general officers, other members of the Armed Forces, and civilian employees of the Department of the Navy authorized in section 5014(f) of title 10 (as added by section 511 of the conference substitute amendment) for the Office of the Secretary of the Navy, the Office of the Chief of Naval Operations, and the Headquarters, Marine Corps.

With respect to the actions of the conference committee concerning the function of research and development, the conferees intend that each Office of the Secretary of a Military Department should have an augmented role in the research and development activities of the Military Department concerned. In particular, the conferees agreed that there is a need for more effective policy and resource oversight by each Office in the initial phases of research and development programs.

The conferees determined that consolidation of the function of acquisition in each Office of the Secretary of a Military Department was consistent with the recommendations of the President's Blue Ribbon Commission on Defense Management.

The conferees agreed that each Service should have a separate military headquarters staff within the executive part of its Military Department. This staff should continue to conduct the functions for which effective representation of the military point of view is invaluable to the work of the Military Department. Key among these functions are:

(1) manpower and personnel;
(2) logistics;
(3) installations;
(4) operations and plans;
(5) requirements and programs;
(6) intelligence; and
(7) command, control, and communications.

The conferees agreed that the continued existence of separate military headquarters staffs will ensure that defense decisionmaking is assisted by independent and well-developed military perspectives.

Although the conferees determined that the Office of the Secretary and the military headquarters staff or staffs of each Military Department should remain separately organized, the conferees remain concerned about the unnecessary duplication of effort between these Offices and staffs. Sections 3014(e), 5014(e), and 8014(e) of title 10 (as added by sections 501, 511, and 521 of the conference substitute amendment) would require each Secretary of a Military Department to eliminate such duplication. The conferees expect the Secretaries of the Military Departments to take this responsibility seriously. The 15-percent reductions in the total number of personnel assigned to the top management headquarters are designed, in part, to force a comprehensive management review of such duplication and the formulation of effective solutions.

The conferees also remain concerned about two other problems:

(1) the significant number of personnel assigned to duty in the Washington, D.C. area; and

(2) duplication by the military headquarters staffs of each Military Department of operations and plans functions that are performed by the Joint Staff.

In implementing subsections (c), (d), (e), and (f) of sections 3014, 5014, and 8014 of title 10 (as added by sections 501, 511, and 521 of the conference substitute amendment), the Secretaries of the Military Departments shall take appropriate action to solve these problems. In the implementation reports that would be required by section 532(b) of the conference substitute amendment, the conferees agreed to direct each Secretary of a Military Department to inform the Congress on:

(1) the number of personnel positions that have been transferred to duty positions outside the Washington, D.C. area;

(2) the functions that have been reassigned to subordinate commands and organizations outside the Washington, D.C. area;

(3) the aspects of the functions of operations and plans that are required to be performed by the military headquarters staff or staffs of the Military Department;

(4) the aspects of the functions of operations and plans that were previously performed by the military headquarters staff or staffs of the Military Department that duplicated aspects of the functions performed by the Joint Staff and that will no longer be performed by the military headquarters staff or staffs of the Military Department; and

(5) the number of personnel positions that have been eliminated in the military headquarters staff or staffs in the Military Department as a result of the determinations in item (4).

The conferees agreed to delete the authority for, and limitations on, the Army General Staff because the Army no longer uses this staff designation. Thus, statutory specification of the Army General Staff is no longer needed.

Under Secretaries of the Army, Navy, and Air Force

The Senate amendment contained provisions (sections 201, 301, and 401) that would:

(1) require the Under Secretary of a Military Department to be appointed from civilian life by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate; and

(2) specify that the Under Secretary of a Military Department shall perform such duties and exercise such powers as the Secretary of the Military Department may prescribe.

The House amendment contained no similar provisions.

The House recedes.

Assistant Secretaries of the Army, Navy, and Air Force

The Senate amendment contained provisions (sections 201, 301, and 401) that would:

(1) require the Assistant Secretaries of a Military Department to be appointed from civilian life by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate;

(2) authorize five Assistant Secretaries for the Army, four Assistant Secretaries for the Navy, and three Assistant Secretaries for the Air Force;

(3) specify that the Assistant Secretaries of a Military Department shall perform such duties and exercise such powers as the Secretary of the Military Department may prescribe;

(4) require each Military Department to have an Assistant Secretary for Manpower and Reserve Affairs; and

(5) require the Army to have an Assistant Secretary for Civil Works.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 402(b)) that would:

(1) specify seven areas of responsibility to be assigned to the Assistant Secretaries of each Military Department;

(2) specify that the civil works function is to be assigned to an Assistant Secretary of the Army; and

(3) authorize five Assistant Secretaries for the Army, four Assistant Secretaries for the Navy, and four Assistant Secretaries for the Air Force.

The House recedes.

Successors to Duties of Secretary of a Military Department

The Senate amendment contained provisions (sections 201, 301, and 401) that would specify the successors to the duties of the Secretary of a Military Department if he dies, resigns, is removed from office, is absent, or is disabled.

The House amendment contained no similar provisions.

The House recedes.

General Counsels

As part of the conference agreement on provisions relating to each Office of the Secretary of a Military Department, the conferees agreed to establish in law the position of General Counsel in each Military Department. Sections 3019, 5019, and 8019 of title 10 (as added by sections 501, 511, and 521 of the conference substitute amendment) would:

(1) establish the position of General Counsel in each Military Department;

(2) require each General Counsel of a Military Department to be appointed from civilian life by the President; and

(3) specify that the General Counsel of a Military Department shall perform such functions as the Secretary of the Military Department may prescribe.

The action of the conference committee merely recognizes in law a position that already exists in each Military Department and eliminates confusion caused by the absence of statutory specification.

Inspector Generals

The Senate amendment contained provisions that would:

(1) assign the Inspector Generals of the Army, Navy, and Air Force to the Office of the Secretary of their Military Department; and

(2) establish in law the position of Inspector General of the Air Force and specify his assignment and duties.

The House amendment contained no similar provisions.

The House recedes with an amendment to require the Inspector Generals of the Army, Navy, and Air Force to cooperate fully with the Inspector General of the Department of Defense in the performance of any of his duties or responsibilities under the Inspector General Act of 1978.

Army Reserve Forces Policy Committee and the Air Reserve Forces Policy Committee

The Senate amendment contained provisions (sections 201 and 401) that would amend sections 3021 and 8021 (as redesignated, respectively, by sections 501 and 521 of the conference substitute amendment) to assign responsibility to the Army Reserve Forces Policy Committee and the Air Reserve Forces Policy Committee for review and comment on policies for mobilization preparedness.

The House amendment contained no similar provisions.

The House recedes.

Repeal of Chapters

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 301(c)(3)) that would repeal chapter 505 (Secretary, Under Secretary, and Assistant Secretaries of the Navy) and chapter 507 (Office of the Comptroller of the Navy) of title 10.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

SEC. 502. THE ARMY STAFF; SEC. 512. OFFICE OF THE CHIEF OF NAVAL OPERATIONS; SEC. 513. HEADQUARTERS, MARINE CORPS; AND SEC. 522. THE AIR STAFF

Top Military Headquarters Staffs of the Army, Navy, Marine Corps, and Air Force

The Senate amendment contained provisions (sections 202, 302, 303, and 402) that would establish in law the top military headquarters staff of each Armed Force and specify its function and composition. These provisions would also specify that each such staff, except as otherwise prescribed by law, shall be organized, and its members shall perform such duties and have such titles, as the Secretary of the Military Department may prescribe.

The House amendment contained no similar provisions.

The House recedes.

General Duties

The Senate amendment contained provisions (sections 202, 302, 303, and 402) that would specify the general duties of the top military headquarters staff of each Armed Force.

The House bill contained no similar provisions.

The House recedes with amendments to:

(1) make performance of the first of these general duties subject to subsections (c) and (d) of sections 3014, 5014, and 8014 of title 10 (as added, respectively, by sections 501, 511, and 521 of the conference substitute amendment); and

(2) clarify the authority of these staffs to coordinate the action of organizations of their Armed Force.

Chiefs of Staff

The Senate amendment contained provisions (sections 202, 302, 303, and 402) that would specify the appointment, term of office, and powers and duties of the Chief of Staff of the Army, Chief of Naval Operations, Commandant of the Marine Corps, and Chief of Staff of the Air Force.

The House amendment contained no similar provisions.

The House recedes with amendments to:

(1) ensure that keeping the Secretary of a Military Department informed on advice rendered by a JCS member, under section 151 of title 10 (as added by section 201 of the conference substitute amendment), on matters affecting his Department does not lessen the independence of the Chief of Staff in performing his JCS duties;

(2) make the requirement of keeping the Secretary of a Military Department fully informed of significant military operations subject to the authority, direction, and control of the Secretary of Defense; and

(3) specify that the obligation of the Chief of Staff to keep the Secretary of a Military Department informed on significant military operations is with respect to matters affecting the responsibilities of the Secretary.

Retirement of the Chief of Naval Operations and the Commandant of the Marine Corps

The Senate amendment contained provisions (sections 302 and 303) that would reenact the provisions of title 10 (sections 5083 and 5201(c)) related to the retirement of the Chief of Naval Operations and the Commandant of the Marine Corps that existed at the time the Senate amendment passed the Senate.

The House amendment contained no similar provisions.

The Senate recedes. Section 104 of the Military Retirement Reform Act of 1986 (Public Law 99-348) repealed the last sentence of both sections 5083 and 5201(c). The effect of the Senate receding would be to reenact sections 5083 and 5201(c) as amended by Public Law 99-348.

In examining sections 5083 and 5201(c), the conferees noted inconsistencies between these provisions and other provisions of title 10, especially sections 3962 and 8962, concerning the retirement of officers who are serving, or have served, in a position for which the grade is specified in law. The conferees agreed to direct the Secretary of Defense to submit a legislative proposal, as part of the submission required by section 604 of the conference substitute amendment, to make consistent or appropriately amend the retirement provisions for all officers serving or having served in positions for which the grade is specified in law.

Qualifications for Appointment as Chief of Staff

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 111) that would provide that the President may assign to serve as members of the Joint Chiefs of Staff only officers who have served in one or more joint duty positions for a substantial period of time. The provision would also provide a waiver of this requirement in the case of any officer if the President determines that such action is necessary in the national interest.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 301) that would require the Secretary of Defense to establish policies to ensure, whenever practicable, the application of certain criteria to the selection of an officer for recommendation to the President for assignment as the Chief of Staff of an Armed Force. The specified criteria would be that the officer have had significant experience in joint duty assignments and that such experience include at least one joint duty assignment as a general or flag officer.

The Senate recedes with amendments to require that the President may assign an officer to serve as a Chief of Staff only if he meets the criteria specified in the House provision, to provide a waiver of this requirement if the President determines that such action is necessary in the national interest, and to provide appropriate transition provisions for use by the President before full application of these new requirements. The transition provision is provided in section 532(c) of the conference substitute amendment.

Principal Naval Adviser

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 302) which would have the effect of repealing existing section 5081(d) that provides:

The Chief of Naval Operations is the principal naval adviser to the President and to the Secretary of the Navy on the conduct of war, and the principal naval adviser and naval executive to the Secretary on the conduct of the activities of the Department of the Navy.

The House amendment contained a provision (section 601(d)) that would strike out "to the President and" from section 5081(d) of title 10.

The House recedes.

Vice Chiefs of Staff

The Senate amendment contained provisions (sections 202, 302, 303, and 402) that would specify the appointment and powers and duties of each Vice Chief of Staff and the succession to the duties of the Chief of Staff.

The House amendment contained no similar provisions.

The House recedes.

Deputy and Assistant Chiefs of Staff

The Senate amendment contained provisions (sections 202, 302, 303, and 402) that would:

(1) authorize not more than four Deputy Chiefs of Staff for each Armed Force;

(2) authorize not more than three Assistant Chiefs of Staff for each Armed Force; and

(3) specify the assignment of the Deputy and Assistant Chiefs of Staff.

The House amendment contained no similar provisions.

The House recedes with amendments to authorize not more than five Deputy Chiefs of Staff for each Armed Forces and to establish in law the position of Chief of Staff of the Marine Corps.

SEC. 503. AUTHORITY TO ORGANIZE ARMY INTO COMMANDS, FORCES, AND ORGANIZATIONS; AND SEC. 523. AUTHORITY TO ORGANIZE AIR FORCE INTO SEPARATE ORGANIZATIONS

The Senate amendment contained provisions (sections 203 and 403) that would clarify the authority of the Secretaries of the Army and Air Force to organize the Army and Air Force.

The House amendment contained no similar provisions.

The House recedes.

SEC. 514. TECHNICAL AND CLERICAL AMENDMENTS

Section 514 of the conference substitute amendment amends title 10 to make appropriate conforming and technical changes to implement the actions of the conference committee relating to part B of title V of the conference substitute amendment.

SEC. 531. CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

Section 531 of the conference substitute amendment amends title 10 and title 37 to make appropriate conforming changes to implement the actions of the conference committee relating to parts A, B, and C of title V of the conference substitute amendment.

SEC. 532. TRANSITION

The conferees agreed to two transition provisions that would:

(1) require implementation of subsections (c) and (d) of sections 3014, 5014, and 8014 of title 10 (as added by sections 501, 511, and 521 of the conference substitute amendment) not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of the conference substitute amendment; and

(2) require each Secretary of a Military Department to submit a report on such implementation 30 days after implementation.

The conferees also agreed to a transition provision for use by the President before the requirements for appointment as a Chief of Staff become fully effective. The provision authorizes the President to waive for 4 years:

(1) the requirement for a 3-year joint duty tour if the Chief of Staff has served in a joint duty assignment for not less than 2 years; and

(2) the requirement that a Chief of Staff have served in a joint duty assignment as a general or flag officer if the Chief of Staff served as a general or flag officer in an assignment that was considered a joint duty assignment or a joint equivalent assignment under regulations in effect at the time the assignment began.

TITLE VI—MISCELLANEOUS

SEC. 601. REDUCTION IN PERSONNEL ASSIGNED TO MANAGEMENT HEADQUARTERS ACTIVITIES AND CERTAIN OTHER ACTIVITIES

Military Departments and Combatant Commands

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 501) that would require a 10-percent reduction by September 30, 1988 in the total number of military and civilian personnel assigned to headquarters staffs within the Military Departments and combatant commands. The provision would:

(1) exclude each Office of the Secretary of a Military Department, the Army and Air Staffs, the Office of the Chief of Naval Operations, and the Headquarters, Marine Corps, because other provisions of the Senate amendment would require personnel reductions in these organizations,.

(2) use the personnel strengths of these staffs on September 30, 1985 as the baseline for reductions;

(3) require the Secretary of Defense to allocate the reductions;

(4) prohibit accomplishment of the reductions by recategorizing or redefining duties, functions, offices, or organizations;

(5) authorize each combatant commander to determine how reductions allocated to his command would be accomplished;

(6) prohibit further increases beyond the reduced personnel levels; and

(7) define the terms applied to headquarters staff.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with two amendments. The first amendment requires the 10-percent reduction to be applied to the total number of personnel assigned on September 30, 1986 instead of September 30, 1985. The second House amendment excludes the immediate headquarters staff of each unified and specified combatant commander from the required personnel reductions.

Defense Agencies and Department of Defense Field Activities

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 117) that would require a 15-percent reduction by September 30, 1988 in the total number of civilian and military personnel assigned to the headquarters staffs of Defense Agencies and Department of Defense Field Activities and a 10-percent reduction in non-headquarters personnel. The provision would:

(1) use the personnel strengths of these elements on September 30, 1985 as the baseline for reductions;

(2) require the Secretary of Defense to allocate the reductions among the agencies and activities in a manner consistent with the efficient operation of the Department of Defense;

(3) prohibit the accomplishment of the reductions by recategorizing or redefining duties, functions, offices, or organizations;

(4) exempt the National Security Agency from the required personnel reductions; and

(5) define the terms applied to headquarters staffs.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with seven amendments to:

(1) require that the reductions be applied to the total number of personnel assigned on September 30, 1986 instead of September 30, 1985.

(2) require only 5-percent reductions by September 30, 1988 for both headquarters personnel and non-headquarters personnel;

(3) require an additional 10-percent reduction in the total number of headquarters personnel assigned on September 30, 1988, to be completed by September 30, 1989, and a corresponding 5-percent reduction in the total number of non-headquarters personnel;

(4) allow any reductions in headquarters personnel and non-headquarters personnel in excess of those required by September 30, 1988 to be applied to the reductions of headquarters and non-headquarters personnel required by September 30, 1989;

(5) allow any reductions of headquarters personnel or non-headquarters personnel in excess of those required by September 30, 1988 or September 30, 1989 to be applied to the required reductions in personnel in the other category;

(6) authorize the Secretary of Defense, if he determines that national security requirements dictate such action, to allocate part or all of the reductions to headquarters or non-headquarters activities in the Department of Defense other than the Defense Agencies and Department of Defense Field Activities;

(7) specify that personnel reductions required by section 601 of the conference substitute amendment are in addition to any reductions required to be made by other provisions of the conference substitute amendment.

The conferees agreed that the principal effect of the second and third House amendments would be to delay the total reductions required by the Senate amendment for 1 year.

The conferees noted that the Senate provision would afford the Secretary latitude in applying the personnel reductions among the various agencies and activities. He would be authorized, for example, to exempt any Defense Agency or Department of Defense Field Activity from personnel reductions. The House amendments increase the discretion allowed the Secretary. He could allocate all or part of the personnel reductions required in the Defense Agencies and Department of Defense Field Activities to other elements of the Department of Defense.

The conferees expect the Secretary of Defense to take advantage of the latitude afforded him by the conference substitute amendment to make selective, rather than across-the-board, reductions. Organizations with expanding functions and limited personnel, such as the Defense Technology Security Administration, should be exempted; reductions should be concentrated in areas where duplication and overstaffing exist. In particular, the Secretary should consider demonstrable efficiency in, or improved performance by, a Defense Agency or Department of Defense Field Activity as an important factor in exempting agencies or activities from personnel reductions.

The conferees believe that streamlining the acquisition activities of the Military Departments should be a principal source of personnel reductions, if reductions are allocated to elements of the Department of Defense other than the Defense Agencies and Department of Defense Field Activities.

SEC. 602. REDUCTION OF REPORTING REQUIREMENTS

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 503) that would waive, effective on January 1, 1987, the statutory requirement for the submission to Congress by the President or Department of Defense officials of several hundred defense-related reports, notifications, and studies. The provision would exempt from the waiver (1) any provision of law enacted on or after the date of enactment of the Senate amendment; and (2) 149 current reporting requirements listed in 84 entries in the Senate provision.

The House amendment contained a similar provision (section 503). The House recedes with three amendments. The first House amendment affirms that it is the policy of Congress to reduce the administrative burden placed on the Department of Defense by outdated, redundant, or otherwise unnecessary reporting requirements.

The second House amendment requires the Secretary of Defense:

(1) to compile a list of all periodic reports, notifications, and studies currently required to be submitted by the President or Department of Defense officials;

(2) to submit the list to Congress with certain information on each item on the list, including the Secretary's recommendation as to whether the requirement should be retained, modified, or repealed; and

(3) to include a draft of the legislation necessary for the elimination of the reporting requirements recommended by the Secretary.

The third House amendment waives the reporting requirements contained in title 32, United States Code, and exempts additional reports from the waiver.

SEC. 603. ANNUAL REPORT ON NATIONAL SECURITY STRATEGY

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 502) that would require the President to submit an annual report to the Senate Committees on Armed Services and Foreign Relations and the House Committees on Armed Services and Foreign Affairs on the national security strategy of the United States.

The House amendment contained a similar provision (section 501) that would require that the report also be submitted to the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence and the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence.

The House recedes with an amendment to require that the report be submitted to Congress (rather than committees of Congress).

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 103(a)(2)) that would amend section 133(e) of title 10 to require the annual report to the Congress from the Secretary of Defense (required by such subsection) to include a presentation of major military missions, of the relationship of those missions to the foreign policy and military force structure of the United States, and a justification for those missions.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with amendments to:

(1) delete the requirement that the report from the Secretary of Defense include a presentation of United States foreign policy and related matters;

(2) delete the requirement that the Secretary of Defense consult with the Secretary of State before submitting the report; and

(3) require the Secretary of Defense, in preparing his report, to take into consideration the content of the annual national security strategy report of the President under section 104 of the National Security Act of 1947 (as added by section 603 of the conference substitute amendment).

The conferees determined that there was no longer a requirement for the Secretary of Defense to include in his report a presentation of United States foreign policy. The national security strategy report of the President will discuss foreign policy. Thus, the conferees agreed only to require the Secretary of Defense, in preparing his report, to take into consideration the content of the President's report. By these changes, the President's report will present the U.S. national security strategy, and the Secretary's report will discuss key elements of the military strategy component of the national security strategy.

SEC. 604. LEGISLATION TO MAKE REQUIRED CONFORMING CHANGES IN LAW

The Senate amendment contained a provision (section 504) that would provide that the provisions of the Senate amendment take effect no later than 180 days after enactment.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The Senate recedes with an amendment to require the Secretary of Defense to submit draft legislation to make any technical and conforming changes that are required or should be made by reason of the amendments made by the conference substitute amendment.

The conferees agreed that the provisions of the conference substitute amendment should be effective on the date of enactment except where otherwise specified.

SEC. 605. GENERAL TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS

Section 605 of the conference substitute amendment amends title 10 to make general technical changes to implement the actions of the conference committee relating to titles I, II, and III of the conference substitute amendment.

AMENDMENTS

Under clause 6 of rule XXIII, proposed amendments were submitted as follows:

H.R. 2482

By Mr. HATCHER:

—Section 105 (Reregistration of Registered Pesticides) of H.R. 2482 is amended as follows:

By deleting (j)(4)(C) on page 40 and adding a new subsection (j)(4)(C) as follows:

"(i) Notwithstanding any other provision of this subsection, in the case of a small business registrant of a pesticide, the registrant shall pay a fee for the reregistration of each active ingredient of the pesticide that does not exceed an amount determined in accordance with this subparagraph.

"(ii) If during the 3-year period prior to reregistration the average annual gross revenue of the registrant from pesticides containing such active indgredient is—

"(I) less than $5,000,000, the registrant shall pay 0.5 percent of such revenue;

"(II) $5,000,000 or more but less than $10,000,000, the registrant shall pay 1 percent of such revenues; or

"(III) $10,000,000 or more, the registrant shall pay 1.5 percent of such revenue, but not more than $150,000.

"(iii) For the purpose of the subparagraph, a small business registrant is a corporation, partnership, or unincorporated business that—

"(I) has 150 or fewer employees; and

"(II) during the 3-year period prior to reregistration, had an average annual gross revenue from pesticides that did not exceed $40,000,000.

—Section 807 (Expiration of State Primary Enforcement Responsibility) of H.R. 2482 is amended as follows:

By adding the term "appropriate" after the word "impose" in line 13 of page 129 of the Bill, and by substituting the phrase "which should be sufficient to act as a reasonable deterrent" for the phrase "at least equal to those provided in Section 14" in line 14 of page 129.

By Mr. HOYER:

—Page 137, redesignate section 816 as section 817 and insert before line 8 the following:

SEC. 816. NOTICES.

Section 26 (7 U.S.C. 136w-1) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(d) NOTICES.—

"(1) This Act shall not be construed to prohibit any political subdivision of a State from adopting or enforcing a requirement for the public notification of pesticide use.

SEC. 829. PESTICIDE RESISTANCE MANAGEMENT PROGRAM.

(a) PROGRAM.—The Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency shall establish a Pesticide Resistance Management Program—

(1) to conduct research on pesticide resistance and pesticide resistance management techniques to control or reduce the development of pesticide resistance,

(2) to develop and demonstrate such management techniques, and

(3) in cooperation with the Secretary of Agriculture, to disseminate information obtained from the Program to appropriate entities, including growers and their organizations, manufacturers, pesticide advisors, pesticide applicators, State agriculture officials, and cooperative State extension services.

In establishing and conducting the Program the Administrator may, as appropriate, consult with the Science Advisory Panel established under section 25(d) of the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act.

(b) TRAINING REQUIREMENTS.—The Administrator may include training in pesticide resistance and pesticide resistance management techniques as part of the minimum standards established for commercial pesticide applicators by the Administrator under section 4(h) of the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

ALLEGATIONS AGAINST TWA

HON. WILLIAM (BILL) CLAY

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, as I am sure many Members are aware, during the past year, Trans World Airlines [TWA] has been embroiled in an ongoing labor dispute with its flight attendants over their wages and terms and conditions of employment. TWA's chairman, Mr. Carl Icahn, has repeatedly been accused of demanding harsher concessions from TWA's predominantly female employees than from the airline's pilots and ground crew. Charges of age and sex discrimination are presently being considered by the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. Now added to the continuing controversy over TWA's treatment of its employees, are charges of less than fair representation and opportunities for TWA's black employees. I submit for my colleagues attention, the following letter from the Kansas City, MO branch of the NAACP, which details their allegations against TWA.

NATIONAL ASSOCIATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF COLORED PEOPLE,
Kansas City, MO, June 17, 1986.

Mr. CARL C. ICAHN,
Chairman of the Board, Trans World Airlines, New York, NY.

DEAR MR. ICAHN: I am sure that the majority of white employees were both relieved and heartened by your promise of an "open door policy" in your June 12, 1986 letter to all TWA employees. They understood that you were talking to them. Black employees understand also. They understand that you are continuing and expanding upon an "open door policy" which has always existed for them . . . an open door with an EXIT sign.

The purpose of this letter is to provide you with the perspective of TWA's black employees; a perspective gained through discussion and feedback—system wide. I am writing because I am a black man; because I have held and continue to hold a wide range of responsible positions in business and within the community, and because I am a long-term TWA employee with a long standing concern with the issues of justice, morality and "equality," especially within the environment of the work place.

Notwithstanding TWA's past, I believe that the black employees of TWA viewed you as a "new hope," a chance for a "fresh start." They have always recognized the difficulty of the game and have striven to play on the same team, despite varying degrees of rejection and resentment. But since your arrival, black employees have been faced with increasing disillusionment; they have come to the realization that they will not be accepted or treated on a par with their white peers. To date, your "open door" policy has brought about the following:

Blacks now comprise less than 10% of the total work force.

Blacks comprise less than 4% of TWA management.

Black Directors have been reduced by 40%.

Black Staff Officers have been reduced by 33%.

TWA has only five (5) remaining blacks above the manager level; less than twenty-five (25) managers, and less than two hundred (200) total manager personnel out of more than 5,000.

The figures can be found in the Department of Labor statistical records which also bring to light that TWA remains the only major public corporation to have never had a black corporate officer and the only major airline to have never had a black captain.

Based on more recent actions, it seems clear that Equal Opportunity within TWA is meaningless and your disposition toward minorities and females in general and blacks in specific is affirmatively negative. While blacks in direct line for promotion are being passed over, reduced or eliminated, whites, including those related to you or your adventures, advance. There continues to be no one within the Company hierarchy willing to stand up to these serious issues. Those who have in the past have been shown the "open door." Dick Pearson and I talked on numerous occasions and for whatever faults he had, he did understand the serious problem of race relations within this Company and attempted to generate the beginnings of a solution, beginnings which you, Mr. Corr and the rest of your team have been racing at breakneck speed to extinguish.

Of course we have been through this before, so what is the point? Well, you may be shocked to know that black people are also consumers. They also travel on airplanes to the tune of $45,000,000 plus annually on TWA. With growing awareness, blacks are becoming less tolerant of, and more reluctant to spend their dollars with someone whom they cannot work as "equals." If we cannot attain a proportional representation within TWA, then we can withhold our patronage. I already know that like-minded support groups will rally behind such action. The Kansas City, Missouri Branch, NAACP voted unanimously at its membership meeting on Tuesday, June 17, 1986 to support all black workers at TWA and those who have been terminated. The decision of the NAACP membership was based on the number of complaints filed at our local branch office, and the ongoing under-utilization and lack of upward mobility of blacks within the Company.

For blacks at TWA, there is not a "new spirit;" rather, there is an old and ugly spirit with "new emphasis." As I have stated in previous corespondence to TWA's Board: "RACISM, individual or institutional, is a sickness which if not overcome can be just as deadly to the life of an institution as financial illness." You are quite correct that we are still an airline in crisis—terrorism aside. There is an internal corruption which will eventually bring about consumer action and employee public declaration of grievances against this Company in an official and appropriate forum. It will happen because what you are doing is wrong, you know it is wrong and you continue to do it.

This letter is not intended as a threat. It is intended to officially advise you and your "selected" board members of my belief of TWA's illegal actions toward its black employees in violation of their civil rights. The Board has a legal obligation to all stockholders to attempt to end such activities or to face the same "personal" liability as the majority stockholder.

The contents of this letter will be circulated to every black employee and ex-employee that can be contacted. Should you wish to discuss this subject through your "open door" policy, the ball is in your court.

With best wishes, I remain

ZELEMA HARRIS,
President.
EDWARD D. LEWIS,
Vice President.

THE U.S. SPACE AGENCY AND THE NEED FOR AGGRESSIVE LEADERSHIP

HON. GEORGE E. BROWN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues a letter submitted to James C. Fletcher, the Administrator of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration [NASA] from Daniel J. Fink, the Chairman of the NASA Advisory Council. I was impressed by Mr. Fink's correspondence, in which he addressed the council's concerns on issues critical to the effective revitalization of the American space program.

In the letter, the NASA Advisory Council breaks from its traditional role as budget analyst for NASA programs and expressed its "great concern as to whether NASA can any longer meet the mandate for national preeminence established by the National Aeronautics and Space Act." This assertion is particularly sobering in that the council is probably the most influential, nongovernmental advisory body of NASA. The council also accurately labels the effort to get the Nation back into space as "neither adequate nor sufficiently rapid." I believe Mr. Fink's statement has helped to crystalize the issues in a format that hopefully will charge the agency and Congress to take corrective action.

In examining the reasons that the council gives for NASA's shortfall, it is clear that Congress and the White House are equally or more to blame for the problems confronting the agency. In the correspondence, Mr. Fink identified several key problems: The Nation lacks long-range goals in space; NASA's technology base has been allowed to erode; the environment of confusion and uncertainty surrounding the space program was compounded by the delayed decision on a replacement shuttle orbiter; the budget demands of funding another orbiter could severely impede the rest of the NASA budget; and the lack of a rational plan to make available expendable launch vehicles [ELV's] to assure U.S. access to space.

The issues highlighted in the council recommendation to the administration are not new. In one form or another over the last few years, and especially over the past 8 months, these observations have been brought to light. The report of the National Commission on Space has provided the basis for aggressive long-range goals in space and suggested a threefold increase in funding for base technology. The Space Science Board of the National Academy of Sciences has voiced its strong concern that replacing the orbiter would have a negative effect on other parts of the NASA budget, particularly the space science programs. Congress has been concerned about the assured access to space issue for several years.

Some specific response to the NASA crisis is beginning to take form. The House space subcommittee has taken steps to fund a replacement orbiter and has recommended a comprehensive plan for assuring access to space by fostering a private ELV industry. The President's decision to replace the shuttle, but exclude commercial payloads from the future shuttle flights, is a beginning. The Senate space subcommittee has added $20 million in its NASA authorization bill for basic research into the next generation space vehicle. NASA, in anticipation of likely policy directives, has initiated programs designed to improve its space science and space technology base. While these and similar efforts should continue and be encouraged, they reflect a piecemeal approach to coping with a major national dilemma.

Mr. Chairman, in many respects, there is no program or effort more important to the future of this Nation and the world than the space program. The potential for utilizing space for science and application is, like outer space itself, without bound. The ultimate achievement, I believe, is to tap the resources of the solar system, both in terms of the economic prospects and the wealth of knowledge, for the benefit and enrichment of life on Earth.

NASA is a good agency with an unparalleled history of achievement. Unfortunately, for a number of years now they have been running full steam ahead with no road map or destination. The Congress and the White House have been negligent in their duty for not providing adequate long-term policy to guide the space agency. I think my colleagues generally concur with this observation. This deficiency has been recognized time and again for the last 10 years, by experts inside and outside the Government. Yet here we are, 8 months after the Challenger explosion, paralyzed, incapable or unable of providing the U.S. space agency with a national space policy or the long-term goals necessary for fulfilling that policy. If Congress and the President cannot provide the necessary leadership, NASA will continue to go its aimless way, until another major tragedy occurs. I don't wish to see this happen.

This policy paralysis, I fear, comes from the threatening cloud of the Gramm-Rudman budget crisis. The frustrating reality is that we are fully capable of approving a comprehensive space policy agenda, complete with a package of broad goals and detailed near-term objectives without appropriating a single dollar. When our Founding Fathers wrote the U.S. Constitution, it had nothing to do with the procurement of Trident submarines, or the issuing of food stamps. The actual writing and the signing of the Declaration of Independence was of little physical cost to the treasury. But the statements in those historic documents acted as guideposts for our early leaders, as they still do today.

It is a similar kind of policy statement that is needed for the space progam; one that will live through the centuries; one that will transcend the current wrangling over the deficit; and, most importantly, one that will instill the fire of motivation into a battered space agency to once again command the preeminent position in the global space adventure.

Therefore, I concur with Mr. Fink and the NASA Advisory Council that the delay in providing the Nation with a clear direction in space is unconscionable, especially when the dollar cost of formulating space policy is not at issue. The files of Congress and the executive branch are overrun with the building blocks of space policy. Now is the time to assemble the pieces into a policy statement that can take us into the 21st century and beyond. It is a deep regret that the Nation's leaders have not yet been able to do so.

Authoring space policy, however, will not be a simple or painless task. It will require contributions from Congress, the White House, NASA and other agencies, academia, educational organizations, and professional associations. There already exists a number of entities that could take part in the policymaking process, such as the National Security Council's Senior Interagency Group on Space, the National Academy of Sciences Space Science Board and Space Applications Board, the Space and Earth Science Advisory Council, and the NASA Advisory Council. Indeed, the expertise of these groups have proven their value consistently, year after year. Also, if Congress is successful, the National Aeronautics and Space Council, which was abolished in the Nixon administration, will be reestablished within the White House. Two documents serving as the likely basis for space policy formulation are the National Commission on Space and the report of the President's Commission on the shuttle Challenger accident.

If we are to achieve greatness as a spacefaring nation, a substantial monetary commitment is unavoidable. It will cost money for a replacement orbiter and to fund the necessary fixes before shuttle launches can resume. A reinvestment in our technology base will require funding increases. Space science, which has been choked in past years, will need sufficient funding in order to maintain a comprehensive program. Deploying the space station, America's permanent outpost in space, will not be an easy or inexpensive task. An aggressive space program and the pursuit of excellence is a national challenge that will not come cheaply.

Many of my colleagues are committed, as I am, to the revitalization of the space program. But, if we are to be leaders in structuring a far-reaching space effort, we must be aggressive risk takers. The space enterprise is too vital for us to allow it to fall into the mire of political morass. The kind of rejuvenated space program that is envisioned by most policymakers requires real funding increases over the next few years, followed by level steady funding. The words of President John F. Kennedy in his now famous 1961 "Moon" speech, still ring true today, "If we are to go only half way, or reduce our sights in the face of difficulty, in my judgment it would be better not to go at all . . . there is no sense in agreeing or desiring that the United States take an affirmative position in outer space, unless we are prepared to do the work and bear the burden to make it successful. If we are not, we should decide today and this year."

The NASA Advisory Council's correspondence with Dr. Fletcher is a cold splash, forcing us to look at the crisis in the American space program. I have provided below a copy of the NASA Advisory Council statement on the Nation's civil space program. I commend these insightful words to my colleagues for their consideration.

NASA Advisory Council Statement

The decade of the 1960s saw the Nation's civil space program flourish, with the Apollo program and its goal of placing a man on the moon by the end of the decade considered as a major element of national policy. National security (in the large sense) was well served, and public expectations were established and met as resources were provided to achieve the leadership in space science, technology, and exploration that were articulated in tne National Aeronautics and Space Act of 1958.

Over the past decade, however, the untempered public expectation for the Nation's preeminence in space has not been backed up with the requisite resources. We allowed the past investment in technology to be consumed without adequate renewal; a bow wave of exciting space science projects keeps being pushed forward into an uncertain future as projects are approved on a success-oriented project-by-project basis; the full orbiter fleet originally deemed necessary was not built; and the Nation's space program became increasingly vulnerable to just such a catastrophe as befell it. At the same time, the constancy of Soviet support for its space program has enabled that nation to fulfill an impressive longer-term vision, a harbinger of more achievements to come not widely reported to the American people.

It is time to reverse this erosion of leadership and realize our legislated mandate for national progress based on a far-reaching, well-planned space program. Funding adequate to meet these objectives must be provided. We urge that action be taken immediately to restore the national space launch capability, including funding of an orbiter to replace the Challenger, and the acquisition of a family of complementary expendable launch vehicles for use as appropriate. A set of long-range goals such as those articulated by the National Commission on Space should be adopted to guide renewed investments in space technology, as well as the ambitious space science program that are already envisioned by our scientific communities. In this way, NASA must lead the Nation into a new century of space endeavors and exploration that will be an inspiration for a new generation of Americans.

THE AIR FORCE SHOULD TERMINATE ITS CONTRACT WITH SHORT BROTHERS OF NORTHERN IRELAND

HON. MARIO BIAGGI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the 115 member bipartisan ad hoc Congressional Committee for Irish Affairs, I urge my colleagues to join me in cosigning a letter to Secretary of Defense Casper Weinberger urging that the Department of the Air Force terminate the remaining phases of a contract it currently has with Short Brothers Ltd. of Northern Ireland.

At the time that this contract was awarded in May 1984 a bipartisan delegation of House Members called on the Air Force to secure a commitment from Short Brothers that they would adhere to the provisions of their law—the Fair Employment Act—which seeks to provide equal employment opportunities for both communities in that troubled land. This request was refused and predictably the results are in.

Short Brothers is Northern Ireland's largest employer. In 1978 it had a work force of more than 5,000 workers. Less than 5 percent of the work force was Catholic. As of August 1986, the work force grew to 7,000 workers but the percentage of Catholic workers remained constant at 5 percent. Almost one-third of these new jobs were as a result of the Air Force contract yet, the inability to have them distributed to both communities means the United States is indirectly subsidizing continued discrimination in Northern Ireland.

I believe it is time we terminated this contract. It is inconsistent with new elements of our policy in Northern Ireland and is not contributing to a lasting political solution. If you wish to join as a cosigner of this letter please contact my office by close of business tomorrow.

The text of the draft letter follows:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, September 10, 1986.

Hon. CASPAR W. WEINBERGER,
Secretary, Department of Defense, the Pentagon, Washington, DC.

DEAR SECRETARY WEINBERGER: We are writing to urge that the Department of the Air Force terminate its contract with Short Brothers, Ltd., of Northern Ireland. We seek this due to the company's continuing policies which have resulted in blatant discrimination against the minority Catholic community in Northern Ireland.

On March 2, 1984, the Air Force announced that Short Brothers had been awarded two contracts under the European Distribution System Aircraft (EDSA) program. The total amount of the contract was estimated to be $150 million over a ten year period. It is our understanding that about half of these funds have in fact been obligated. We should urge the Air Force not to exercise its option to purchase additional aircraft from Short Brothers and terminate the contract.

You may recall at the time that this contract was awarded, a bi-partisan group of House and Senate members wrote to you to urge that the initial contract be amended to include a formal commitment from Short Brothers that they would adhere strictly to the Fair Employment Act of Northern Ireland with respect to all hiring and recruiting for jobs which would emanate from these contracts. Regrettably, this request was refused by the Air Force.

The fact is, since the time that the contract was awarded to Short Brothers, they have failed to meet the basic test of the Fair Employment Act by providing equality of opportunity for both communities in Northern Ireland. In 1978, Short Brothers, which is Northern Ireland's largest employer, had a workforce of over 5,000 persons. A total of 5 percent were Catholic. As of August, 1986 Short's total employment had increased to 7,000 persons, yet the percentage of Catholics has remained at 5 percent, despite the fact they comprise 38 percent of the population in Northern Ireland. It should also be noted that almost one third of the new jobs created were as a result of the Air Force contract.

With respect to recruiting policies, Short Brothers has actually regressed since the contract was signed. According to the Fair Employment Trust, during the nine months after Short Brothers secured the Defense Department contract, the proportion of Catholics recruited actually decreased by 2.6 percent despite the fact that the proportion of Catholic applicants increased from 17 to 26.6 percent.

In addition, Short Brothers refused for a period of five years to sign the Fair Employment Agency's declaration of intent to provide equality of opportunity in employment. In recent months, published reports have indicated that Short Brothers has allowed their facilities to be used by Unionist extremists for purely sectarian activities aimed at intimidating the minority employees of Short Brothers.

In our judgment, Short Brothers' policies and refusal to work toward improvements in expansion of opportunity for both communities is most disturbing. The Air Force contract was one of the largest ever won by Short Brothers. It is, therefore, incumbent upon the Department of Defense to terminate this contract before we allow any more United States taxpayer funds to be used to subsidize continued discrimination in Northern Ireland. Earlier this year, on a bipartisan basis, Congress approved legislation to provide a first time economic aid package for Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland. Central to this legislation are certain conditions and understandings of the distribution of the $120 million in U.S. aid over the next three years. This includes two provisions which we quote directly from the legislation:

"Disbursements from the fund—

(a) will be distributed in accordance with the principle of equality of opportunity and non-discrimination in employment without regard to religious affiliation.

"The President shall report to the Congress on the degree to which—

(2) the United States contribution to the fund is meeting the objectives of encouraging new investment job creation and economic reconstruction on the basis of strict equality of opportunity."

The ongoing Air Force contract with Short Brothers represents a glaring departure from current U.S. policy with respect to Northern Ireland and should be terminated on this basis as well as the aforementioned reasons.

We appreciate your prompt response.

TRIBUTE TO ASBURY UNITED METHODIST CHURCH OF WASHINGTON, DC, ON THE OCCASION OF ITS 150TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. RONALD V. DELLUMS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Speaker, I want today to recognize the 150th anniversary of Asbury United Methodist Church in Washington, DC. This church has had a long and distinguished history as a religious, educational, and social center in the black community of Washington, DC, since 1836.

The establishment of a Methodist church by a black congregation in 1836 is particularly significant when one considers that this was 27 years prior to the Emancipation Proclamation. The free people of color who founded this church, purchased the land at the current site of 11th and K Streets NW., and built a church in a time of racial adversity in this city, a time when slavery still existed here. The current distinctive gray stone church edifice was built in 1916, the place of worship of the 2,000-member congregation.

The far-sighted black leaders and members of Asbury valued freedom and education and used the church building to provide schooling at a time when there was no public education available for blacks in the city. The church housed schools for black children, later a high school, and adult night schools.

During the 20th century the church has continued to serve this community and the world by nurturing civic and religious leaders and providing financial assistance and sponsorship for mission efforts.

In 1936 on the occasion of Asbury Church's 100th anniversary, Mary Church Terrell, a Washington DC, civic leader, read the commendation of President Franklin Delano Roosevelt praising the congregation for contributions to black history.

In 1947 Asbury Church sponsored the first interracial housing in the city of Washington, an apartment building at 1619 R Street NW., the Raydon.

In 1948 the Asbury Federal Credit Union was the first in any church in the country.

In 1955 the then pastor Rev. Robert Morton Williams founded the Wesley Foundation at Howard University, the first of its kind on a black university campus.

In 1968 soon after the dedication of its educational building annex, Asbury began a free breakfast program for community schoolchildren.

In 1982 the Asbury-sponsored HUD section 202 housing for the elderly opened. This 147-unit housing development in a converted public school is a first for the Washington, DC, area.

In July 1982, Asbury sponsored and built a chaplain school in Monjama, Sierra Leone.

Asbury currently operates a weekly food pantry that distributes food to the hungry of Washington, DC.

Congratulations to the members of Asbury United Methodist Church for continuing the long, rich, legacy of service and contribution to this city and the world. Best wishes for another 150 years of dedicated service to Washington, DC, and the world.

TRIBUTE TO MONICA MORALES

HON. SOLOMON P. ORTIZ

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. ORTIZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to Monica Morales of Corpus Christi, TX. Monica is the national winner of the emerging Hispanic artists contest which is sponsored by McDonalds. A grand prize winner, Monica will visit Washington, DC next week to tour our Nation's capital and visit with Hispanic officials and diplomats.

It is a great honor for me to be the U.S. representative of this 7-year-old. Her winning picture depicted her upcoming eighth birthday party. It is drawn in magic markers and depicts herself, her mother, father, and grandmother at the party. A strawberry-shaped pinata hangs from the ceiling, and a birthday cake with candles is on the table. It is truly a great show of family unity.

Mr. Speaker, Monica won from a pool of over 1,200 entries. Her school, the Windsor Park Elementary School, is proud to claim this talented second grade student. I share that pride and am happy for her parents who will accompany her to Washington. Her picture will be displayed at the McDonald's emerging Hispanic artists exhibit at the Organization of American States Building here in Washington. I urge my colleagues to visit the exhibit and see this fine example of the contest's theme: "What My Hispanic Heritage Means to Me."

THE 40TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE FULBRIGHT PROGRAM

HON. DAN MICA

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. MICA. Mr. Speaker, this month marks the 40th anniversary of a program which has consistently generated goodwill between the people of the United States and those of 120 nations of the world. It is a program developed at the initiative of a Member of Congress who had a distinct vision for peace. His vision was to increase mutual understanding and assist the development of peaceful relations among nations through international exchange.

This program, and the vision of its creator, Senator J. William Fulbright, remains strong. Since 1946, more than 155,000 scholars have participated in the well-known and respected Fulbright Program. Over 54,000 of these participants have come from the United States. It is one of the finest, and best respected programs administered by the U.S. Information Agency in cooperation with a variety of private organizations.

Mr. Speaker, over the past several years, the Foreign Affairs Committee has attempted to examine which programs financed by the Federal Government contribute most to our Nation's overall public diplomacy effort abroad. In other words, which of the radio, television, educational exchange, arts, and speakers programs, contribute most to the world's knowledge and understanding of the United States and its policies. Consistently, the answer has been the educational exchange programs sponsored by the U.S. Information Agency. The most important of these is the Fulbright Program.

One of the strengths of the Fulbright Program is the bond of friendship it creates in many levels of society. Whether they be exchanges of teachers, professionals, artists, or other scholars and academics, Fulbright Programs create goodwill that lasts throughout the lifetime of a participant. In turn these academics and professionals can pass along their understanding of the United States to their students and colleagues, thus redoubling the benefits of a single exchange.

Foreign alumni of the Fulbright Program often become high-ranking officials in their own countries. These alumni include 30 Cabinet-level officials, 40 members of national legislative bodies, 10 Supreme Court Justices, 67 university presidents, 32 ambassadors, and even several Prime Ministers. These statistics demonstrate both the quality of the Fulbright participants and are also a reflection of the respect the program holds abroad.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Congress, led by the Committee on Foreign Affairs, has been able to lead the fight to increase our Government's support for the Fulbright Program. It is perhaps the finest reflection of our national priorities and of our Government's own vision of a peaceful future. I congratulate Senator Fulbright and those who work to implement the Fulbright Program on their fine record of accomplishment.

NATIONAL COUNCIL OF JEWISH WOMEN ON MOTHERS IN THE WORK FORCE

HON. WILLIAM (BILL) CLAY

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call to my colleagues attention a recent letter by Barbara Newmark amd Marlene Hammerman, president and vice president, respectively, of the National Council of Jewish Women, St. Louis section, which was published in the St. Louis Post-Dispatch on June 14, 1986. The National Council of Jewish Women has been an active supporter of issues benefiting today's working women. Their work and support have proven of great value to all American men and women.

The letter follows:

MOTHERS IN THE WORK FORCE

It is a fact that 60 percent of all women who work are mothers; that 80 percent of the women in the work force are of childbearing age; that, of these, 93 percent are likely to become pregnant during their work careers. Thus, three out of four women will experience pregnancy in their working lives. And the majority of these women will be back at work within one year.

These women will be back at work because it takes both parents working to maintain the standard of living that their parents enjoyed on one income. Or, they will be back at work because they are one of the 10.3 million families headed solely by a woman.

In order for families to provide for the emotional and economic well-being of their children, working parents should be able to know three things:

(1) how much time they will be able to take off for the care of their new children;

(2) that taking parental leave will not jeopardize their jobs;

(3) that if their child should become seriously ill, they would not be forced to choose between the health of the child and their job security.

The proposed Parental and Medical Leave Act of 1986 would guarantee time off for a newborn or adopted baby, would ensure job protection and would continue insurance benefits during the unpaid leave, a necessity in the event of a sick child. This will promote the stability and the security of American families so that job security or economic security will no longer be traded against the needs of the family.

The National Council of Jewish Women, St. Louis section, is currently involved with a monumental nationwide study entitled, "Mothers In The Workplace," which will help us to better understand the specific needs of working mothers. Current available research and long-time interest and involvement in family issues particularly related to women and children lead the National Council of Jewish Woman, St. Louis section, to endorse the Parental and Medical Leave Act of 1986 as a means of bridging the gap between work and home.

Vice President.

INCREASING THE BENEFITS OF INFORMATION TECHNOLOGIES TO OUR SOCIETY

HON. GEORGE E. BROWN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, we are now fully engulfed in the "information age." Almost every sector of our society has benefited by the explosion of information technologies; telecommunication technologies, data processing technologies, supercomputers and others. However, while these technologies have been developed at a rapid rate and assimilated into portions of our society at an equally rapid rate, the ability of these technologies has not been maximized, nor have our economic, educational or legal systems kept pace with the changes these technologies have brought to our society.

We are being confronted with a host of new legal and moral questions, which our current laws and policies simply haven't provided for.

Copyright issues resulting from the use of home video and tape recorders, computer crime, intellectual property rights, the use of computers in schools, the increasing demand for computer literate workers in the job market, proposals to restrict access to information—the list of issues which need to be addressed is growing every day. Yet, as policymakers, we haven't been able to broadly assess the impacts of information technologies upon our society, we have not been able to set our priorities, nor have we assured that we are focusing on the highest priority needs first.

While Congress has tried to respond to several issues individually, the result has been the development of a piecemeal and only partial set of Federal policies. Quite frankly, our Government and Federal policies have not kept up with the advancement of information technologies at all. According to the Library of Congress, from the 95th to the 98th Congress, we have passed some 283 laws which, broadly interpreted, fall into the area of information policy. This averages to some 60 to 70 laws per year and the numbers seem to be increasing. These laws have mandated Federal information systems, clearinghouses, or dissemination in some 99 different public law areas. These information management activities have ranged from radioactive materials, to biomass energy uses, to developing nations procurement opportunities, to elderly transport services, to runaways and homeless youth.

As our information services and communication abilities increased, so has our demand, and usually our dependency, on these services increased. And in may instances our society has greatly benefited. However, I would like to suggest today, that we have only just begun to use these new technologies and abilities to our benefit. The development of information services has often been conducted in a vacuum, for a specific use. Several needs are not being met. It is time we took a step back, assessed our current systems, services and abilities, and focus on how they could be expanded and used to meet the needs of a greater portion of our society.

Several studies have been conducted regarding the impact of information services upon our society, our changing needs, and areas where Federal policies have become obsolete or inadequate. Our own research organizations—the Office of Technology Assessment, and the Library of Congress—have put out some excellent reports. Yet, up until now, we have not taken the next step, that of developing a forum where industry, academia, and Government can focus on these issues and begin to develop a concensus on how to resolve some of these problems.

For years, I have called for the development of a body which could develop coherent, information policies. Since 1980, I have introduced legislation which would establish an Institute for Information Policy and Research. This institute would address national information policy issues, provide a forum for the interaction of Government, industry and commerce, and educational interests in the formulation of national information policy options. It would provide a focus and mechanism for planning and coordinating Federal research and development activities related to information science and technology, and create a new position of Special Assistant for Information Technology and Science Information.

However, I am willing to support a more moderate approach: The creation of a 2-year commission funded for the most part privately, which would:

First, create a forum for discussions and targeted research on the present and future impact of computer and communications systems on our Nation and its citizens; and

Second, present critical alternative views and choices to the President, Congress, and the public generally, so that such views and choices may serve as a catalyst for change, and maximize the benefits of the information age to our society.

This proposal, S. 786, to establish an Information Age Commission, was introduced by Senators NUNN and LAUTENBERG. The Information Age Commission would include representatives from industry, government at all levels, labor, and education to focus on the complexities and multifacited nature of our computer and communications society. Its report should serve as an invaluable resource to government, industry and educational policymakers, academics, business and labor leaders alike.

This proposal was considered and has been reported out of the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs. Shortly, I will join two of my esteemed colleagues from Georiga [Mr. SWINDALL and Mr. BARNARD] in proposing a similar bill in the House.

I encourage all of my colleagues to review and support this first step toward coming to grips with the information age. We can only benefit from it.

THE MacBRIDE PRINCIPLES—A CRITICAL TOOL IN THE BATTLE FOR ECONOMIC EQUITY IN NORTHERN IRELAND

HON. MARIO BIAGGI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, in my capacity as chairman of the 115-member bipartisan ad hoc Congressional Committee for Irish Affairs I have been long maintained that the solution to the problems in Northern Ireland must be a political one that promotes economic development for all.

In the past year, we have seen demonstrated progress on several fronts toward this goal. The British and Irish Governments gave their support to the so-called Anglo-Irish agreement which sets out a potential blueprint for a future political solution for Northern Ireland. However, most observers have cast great doubts on the ability of this agreement to work without some significant changes.

The United States has done its part without any question. Central to our involvement was the recent passage of two separate bills each earmarking first-time economic aid to Northern Ireland and Ireland. The first a $50 million fiscal year 1986 appropriation and the second was a 3-year $120 million authorization package. Each measure recognizes the importance of economic aid to the future of Northern Ireland. The authorization bill contains more critical language in the form of conditions and understandings on how the aid is to be distributed. This includes the fact that the aid is to benefit both communities in Northern Ireland and is to be distributed in a nondiscriminatory fashion.

The reason this language was needed in the legislation is because of the fact that blatent discrimination does exist in Northern Ireland. It is directed at the Catholic minority in the north, while Northern Ireland suffers from the highest unemployment rate in all of Western Europe at 22 percent, the situation is far more grave in certain cities where Catholics are in the majority. There in cities like Strabane and Derry unemployment rises to almost 60 percent.

For the past several years, a number of leading Irish political figures in Northern Ireland, the Republic of Ireland and here in the United States have been trying to address the problem of discrimination. Their particular attention has been focused on those American companies doing business in Northern Ireland. This effort has been led by the distinguished former Nobel Peace Price winner, Sean MacBride. Presently 24 American companies employ 11 percent of the manufacturing work force in Northern Ireland.

Under the leadership of Dr. MacBride, a series of principles have been developed and named the MacBride Principles. They are guidelines for fair employment in Northern Ireland. They are modeled after the Sullivan Principles developed in 1977 as an alternative to divestment in South Africa.

I strongly support the MacBride Principles and believe the United States has a special responsibility to combat the problem of discrimination in Northern Ireland. It is important to point out that support for these principles is not equivalent to supporting disinvestment in Northern Ireland. To the contrary its stated intent is to promote increased opportunities for employment within both communities. At the present time the prospects for additional job opportunities are there with the infusion of new aid including that provided by the United States. Adoption of the MacBride Principles by employers in Northern Ireland will go a long way toward ensuring that jobs are distributed in a nondiscriminatory fashion.

On Tuesday, September 4, the New York Times wrote an excellent article on the MacBride Principles which I wish to call to the attention of my colleagues. I believe the Congress should join with the several States who have adopted laws and or resolutions endorsing the MacBride Principles. As a long-time friend of Sean MacBride I commend him on his tireless efforts in this area. I also wish to pay tribute to the Irish National Caucus for their persistent campaign to raise the MacBride Principles as an important new element in American policy toward Ireland.

At this point in the RECORD I am including the article entitled "Push on Hiring Bias in Ulster."

The article follows:

[From The New York Times, Sept. 4, 1986]

PUSH ON HIRING BIAS IN ULSTER

(By Steve Lohr)

LONDON, September 3.—Encouraged by the success of the campaign to get American investors to pull out of South Africa, a coalition of Irish human rights advocates and politicians is mounting a drive to prod American companies doing business in Northern Ireland to combat discrimination against Roman Catholic workers.

The Northern Ireland campaign would place American investors and companies, once again, at the forefront of a sensitive social issue.

The effort is based on the "MacBride Principles," a nine-point set of guidelines for fair employment in the predominantly Protestant British province, also known as Ulster. Drafted by four Irish activists led by Sean MacBride, a Nobel Peace Prize winner, the guidelines are patterned after the Sullivan Principles, which were presented in 1977 as an alternative to divestment in South Africa for companies doing business there.

HEAVILY INVESTED

The year-old MacBride campaign is trying to convince American states and municipalities, whose pension funds are invested heavily in American companies that do business in Northern Ireland, to support the principles. In addition, the MacBride advocates are marshaling support for shareholder initiatives that criticize the employment practices of selected American companies in Northern Ireland and urge them to support the principles.

Each company signing the MacBride Principles, for instance, would agree to make "every reasonable lawful effort to increase the representation of underrepresented religious groups at all levels of its operations in Northern Ireland."

Although there are no official unemployment figures by religion, studies have concluded that the unemployment rate for Catholics in Northern Ireland is about twice that of Protestants. Twenty-four American companies—led by American Brands, Du Pont, General Motors and Ford—employ 11 percent of the manufacturing work force in Northern Ireland. The overall unemployment rate in the province is 22 percent, the highest in Western Europe.

SECTARIAN BOUNDARIES

To be sure, the religious makeup of a company's work force tends to be determined by its location because the sectarian boundaries in Northern Ireland are clearly defined. E. I. du Pont de Nemours & Company, for instance, has its facility in the predominantly Catholic city of Londonderry and its work force is about 60 percent Catholic.

Last November, President Reagan defended the behavior of United States corporations, saying he was "proud that Northern Ireland enterprises in which American money is involved are among the most progressive in promoting equal opportunity for all."

Nonetheless, the MacBride Principles go beyond the percentage of Catholic and Protestant workers to what opportunities they are offered once hired. And there apparently are enough questions about the employment makeup of many of the companies operating in Northern Ireland to give the MacBride compaign momentum.

Two states, New York and Massachusetts, have enacted bills endorsing the MacBride Principles, while the legislatures in New Jersey, Florida, Connecticut and Illinois are considering measures on investment in Northern Ireland.

Several cities have also joined the campaign. Last year, New York City became the first backer of the principles at the urging of the Office of the Comptroller. The city's public pension funds have an estimated $250 million invested in 12 American companies operating in Northern Ireland. In Congress, Representative Hamilton Fish Jr., Republican of upstate New York, is drafting legislation to support the MacBride Principles.

The threat of divestment is implicit in the MacBride campaign. The New York State law endorsing the MacBride Principles, signed by Governor Cuomo on May 31, for example, "encourages" the State Comptroller to invest only in companies that adhere to the principles. The state pension fund holds an estimated $740 million investment in 12 companies doing business in Northern Ireland.

The experience of the Sullivan Principles, named for the Rev. Leon Sullivan, a Baptist clergyman and outside director of the General Motors Corporation, suggests that well-publicized efforts to use foreign investment as a vehicle for social change can lead to public pressure for divestment.

The New York City pension funds and church groups this year sponsored shareholder proposals urging seven companies to sign the MacBride Principles. The companies are American Brands, Ford, Fruehauf, General Motors, Hughes Tool, TRW and the VF Corporation. The corporations chosen are typically ones with comparatively few Catholic workers.

NO SIGNERS

So far, no American companies have signed the MacBride Principles. A key reason is that the British Government has maintained that certain affirmative action provisions of the principles constitute "reverse discrimination," which would be unlawful under Britain's Fair Employment Act of 1976.

That stance, however, has been questioned by a recent court decision. On May 12, the United States District Court for the Southern District of New York ruled that American-owned companies operating in Northern Ireland would not be violating Britain's Fair Employment Act by signing the guidelines. The case came before a United States court after an American company dismissed a shareholder initiative urging it to sign the MacBride Principles, contending that the initiative violated the British law. Though the ruling has no standing in Northern Ireland, it does support the case of the MacBride advocates.

The MacBride Principles have stirred a heated debate in the United States, Britain and Northern Ireland. The backers contend that they give Americans a tool for direct action to combat injustice in Northern Ireland, drawing frequent parallels between their campaign and that directed toward American investments in South Africa.

"Just as the Sullivan Principles opposed racism in South Africa, the MacBride Principles give Americans a way to fight religious discrimination in Northern Ireland," said the Rev. Sean McManus, national director of the Irish National Caucus, a lobbying group in Washington. "Today, American dollars are subsidizing anti-Catholic discrimination in Northern Ireland."

SPECIOUS ANALOGY SEEN

Opponents of the MacBride Principles, including the Reagan Administration and the Government of Britain's Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, argue that the analogy between South Africa and Northern Ireland is specious, and that the effect of the principles would be mainly to scare away badly needed American investment, worsening conditions for both Catholics and Protestants in the beleaguered province.

"Most observers will acknowledge that employment discrimination has existed in the past and that unacceptable vestiges of it still linger," Charles H. Price 2d, the United States Ambassador to Britain, said in Belfast, Northern Ireland, last April. "However, the MacBride Principles are wrong because they can do incalculable harm."

MacBride opponents say the British Government does not use discrimination as a means of repression, as in South Africa. Britain's Fair Employment Act was passed a decade ago, they note, and it outlaws discrimination on religious or other grounds. According to Catholic leaders in Northern Ireland, the Fair Employment Agency has done a good job of investigating discrimination, but it has too little enforcement powers.

MacBride supporters bridle at contentions that their campaign will undermine Northern Ireland's already troubled economy. "We're not asking anyone to divest," said Patrick Doherty, administrative associate in the New York City comptroller's office. "We're trying to get American companies to change their employment practices, not pull out."

POLITICAL AGENDA

Other experts on the situation point out that the MacBride campaign extends well beyond its immediate target of a collection of United States corporations. "The MacBride Principles are not solely directed at American companies," said Dr. Christopher McCrudden, a fellow at Oxford University's Lincoln College. "They are an effort to put affirmative action on the political agenda in Northern Ireland via American companies."

Some American companies have been accused of anti-Catholic discrimination. For example, the Fair Employment Agency found Ford guilty last year of discrimination at its Belfast plant, the first time the Government agency ruled against an American company for anti-Catholic bias. Ford is appealing the ruling.

"We have a policy of equal opportunity," a Ford spokesman in Britain said.

Another allegation, contained in the report by the New York City comptroller's office, was that American Brands' subsidiary has "virtually no Catholic males" in its work force. In Greenwich, Conn., an American Brands spokesman said the company was "committed to a policy of equal employment opportunity" and ignoring that policy was grounds for dismissal.

TACTICAL MISTAKE

Even some Catholic leaders who support the goals of the MacBride Principles said that they might be a tactical mistake. John Hume, leader of the Social Democratic and Labor Party, which represents the Catholic minority in Northern Ireland and advocates nonviolent change, has contended that however well-intentioned, the MacBride Principles would act as a disincentive to investment, which the province desperately needs.

"Taking jobs from Protestants and giving them to Catholics isn't going to solve the problem," Mr. Hume said. "That will just create other tensions. What we need is more jobs over all."

Yet, on the other hand, even within the Protestant community there is an admission that the MacBride Principles, if nothing else, have served as an effective pressure on the Government to bolster its efforts against religious discrimination.

In a commentary in July, The Belfast Telegraph wrote: "The MacBride Principles can be seen as a help or hindrance, but they have raised awareness of the problem and are getting a significant Government response."

THE MACBRIDE PRINCIPLES

Following is the text of the MacBride Principles:

In light of decreasing employment opportunities in Northen Ireland and on a global scale, and in order to guarantee equal access to regional employment, the undersigned propose the following equal opportunity affirmative action principles:

1. Increasing the representation of individuals from underrepresented religious groups in the work force, including managerial, supervisory, administrative, clerical and technical jobs.

2. Adequate security for the protection of minority employees both at the workplace and while traveling to and from work.

3. The banning of provocative religious or political emblems from the workplace.

4. All job openings should be publicly advertised and special recruitment efforts should be made to attract applicants from underrepresented religious groups.

5. Layoff, recall and termination procedures should not, in practice, favor particular religious groupings.

6. The abolition of job reservations, apprenticeship restrictions and differential employment criteria, which discriminate on the basis of religion or ethnic origin.

7. The development of training programs that will prepare substantial numbers of current minority employees for skilled jobs, including the expansion of existing programs and the creation of new programs to train, upgrade and improve the skills of minority employees.

8. The establishment of procedures to assess, identify and actively recruit minority employees with potential for further advancement.

9. The appointment of a senior management staff member to oversee the company's affirmative action efforts and the setting up of timetables to carry out affirmative action principles.

THE NEED FOR NEW YORK'S ENVIRONMENTAL BOND ISSUE

HON. JACK F. KEMP

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call the attention of my colleagues to an issue of great importance to my constituents and all the people of New York State. The New York State Senate and Assembly overwhelmingly approved an important environmental initiative to help clean up the most critical toxic waste sites in the State. This environmental bond issue will raise $1.2 billion for the cleanup of nearly 500 hazardous waste sites in New York State, many of which are located in western New York. Paul MacClennan, environmental reporter for the Buffalo News, outlines the strong reasons for supporting this environmental bond issue with great insight in a recent article. I commend this article to the attention of my colleagues and thank the News and Mr. MacClennan for their leadership on this important issue.

The article follows:

FRONTIER HAS PLENTY OF REASON TO SUPPORT BOND ISSUE

(By Paul MacClennan)

Gov. Cuomo kissing a toxic dump?

Well, not exactly. But the governor will kick off a drive to win voter approval of the state's $1.45 billion environmental bond act Sept. 11 in New York City.

Why New York and not Niagara Falls? Probably votes and media attention, just as the governor elected to have his Environment 2000 meeting in New York rather than on less expensive turf.

Love Canal might have been an appropriate spot for Cuomo to launch the fall environmental agenda, but then again it's not a time to quibble and it is significant that the governor will put his political moxie on the line, running both for re-election and backing a major bond act in the same campaign.

Looking at the hard political realities, it's probably important for Cuomo to wring every single vote he can out of New York City for a bond act.

The selling job in Western New York where it's hard to turn around and not bump into a toxic mess should be an easy one. Just offhand it's hard to think of a reason for voting against it.

Erie County, for example, leads the state in the total number of abandoned or inactive hazardous waste sites—121 out of the total 981 toxic dumps statewide. Niagara County is second in the state with 99, so in the two-county area there are 20 percent of the sites under scrutiny.

But numbers alone don't tell the whole story.

As State Environmental Commissioner Henry G. Williams points out, the Western New York area has some of the most seriously contaminated, most seriously complex sites—the sites that will take decades to set right.

The public, almost numb from disclosure after disclosure, learns of a new environmental indignity every day, whether it's dioxin contamination of the air or a new delay in an already delayed remedial project.

Williams was in town last week with some good news, progress on curbing industrial discharges to the Niagara River by a further round of tightening of toxic waste discharges. But with some 200 dumps still suspected of uncontrolled leaking of wastes into the Niagara, the bond act takes on heightened significance for voters in this region.

While Williams says he sees a general wage of approval for the bond act as he travels the state, there are some clouds on the horizon.

State legislators in the Catskills and Adirondacks regions are fermenting opposition to the act on the grounds that they don't like the $250 million that will go for new land acquisition in the Forest Preserves. While the bulk of the money, $1.2 billion, goes for toxic waste programs, the $250 million will go for acquisition of land, municipal parks and historic preservation. Assemblyman Richard I. Coombe, R-Grahamsville, for example, says the bond act "leaves too much in the hands of the bureaucrats and does not address the concerns of local governments." He wants the legislation to spell out exactly how much will be spent on each dump. Well, anyone who has watched the evolution of Love Canal knows that every time you sink a shovel in the ground the price tag changes.

This column had problems with an earlier version of the bond act—one that called for squirreling away industry dollars in an environmental trust fund for 10 years. That onerous provision is gone and now industry will pay half the costs. The 50-50 split is a giveaway to industry, but, once again, it's probably the best one can get in a democratic legislative process, given the heavy lobbying by the Business Council and the big political contributions.

The selling of the bond act will continue the week of Oct. 11 to 19 with a bit of hoopla drawn from the days of a former environmental commissioner, Henry A. Diamond, who biked from Buffalo to New York peddling a clean waters bond act all the way.

Commissioner Williams isn't proposing to follow suit, but said he will participate in a series of events. Bikers from cities and towns throughout Western New York will converge on the Buffalo area towards the start of the tour and then a core group of riders will move on to Rochester, where again bikers from surrounding communities will converge in an assembly focusing on the bond act. Thus it will go across the state until they reach New York.

A second caravan, this time in boats, will leave the upper reaches of New York near Plattsburg and sail down the chain of lakes and canals, finally assembling in Newburg, where the Hudson River sloop Clearwater will join in a pitch for the bond act.

"I plan to hop around, joining the bikers one day and the boaters another to highlight the concern about getting the money to clean up toxic wastes throughout the state," Williams said.

State officials must walk a narrow line, because under the Public Officer's Law, the commissioner said, the department can provide information, but can't shill for approval of the act. "We can tell voters that the bond act is on the ballot, but we can't suggest how they should vote," he said.

State officials have already met with representatives of 30 environmental groups, such as Environmental Planning Lobby, the Sierra Club, Great Lakes United and the Ecumenical Task Force, to review plans for the fall campaign and Williams said the program got unanimous approval. Much of the "selling" will rest with these groups that are free to campaign openly and actively for approval.

Area residents will have a firsthand opportunity to discuss and debate the bond act at a regional Environment 2000 meeting from 8:30 to 5 p.m. Sept. 30 in the Orchard Park Fire Hall, 30 School St. in Orchard Park.

Williams is scheduled to attend the conference, which, besides the bond issue, will deal with issues such as the Great Lakes Governor's Toxics Agreement, pesticide use, recycling and reuse of throwaway materials, toxic air contaminants such as dioxin, and Great Lakes fisheries programs.

A statewide view of the importance of the bond act will come at the Environmental Planning Lobby's statewide conference Sept. 19 and 20 in Albany. The theme of the conference is the need to restore New York's historic role in environmental leadership, utilizing the bond act as a rallying point around which a new coalition can be built to halt the decline of the last decade in interest in environmental issues.

Toxic contamination takes many forms across the state. Hazardous wastes leaking out of Long Island dumps are poisoning the sole source of drinking water. Dumps containing PCBs and an array of other wastes are despoiling the Hudson River. Tannery wastes despoil the Mohawk lands of Gen. Herkimer, toxic wastes threaten Olean's drinking water, refinery wastes harm Wellsville residents.

One doesn't have to go far or look far for a reason to vote Nov. 4. The state and its citizens have a huge undertaking if they want to enter a new century with an environment worthy of New York's proud history and bountiful land.

DR. DONALD MACDONALD—AT THE FOREFRONT OF OUR NATION'S BATTLE AGAINST DRUG ABUSE

HON. C.W. BILL YOUNG

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, the American people have focused their attention on drug abuse as our Nation's No. 1 domestic problem.

At the forefront of our Nation's war against this epidemic is Dr. Donald Macdonald, the Administrator of the U.S. Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration. As a personal friend and consitutuent of mine from Clearwater, FL, I know of Dr. Macdonald's longstanding battle against drug abuse in our community, our State, and throughout the Nation.

Following my remarks, I would like to include a recent column by Dr. Macdonald written for the St. Petersburg Times in which he challenges the American people to pursue three important goals in our effort to prevent drug abuse.

First, he urges parents to do all within their power to raise a drug-free generation in a drug-free environment.

Second, he advocates efforts to bring about a complete and lasting change in social attitudes toward drug use. And third, he supports the mobilization of community treatment and prevention efforts to deal with drug users and potential users.

Dr. Macdonald and his family have personally been touched by the pain and fear of drug abuse. They have taken their experiences and shared them with the community in developing important programs to combat drug abuse. President Reagan recognized Dr. Macdonald's personal commitment to this effort and nominated him to serve in his current position in the Administration where he is a national leader in this difficult endeavor.

Dr. Macdonald has risen to the challenge by charting a course against drug abuse that will result in a successful effort to reshape the American views and attitudes toward drug use. I recommend Dr. Macdonald's column to each of my colleagues because I believe it captures the essence of our Nation's problem and the solution to the dilemma that is drug abuse.

TIME IS RIGHT FOR THE WAR AGAINST DRUG USE

(By Donald Ian Macdonald)

When I lived in Clearwater, practicing medicine and raising my family, one of my children was touched by drugs. All at once a new reality entered my home and my life.

My wife and I, trying to help our son fight back, experienced first-hand the frustration and pain associated with drugs. There were all of the searching questions, the agonizing over the past, the strong desire to set things right.

Some of the readers of the Times personally know of the problems I am talking about. No one can tell my family that drug use is a victimless crime. We were victims, our son as a user and those of us who helped him through his ordeal.

During that time I learned that we weren't the only victims. The seller and the grower are dependent on a trade that must create victims to operate successfully. They fuel the pipeline and become hopelessly dependent on it for their livelihood.

There are other victims—workers who are at risk because of the users on the job; elderly citizens who are robbered so users can support a growing habit; those who die on the highway in drug-related accidents; and taxpayers who devote part of their earnings to law enforcement efforts against drugs. The list goes on and on.

But we don't have to be victims. Currently, we have a unique opportunity to stop drug use in America. Future historians may view this moment as a rare time in the chronicles of our country. Several disparate forces are converging in the war against drugs, and we can now make dramatic inroads toward reduction of use.

For example:

The clear, angry voice of public opinion has been raised to a level of urgency. In fact, polls indicate that Americans view drugs as our No. 1 domestic problem.

President Reagan is preparing to escalate his already considerable efforts. The President plans to marshal the vast moral persuasion of his office, and the legal power of the federal government to conduct an all-out war against drug use in schools, at the work-place, and on the highways and the streets.

In addition, the scientific community has conclusively demonstrated with clinical studies the harmful and addictive nature of drugs, dispelling the lies and mythology surrounding use of marijuana, cocaine and many other drugs.

Finally, the media has focused its attention on the problem, prompting countless cover stories and many offers of help.

After two decades of relative social and economic tolerance of drug use in America we are ready to mount an effort to put an end to the epidemic of foolishness and tragedy that has engulfed us. Of course, law enforcement officials and the federal government have labored endlessly, providing a fulcrum to eradicate drug use. But largely missing from the equation has been pressure on the lever—a sense of individual, personal urgency from the American public.

I'd like to see us return to the time not so many years ago when we didn't have to talk of drug-free schools and a drug-free workplace. We had them. We knew then that drugs don't mix well with school or work.

We must pursue three goals if we are to have a drug-free America.

First, parents must raise a drug-free generation in a drug-free environment. This creates a containment barrier against the firestorm of drug use, allowing it to smolder and burn out.

Obviously, this will require parents to take a more active and responsible role in educating their children about the dangers of use. We must be role models for them.

Recognizing our children's immaturity and the pressures they face, we must provide them with adequate support and protection. All of us should know the health risks involved with drugs.

Kids must know that marijuana is habit forming, and smoking marijuana may be associated with cancer, emphysema and heart disease. Marijuana produces long-term effects on intellectual functions, decreases sperm count with males, may interfere with fertility in females and can damage the body's immune system.

Cocaine is even worse. It is addictive, and snorting can cause nasal problems, sexual dysfunction, cardiac arrhythmia, convulsions, coma, respiratory collapse, paranoid behavior and death.

When used as crack, the effects are even more pronounced. It causes rapid highs, which threaten the heart. Then the crack leaves the user with an extreme low, which demands an instant "fix."

Other drugs, such as PCP, heroin and the whole class of designer drugs may be even more harmful.

Our second goal must be a complete and lasting change in social attitudes toward drug use. Drug use must become and remain completely and utterly unacceptable in American life.

This will require more than our disgust. The elimination of drug use requires our radical rejection of any form of acceptability. We must let our kids know with certainty that we do not approve of drug use and that we expect them to abstain.

Third, we must mobilize community treatment and prevention efforts to deal with the user and the potential user. Treatment and prevention will go a long way in removing the problem of drug use in America.

For example, hard-core addicts use over 90 percent of the heroin in this country. Addicted cocaine users account for over 50 percent of the cocaine use.

These people need expensive treatment which will take them off the streets, and thereby reduce a large amount of the demand for these two drugs. If we remove these users from the marketplace, then the market itself will be seriously undermined.

For a lower cost we can educate, and with minimal encouragement and counseling remove, users of drugs who are less heavily involved but greater in numbers. These users are particularly important because they are following the same path as the seriously addicted. New users are led to experiment by those around them in a normal setting—their school mates, fellow workers and social acquaintances—who show no ill effects from drug use, at least in the beginning.

We must reach these new users with the message that drug use is often a one-way street. So the onus is ultimately on us. The President has made it very clear that each of us must take a clear-cut, personal stand against drug use. I urge the readers of the Times to do just that, and help us reach the three goals I have outlined.

THE NONSERIOUS DRUG CONTROL OPTION

HON. HOWARD WOLPE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, today we are considering serious and far-reaching antidrug legislation designed to combat the insidious threats of drug use and drug addiction with drug education and rehabilitation programs, more aggressive enforcement of antidrug laws, and improved interdiction activities at our Nation's borders. There are, however, proposals in other branches of the Government to address drug abuse on the Nation's streets and among its youth by asking middle-aged Washington bureaucrats to take urinalysis tests. The following article from yesterday's Washington Post demonstrates that such an approach not only diverts attention from serious antidrug efforts, but is also based on extremely faulty scientific procedures.

In light of information such as this, I can only say that I am very relieved that Congress is taking a serious and comprehensive approach to the problem of drug abuse.

DRUG TESTING OPEN TO MISUSE AND FALSE READINGS

(By Philip J. Hilts)

Drug testing is a tricky, technical business that under ideal circumstances can accurately identify more than half of those who have used drugs, while falsely accusing a tiny percentage.

But in practice, testing like that in use at many companies is subject to so many hazards and serious questions of misuse that it would be virtually impossible to set up a program free from significant human error and potential for fraud, according to experts.

Drug testing is being considered by the Reagan administration for a wide range of federal employes.

Experts say the greatest abuse of the technology comes in business, and that as the tests become more widespread, the toll in mistakes and false accusations may be large. "I just hope there isn't too high a body count" before testing is done properly, said Theodore Shults, corporate lawyer for CompuChem, a drug-testing firm in Research Triangle Park, N.C.

By consensus, the best testing programs—and the system used by the military—first employ a screening test using a rough method, followed by an expensive and far more accurate second test. The first test misses a substantial number of people, perhaps as many as half, who have signs of drug use in their systems. It also falsely finds drug indicators in urine 5 percent of the time at a minimum, possibly more frequently.

Because of the high inaccuracy rate of these initial tests, the second is used to check results showing drugs present. This second test, experts say, is critical to any testing system but frequently is not used by businesses.

The typical sort of testing expected in a large screening program, like that being considered for federal employes, involves taking a urine sample and testing it for two to eight drugs. Some drugs can be identified for a few days after they have been taken, such as cocaine, and others for months, such as marijuana.

Factors affecting the accuracy of the final result include whether the sample was taken correctly with a witness present; whether the person tested has eaten or drunk something that will confound the test; the type of test used to take a first look for drugs; the type of test used to confirm the first result, and sloppiness such as mislabeling or contamination of the sample at any stage of the process.

The hazards of testing begin before the urine sample is taken. Subjects may be taking prescription or nonprescription drugs that can falsely give positive readings on the initial test. In addition, the amount of liquid taken before a test can affect the result.

Drugs that can cause false positives in screening for marijuana use, for example, are anti-inflammatory drugs and such common painkillers as Advil and Nuprin. In testing for amphetamines drugs that can give false positives include diet pills, nasal decongestants and heart or asthma medication.

Accuracy also requires a clear "chain of custody" of the urine sample, witnessed at every step to prevent switching, adulterating or mislabeling.

Thus, in the strictest programs, test subjects must be closely observed while they urinate into sample bottles.

When samples are taken to the laboratory, two screening tests are most common; the radio immunoassay (RIA), and the enzyme-multiplied immunoassay technique (EMIT).

Both use methods in which special chemicals from the body's immune system, called antibodies, pick out drugs or drug-breakdown products if they are present in the urine.

Both methods are also relatively inaccurate. In a study by the federal Centers for Disease Control in Atlanta, 13 drug-testing firms were sent urine samples not knowing they were from the CDC. The study showed that results varied from zero correct to 100 percent correct in identifying drugs such as cocaine morphine and barbiturates. Most firms were correct less than half the time.

In contrast, Cmdr. Walter Vogl, a senior policy analyst in the office of the assistant defense secretary for health affairs, said that in military testing of about 3 million people annually, the first screening tests are correct about 90 percent of the time.

Experts agree that the most important drug test is the second, confirmatory test. This must be done with a gas chromatograph mass spectrometer test, according to D. Ian MacDonald, director of the federal Alcohol, Drug Abuse and Mental Health Administration.

While screening tests cost a few dollars a sample, this second test can cost as much as $100. Its accuracy, however, is counted by experts to be near 100 percent, not counting human errors such as mislabeling.

THE RIGHT BOOKS

HON. THOMAS N. KINDNESS

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. KINDNESS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend to the attention of the Members of the House of Representatives the accompanying article, written by Chilton Williamson, Jr., that recently appeared in the National Review. This article addresses the issue of amnesty as contained in H.R. 3810, the Immigration Control and Legalization Amendments Act of 1986, and highlights the studies of Donald L. Huddle, professor of economics at Rice University, as they pertain to the effect of amnesty on the United States, economically, culturally, and demographically.

This article was brought to my attention by "Americans for Immigration Control" and I would like to recognize them for the significant contribution they have made to the entire debate on immigration policy.

I urge my colleagues to consider the implications of the amnesty provisions contained in H.R. 3810 and to reject them when the bill comes to the floor for consideration.

[From the National Review, Aug. 29, 1986]

THE RIGHT BOOKS

(By Chilton Williamson, Jr.)

Some time during the next couple of months, Congress is scheduled to consider a crucial set of reforms: those concerning the nation's immigration policies. Although the various bills that have been proposed over the last three Congresses differ in a number of significant ways, one thing they have in common is an amnesty provision. Simpson-Mazzoli offers amnesty to illegals who have been in the United States since before January 1, 1980; the Rodino and Roybal versions move up the cutoff date of January 1, 1982; while some legislators wish for the still more generous deadline of New Year's Day, 1984.

There are plenty of voices raised in both chambers denying the virtue and wisdom of amnesty altogether, but so far their successes have been of a negative variety: They have been able to kill legislation so pernicious in its likely effect as to be worse than no legislation at all. For the past three years this attitude toward the question of amnesty has been derided as mulish, quixotic, or troglodytic; but it is precisely the question upon which new studies by Donald L. Huddle, Professor of Economics at Rice University, direct a laser-like beam, suggesting that the amnesty concept represents an enormous threat to the United States, economically, culturally, and demographically.

The first of these "discussions"—"Amnesty Implications of the 1985 Houston Survey" (available upon request and at cost from the Department of Economics, Rice University, P.O. Box 1982, Houston, Tex. 77251)—concerns the findings of a field survey of undocumented workers in the Houston metropolitan area undertaken in 1985 by Professor Huddle. Taking for their study a sample of two hundred undocumented workers from five Latin American countries, Huddle and his Rice University research team approached with the question: How would you respond to an amnesty program such as that proposed by the current immigration-reform bills?

Although, before Huddle's, there were virtually no empirical studies seeking to assess the possible impact of any particular legalization measure, certain assumptions had been widely and uncritically accepted in quarters where people are paid to consider such matters. One such assumption (fervently propagated by the Mexican government) is that the majority of illegals reside only temporarily in the United States before slipping back to their homes south of the Rio Grande. That may have been more or less true until the 1960s, but since then the pattern has altered considerably: 89 per cent of Huddle's interviewees claimed they hoped to enjoy permanent-resident status in the U.S., while 61 per cent wanted citizen status. Another assumption concerns the number of illegals who would accept legalization: One analyst, after a study of the ill-fated Canadian amnesty of a decade ago, suggested a likely figure of one in three, while pro-amnesty groups have argued that an even lower figure is probable. However, of Huddle's sample, 85 per cent said they would apply for legalization under amnesty. Huddle's figures show that, on average, these newly legalized residents would each expect to bring two immediate relatives into the country, for starters.

Now, the number of illegals currently in the United States is a matter of debate, with estimates running between four and 12 million (Huddle himself places the illegal population at around nine million). Depending upon which estimate you select and which amnesty cutoff date you choose, by using a multiplier of two, you come out with estimates ranging from 1.9 to 12.5 million bodies added to the U.S. population by a stroke of the pen; while, with a multiplier of four ("the Immigration Service figures conservatively that a legalized Third World adult alien, will, on average, seek four additional visas for immediate and extended family members, and more in the future as chain migration takes effect"), the numbers increase to between four and 25 million. Now, 25 million people is nearly a third the population of Mexico; which makes you wonder why, if we are going to offer legalization on that scale, the legislation that accomplishes it should bother itself with such futilities as employer sanctions and beefing up the Border Patrol.

Huddle has argued elsewhere the displacement effects of illegal aliens on the native labor market, as well as the falsity of the myth that illegals contribute to the economy more than they subtract from its cornucopia of welfare benefits. He recapitulates and extends those arguments in this and in another dicussion paper, "A Profile of Illegal Immigrants in the Houston Metroplex: Implications for Amnesty, Employer Sanctions, and U.S. Immigration Policy." His studies deserve to be taken seriously by every congressman, and his conclusion—that a broad amnesty program with a recent cutoff date will create a "Third World backlog population pressing to get into the United States by any means possible," the result being that "Congress would soon again face the same pressing questions of civil and amnesty rights for the undocumented masses"—needs to be deeply pondered.

THE SPACE STATION AND MICROMANAGEMENT

HON. GEORGE E. BROWN, JR.

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. BROWN of California. Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my reservations about action that is expected tomorrow on the Housing and Urban Development-Independent Agencies Appropriations bill, H.R. 5313, pertaining to the National Aeronautics and Space Administration [NASA] budget within that bill. I am concerned that my colleague, Mr. EDWARD BOLAND, chairman of the HUD-IND Appropriations Subcommittee, whom I deeply respect, will be offering an amendment that will further tighten the restraining straps that the Appropriations Committee has already placed on NASA's Space Station Program.

According to the Democratic Study Group, the Boland amendment is designed "to limit funding under NASA's research and development account to $160 million for development of the space station and to specify that funds for such space station development shall not be available for obligation prior to enactment of a subsequent appropriations act authorizing the obligation of such funds." The way I understand this amendment, it would keep NASA from moving into the development phase, or phase C/D, of the Space Station Program without first getting a supplemental bill passed in the Appropriations Committee and signed into a law.

While the Boland amendment in itself is not overwhelming or dramatic, it does highlight the continuing trend of the Appropriations Committees usurping the responsibilities of the authorizing committees. I believe that the Boland amendment is uncalled for because there is already sufficient—indeed more than sufficient—restrictive language in the HUD-Independent Agencies bill to keep NASA from moving into the phase C/D of station development without requiring a supplemental appropriation. The bill clearly states.

"Release of the balance of $150,000,000 * * * will not be approved by the Committees on Appropriations until selected requirements are satisfied—and a plan * * * for the implementation of such requirements is approved by the committees."

To tighten the screws on NASA even further with the Boland amendment could be detrimental to the program.

I commend Chairman BOLAND and the HUD-IND Appropriations Subcommittee for its intense and thorough oversight of the NASA budget. But micromanaging the specific program elements to achieve the committee-perceived objectives could be considered an abuse of power.

The committee report places a set of four requirements on the space station planners in order to ensure that "approximately 80 percent of the benefits of the station shall be derived by the United States," and that the station "will produce useful results at the outset of station activity." First, I would challenge the committee to quantify the benefits that we can expect to gain from the station. How do you measure the infinite number of possible benefits that may emerge from the space station activities, which will essentially be a laboratory in space, and then attempt to divide the benefits up among the international participants? Indeed, if we embrace the committee's recommendations, our foreign partners will be given a cold reception in a project to which they have already committed themselves.

As for ensuring that the station produces useful results at an early date, I would argue that the useful results of the space station will be evident on the first deployment mission. No one has ever tried to build a structure the size of a football field in space before. I think my colleagues on the Appropriations Committee sometimes forget that the space station is not an end in itself, but rather it is a single element in a larger and greater infrastructure yet to be built in space. Frankly, I am concerned that in the rush to deploy, we may miss some valuable opportunities to experiment with different construction techniques. To place deployment requirements on a program that is still evolving could seriously impede the effective execution of the President's 1984 space station directive.

Unfortunately, momentum is on the side of the HUD–IND appropriations bill, and it will likely pass with the space station provisions still in place. I will, however, oppose any amendment to further construct or undermine the space station program or any other part of the NASA budget. I encourage my colleagues to join me in this opposition.

CHEYNEY UNIVERSITY

HON. WILLIAM H. GRAY III

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Speaker, it is my honor to pay tribute today in the House of Representatives to one of the premier institutions of higher education in the United States.

Cheyney University, Mr. Speaker, will celebrate the 150th anniversary of its founding on Saturday, September 20, 1986.

Since its establishment on a 275-acre campus just outside Philadelphia in Delaware County, Cheyney has opened the doors of knowledge and opportunity to thousands of black young men and women. Its gifted and dedicated faculity members have prepared their students for careers in the sciences, arts, and professions, and have established a reputation for Cheyney as one of our Nation's most prestigious black institutions of higher education.

Steering Cheyney University through one of its most important periods, Mr. Speaker, was Dr. Wade Wilson, who served as president from 1968 through 1981. Now Cheyney's president emeritus, Dr. Wilson is one of America's foremost educators. He is a distinguished humanitarian who has represented our Nation in numerous international education conferences, and who has earned a deserved reputation as a person with unselfish commitment to community service and the well-being of students at his alma mater, Cheyney University.

On September 20, Mr. Speaker, the Cheyney University Historical Commission will honor Dr. Wilson at a reception celebrating Cheyney's 150th anniversary.

I know that my colleagues will join me, Mr. Speaker, in saluting this outstanding institution and the man who has played such a pivotal role in its growth.

SANDINISTA REGIME CHARGED WITH ARRESTS OF OPPOSITION LEADERS

HON. ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, repression and persecution continue in Nicaragua. The Sandinista regime arbitrarily arrests and detains opposition leaders who differ in their views from the government. The latest incident occurred last week when Bayardo Guzman, one of the national vice presidents of the Independent Liberal Party (PLI), was arrested. According to PLI President Virgilio Godoy, approximately 100 PLI members and intermediate leaders are being held in Nicaragua. A report of the arrest of Guzman follows:

MANAGUA, 4 Sep (ACAN-EFE).—A leader of the opposition Independent Liberal Party [PLI] was arrested by the Sandinist police and taken to an undisclosed location, the PLI reported today.

The detainee is Bayardo Guzman Martinez, the third national vice president of the PLI, the second force in the parliamentary opposition. Top PLI leader Virgilio Godoy said that "seven state security agents violently kidnapped Guzman from his own home (in the eastern city of Masaya), and took him to an unknown location."

Guzman Martinez's detention took place yesterday morning, the source said.

The incident "constitutes a gross reprisal against the PLI because of the efforts it has been making along with other parties in favor of the national dialogue," Godoy said. The liberal leader pointed out that approximately 100 PLI members and intermediate leaders "are being held at various prisons" throughout the country.

Godoy insisted that these incidents demonstrate "the governing party's lack of political willingness to seek peaceful solutions for the acute crisis affecting Nicaragua."

Godoy demanded the "immediate release" of the PLI leader, and an "end to the persecution of PLI members, whose only crime is civil disagreement with the policies and conduct of the FSLN and its government.

"We do not know where Guzman Martinez is, or what he is accused of. The case is very mysterious," the PLI national president told ACAN-EFE.

TRIBUTE TO YUE-SAI KAN

HON. JAMES H. SCHEUER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Speaker, since February an audience of 300 million in the People's Republic of China has had the opportunity to watch a remarkably weekly television series produced and hosted by Yue-Sai Kan, an American citizen who was born in China.

Twice a week, Ms. Kan hosts her program, "One World," for the single largest television audience in the world. The 52-week series provides the Chinese audience with a view of the world since the program schedule includes scenes from more than 20 countries in Europe, Africa, Australia, and North and South America.

Mr. Speaker, Ms. Kan has become a household word in China and as a de facto "citizen-ambassador" she has fostered a great deal of good will and understanding between our Nation and China. She also produces and hosts a program devoted to Asia, known as "Looking East," which airs on cable and UHF channels in 48 States.

Ms. Kan's "One World" is a historic endeavor because she is the first foreigner to ever produce and host a television program on Chinese television. Her program, which has received high praise for its sensitivity and superb quality, will help to develop media and television programming in China. Her program is more than entertainment, it also is used as an educational tool by teachers who tape the program for classroom use.

"One World" provides the Chinese viewers with scenes of a world they seldom see, while "Looking East" provides American viewers with a fresh perspective on Asia. All in all, the programming produced by Ms. Kan satisfies a curiosity that exists in both East and West about each others' cultures. Ms. Kan is providing East and West with a global perspective.

Ms. Kan, who was born in China and raised in Hong Kong before coming to the United States, where she attended Brigham Young University and the University of Hawaii before embarking on her television career.

Her efforts have won her the title of "a modern day Marcia Polo" from Money magazine, while the New York Times said her work augers well not only for China and America, but for the rest of the world, as well.

Ms. Kan, whose father, Kan Wing-Lin, is one of best known Chinese painters, provides the people of China with a unique window to the world. She has succeeded in spanning the divide between two different cultures. She is a credit to her heritage and her citizenship.

AMENDING INTERNATIONAL CLAIMS SETTLEMENT ACT

HON. DON BONKER

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a bill to amend the International Claims Settlement Act of 1949. This bill provides that the value of claims determined by the Foreign Claims Settlement Commission be based on the fair market value of the property taken.

This bill was considered by the Subcommittee on International Economic Policy and Trade on Thursday, September 11, 1986, and H.R. 5365, where technical amendments were offered. Therefore, the bill now encompasses those amendments considered by the subcommittee, and is being reintroduced.

In the past, legislation concerning the Foreign Claims Settlement Commission has not contained an explicit reference to the compensation standard required by international law, with the exception of the Cuban Claims Act of 1964. Without the definition of a compensation standard, the potential for claims decisions inconsistent with international law exists, which could harm current and future U.S. investment abroad. This bill remedies that situation.

The purpose of this legislation, which is entirely prospective, is to specify that fair market value may include, but not be limited to, the market value of outstanding securities, replacement value, going-concern value, and book value. It establishes a presumption that in the case of service industries, the appropriate basis for determining fair market value is going-concern value. This presumption is not mandatory, nor does it limit the discretion of the Foreign Claims Settlement Commission in any way.

Growth in the service industries is vital to the economy of the United States, and this includes the ability of those industries to expand overseas. It is important to not only protect business interests abroad which are owned by U.S. nationals, but also to ensure that if their property is nationalized or otherwise taken by a foreign government, the value of their claims for such losses will be determined fairly.

THE 1986 CALL TO CONSCIENCE VIGIL FOR SOVIET JEWRY

HON. JIM ROSS LIGHTFOOT

OF IOWA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. LIGHTFOOT. Mr. Speaker, today I want to bring to your attention an issue about which we should all be concerned. That is, the plight of the Soviet Jews. The want and need to be with one's family and to be able to practice religious and moral convictions seems to be a reasonable exercise of one's basic human rights, unless you are a citizen of the Soviet Union—particularly a Jewish citizen of the Soviet Union.

Massive emigration from the Soviet Union began in 1975 after the signing of the Helsinki accords. In 1979, the number of people emigrating from the Soviet Union gradually rose to 50,000, which was to be its all time maximum. Since then the number has diminished to a trickle, even though the number of people requesting visas remains high. The Jews in the Soviet Union are persecuted, harassed, have their jobs terminated, and some are even tortured for requesting a visa. All Jews connected with the state in any manner are considered dangerous because they may known classified information and therefore are denied visas. In all actuality, classified information may be the simple knowledge of the way life really is in the Soviet Union.

The Soviet Jews' situation grows worse every day, but we can make a difference. I have cosigned numerous letters to the Soviet Union pleading for basic human rights that most of us take for granted. This type of effort has proven to be effective in helping an individual emigrate—sometimes it even saves lives—because the Soviet Government is reluctant to continue with cases of repression once they become the subject of widespread public attention. It is very important that we continue with all efforts to help these struggling people.

Mr. Speaker, I want to urge all of my colleagues to join the Soviet Jews in their struggle for basic human rights. We need to make it known to the Soviet Union that we will not simply turn our heads on these atrocities.

HISTORICALLY BLACK COLLEGES HONORED

HON. CARROLL A. CAMPBELL, JR.

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, once again I take great pleasure in rising in support of the passage of House Joint Resolution 653 which designates the week of September 15, as "National Historically Black Colleges Week." I feel that such a week of recognition is but a small tribute to the important and prominent contributions that these institutions have made to our society.

Presently, there are 99 historically black collages and universities in the United States. Those of you who are familiar with the rich heritage of these institutions kown that they grant more than 30,000 degress each year in every field of study. History attests to the fact that numerous prominent scholars, educators, businessmen, and professionals were graduates of one or another of these fine schools, and I am pleased that we are able to show our support and thanks for the goals and accomplishments of these institutions.

Through passage of this resolution, I am pleased that we are able for the fourth year to express our respect and gratitude for the prominent roles that historically black colleges and universities have played, and continue to play in our society.

ST. CAMILLUS ACADEMY—AN EXAMPLE FOR AMERICAN SCHOOLS EVERYWHERE

HON. HAROLD ROGERS

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, my congressional district has received national attention in recent years over its comparatively low academic standing and number of high school graduates. We are now actively working on a program to reverse that trend and improve our schools.

So it gives me great pleasure to report to you that in my district, there is a small high school which has the highest percentage of National Merit Scholarship semifinalists in Kentucky, and maybe the highest in the entire Nation.

St. Camillus Academy in Corbin, KY has a graduating class of only 19 students this year, yet the school has unbelievably had six of its current students and one former student achieve semifinalist status on this year's exams.

Led by Principal Sister Mary Amabilis Martineua, this school has created an outstanding academic atmosphere for its students. Its emphasis on academics, discipline, and hard work are clearly evident in the results of the merit scholarship exams this year.

Those six students who made National Merit Scholarship semifinalist are: Patrick Hayden, Michael Davis, Robert Jarrell, Amy Jackson, Robert Messer, and Sherry Shaffer. Another student, Denise Brantigan, attended St. Camillus until this year, when she transferred to Laurel County High School.

Mr. Speaker, I believe this accomplishment deserves our support and our commendations. At a time when schools throughout the Nation are putting new emphasis on quality in education, St. Camillus is showing that good, old-fashioned hard work, and parental support make a difference in our children's education.

I ask my colleagues to join me today in congratulating these young men and women, and the faculty and staff of St. Camillus, for this truly outstanding achievement. Their accomplishments offer all our schools an excellent example of the kind of quality education which we must strive for.

A TRIBUTE TO ARTHUR M. LAWRENCE

HON. DOUG WALGREN

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, I want to salute Arthur M. Lawrence, an outstanding leader in the health care community who this month retires after 33 years of service to the people of western Pennsylvania.

I have been privileged to know Art Lawrence for nearly 10 years. During this time, Art has been the link to government for Blue Cross of western Pennsylvania, serving as that organization's senior vice president for community and government affairs. He has been a strong, articulate, and sensitive advocate for Blue Cross and the millions of citizens it serves. We will miss him tremendously.

Art is a unique individual who combines a strong background and experience in media and public relations with a genuine sense of caring for people. His personal interest in the special needs of the unemployed, financially disadvantaged, and the elderly have led to innovative programs of health insurance coverage for these groups in western Pennsylvania. And his personal community service as a member of the board of directors of such groups as the Health Systems Agency, the Nursing Foundation, and the Western Pennsylvania Caring Foundation attests to his dedication to people.

Mr. Speaker, I am honored to salute Art Lawrence. Many know him as a good friend and a generous and unselfish leader in the health care field. With hopes that we in Pittsburgh will continue to have his counsel on issues important to the health of people in our region, we wish Art the very best in his retirement.

A GLOBAL SUMMIT ON TERRORISM IS NOW IMPERATIVE

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 11, 1986

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, today, I am introducing a resolution (H. Res. 547), cosponsored by the leadership and members of the Committee on Foreign Affairs, calling on the President to convene a world summit to decide on effective, united means to combat international terrorism.

In the past weeks the world has been shocked by a tremendous upsurge in international terrorism, after a respite of some months following America's action against Libya. The hijacking of Pan Am Flight 73 in which 3 Americans and 17 others were killed, and the massacre at the Neve Shalom synagogue in Istanbul, in which 21 Jews were killed at prayer are just the most prominent examples. There have also been attacks in Western Europe, and another American, Frank Reed, was kidnaped in Beirut.

The administration has been reacting properly in respose to these outrages. We have sent a most persuasive emissary, Ambassador to the United Nations Vernon Walter, to Europe in an attempt to rally support for additional pressure against Libya, but the reaction to our request was disappointing. The Congress has recently called on the President to work for the establishment of an international coordinating committee on terrorism.

The continuing failure of our most strenuous efforts to establish a unified, effective international policy on terrorism is an indication that there are differences which need to be addressed at the highest level. Accordingly, we are calling on the President to convene a summit meeting on terrorism to achieve that kind of coordination and effective policy.

The agenda for such a meeting should include taking steps to end the misuse of diplomatic facilities, such as pouches and embassies, in support of terrorism; expelling diplomats representing states supporting terrorism; applying economic sanctions against countries harboring or training terrorists; establishing standards for better airport and seaport security; establishing terms for the exchange of information on terrorist activities; providing stricter visa and immigration requirements for nationals of states supporting terrorism; and, finally, agreeing upon mechanisms for coordination and cooperation in the use of force, when necessary and appropriate, against terrorist targets.

At the close of the Second World War, the democracies of the West united in a defensive alliance against threatened aggression. Responsible leaders of the world must now come together and decide to fight this new aggression—the menace of international terrorism which threatens to engulf us all.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that all my colleagues join us in cosponsoring this resolution, and I ask that a list of the original cosponsors and the text of the resolution be printed in the RECORD at this point:

H. RES. 547

Expressing the sense of the House of Representatives that the President should convene a summit meeting of world leaders to adopt a unified, effective program against international terrorism

Whereas international terrorism respects no borders, is a scourge on societies throughout the world, and has wreaked havoc on the lives of countless innocent persons;

Whereas since January 1, 1980, international terrorism has resulted in the deaths of over 3050 persons (including 345 Americans);

Whereas terrorism is never justified as a means to reach any political end;

Whereas the United Nations General Assembly has, by unanimous vote, condemned the use of terrorism for any purpose whatever;

Whereas world religious, government, and social leaders have condemned the senseless, barbaric loss of life caused by terrorists;

Whereas the Congress has passed and the President has signed into law Public Law 99-399, the Omnibus Diplomatic Security and Antiterrorism Act of 1986, which directs the President to continue to seek the establishment of an International Antiterrorism Committee; and

Whereas there is an urgent need for responsible world leaders to formulate a comprehensive international strategy to combat terrorism: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the House of Representatives that the President should convene a summit meeting of world leaders to adopt a unified, effective program against international terrorism.

FULL LIST OF COSPONSORS

Representatives Gilman, Fascell, Broomfield, Hamilton, Yatron, Solarz, Mica, Barnes, Wolpe, Crockett, Gejdenson, Dymally, Lantos, Smith (FL), Reid, Levine, Weiss, Udall, Garcia, Lagomarsino, Leach, Roth, Snowe, Hyde, Solomon, Bereuter, Siljander, Zschau, Dornan, Smith (NJ), Mack, DeWine, and McCain.

NATIONAL SECURITY AND CONGRESSIONAL RESPONSIBILITY

HON. ROBERT K. DORNAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 12, 1986

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, the late H.L. Mencken once observed:

There is no record in history of a nation that ever gained anything valuable by being unprepared to defend itself.

This basic tenent is embodied in our Constitution. However, the role Congress has forged for itself in crafting our Nation's defense over the past 25 years, and in particular since the end of the Vietnam war, has grown out of proportion to the intent of our Founding Fathers and to the detriment of all rules of efficient management.

There is something terribly wrong with the budget process when Congress determines that the only way that it can get a handle on runaway Federal spending is through the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Deficit Reduction Act. The necessity of this measure rested on the fact that Congress has failed to approve a single Reagan administration budget, and has yet to meet the deadlines set for itself, in law, under the 1974 Budget Act. So rather than make the hard decisions themselves, or acqueisce to the President's program, we chose to take the coward's way out.

One disastrous result was U.S. defense spending declined 6.3 percent from the previous year. Since the end of the Vietnam war, there has only been two other years, fiscal year 1978 and 1979 that saw declines in defense budget authority—1.6 percent and 0.02 percent respectively. The major upheval in defense programs, forced cuts, reprogramming, and so forth, plays havoc with defense management.

I cannot accept the liberal bias that defense is the simple equal of any and all other Government programs. Nor, given the increases in domestic spending since 1970, can I accept that defense expenditures must bear the brunt of the cost of reducing the budget.

Instead of focusing on broad military policy and spending guidelines, Congress has become ever more involved in micromanagement. Liberal Members and staff seem anxious to control every detail of our national security programs. With the passage of this year's Defense authorization bill, this control has now broadened to directing the United States arms control policies.

But the micromanagement of defense, twice a year, has done nothing to improve defense management. In many respects this is detrimental to efficiency. The congressional budgeting process prompts the services to protect marginal programs that should be killed and discourages effective testing that would indicate where weakeness lies.

Furthermore, in the last 10 years we have had our defense appropriations signed into law only twice before the fiscal year began. In other years, DOD has operated under continuing resolutions at prior year spending levels. This is not sound management.

Outside of major changes in the congressional budget process, the detrimental micromanagement of the Defense Department will continue. However, there is a potential solution that would go a long way to mitigate a legislative process that by nature inspires micromanagement. Congress must be convinced that effective reforms must include change in the budget process. I am a strong advocate of a 2-year defense budget coupled with multiyear procurement.

The 2-year budget has a number of attractive arguments in its favor. It would begin to lengthen the current short-term focus in Congress that often crowds out meaningful program review and evaluation. It would provide better, more effective oversight of the Pentagon by reducing time spent on program-related details. It would help cut down on friction between the executive and legislative branches and potentially serve to facilitate better coordination and cooperation. It would provide more specific and timely authorization guidance to Congress. And, it would lower weapon unit costs by providing stability in the defense procurement process. Multiyear procurement with congressional oversight at principal milestones will provide stability, encourage efficiency and allow for proper development and testing. These management tools will go a long way to prevent the pennywise/pound foolish defense thinking that put us in the deficit acquisition quagmire we are in today.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to submit for the record an article that appeared in Defense News on September 8, 1986. The author, Andrew K. Ellis, elaborates on the point that there is something wrong with the process when the ranking member of the House Armed Services Committee, and the chairman and ranking Senator of the Senate Armed Services Committee cannot support the final Defense authorization bill as passed by the House of Representatives. I strongly urge my colleagues to read the following poignant analysis.

DEFENSE BILL PLAYS POLITICS IN HOUSE—NATIONAL SECURITY NEEDS OBJECTIVITY, NOT POLITICALLY MOTIVATED BLOCS

(By Andrew K. Ellis)

If Mikhail Gorbachev had been true to his word, the one-year Soviet moratorium on nuclear testing would have expired on Aug. 6—the 41st anniversary of the atomic bombing of Hiroshima. The general secretary hesitated, however, because a far more meaningful propaganda victory was pending, courtesy of the Democratic-controlled House of Representatives. Gorbachev's patience did not go unrewarded as unilateral arms controllers in the Hcuse stole the show during floor consideration of the 1987 defense bill. Perhaps rendered speechless by his good fortune, Gorbachev did not get around to extending his one-year, 12-day moratorium until recently.

While Gorbachev's test-ban posturing comes as no surprise, the swift and stunning imposition of the liberal Democratic agenda on the 1987 defense authorization bill does. Many Democrats will respond, however, that the arms control votes during consideration of the defense bill were bipartisan, as a number of House Republicans jumped on the bandwagon. While there is a grain of truth to this, if one watched the arms control votes unfold on the floor, a solid bloc of Democratic votes was evident every time.

Unable to implement and even unwilling to introduce their arms control legislation in the more appropriate forum of the Armed Services Committee, House arms controllers descended on the authorization bill when it reached the floor. In one short week, the House: reduced Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI) funding $600 million from the already low committee level of $3.4 billion; reversed the rational committee position on ASAT that would have allowed the U.S. test program to proceed as long as the Soviet ASAT system remained operational; imposed a moratorium on all nuclear testing below one kiloton (the worst of all worlds, as the kiloton limit explicitly recognizes the importance of testing while simultaneously being so low as to prove essentially meaningless from a scientific perspective); and forced the president to abide by the SALT II quantitative limits even though the treaty has never been ratified by the Senate and despite repeated Soviet violations of both its spirit and letter. As the crowning blow, and contrary to the recommendations of both the Joint Budget Resolution and the House Armed Services Committees, the full House cut an additional $5.5 billion from the overall defense budget—although a 3 percent military pay raise was retained for obvious political reasons.

Something has gone very wrong with the entire process when the final bill cannot be supported by the committee's ranking Republican, when the ranking Democrat on the Senate Armed Services Committee accuses the House of having gone "too far," and when the chairman of the Senate Armed Services Committee is allegedly considering not conferencing the two authorization bills. When the authorizers of our national security willingly abdicate their responsibilities to the appropriators, the system has broken down.

House Armed Services Chairman Les Aspin argues that the recent success of these arms control incentives in the House can be interpreted as a vote of no confidence in the president's arms control policies. Since his own Armed Services Committee would have rejected any of these initiatives out of hand (and did in the case of SDI and ASAT), perhaps the success of the arms controllers on the floor should be construed as reflecting Aspin's as well as the liberal Democrat's inability to develop and maintain a policy consensus within the committee. The point, however, is that the House committee tasked with defense authorization apparently believed, and right so, that the inclusion in its bill of sweeping arms control concessions to the Soviet Union was neither proper or prudent. Unfortunately, the full House was far less cautious.

Finally, it is a statement made just prior to the bill's final passage by Les AuCoin (D-Ore.), the quintessential liberal arms controller, that deserves scrutiny and clarification. In urging Republicans to support the amended defense bill, AuCoin stated, "I can understand how many members on the Republican side feel right now, because you have lost on a fair-play basis . . ." Surely AuCoin was temporarily overwhelmed by his arms control-induced euphoria and consequently misspoke. To consciously call "fair" the inflexible mechanism that emerged out of the Rules Committee to structure the floor debate on the defense bill is beyond comprehension.

If they were truly fair, the Democrats should at least be willing to call a spade a spade. They controlled the debate from the outset and rigged the rules in such a way as to predetermine the outcome. For evidence, one has only to read HR531, the "rule" for floor consideration of the defense bill. The Democrats structured the debate in such a way as to restrict consideration of a number of "special topic" issues, prohibit perfecting legislation (i.e. compromise), and render the Armed Services Committee's position on a number of issues unattainable. While the bill in its amended form may offend the sensibilities of many Americans, it certainly cannot be regarded as a surprise under the carefully manipulated circumstances.

AuCoin's interpretation of "fairness" raises a more important point. Arms control—and for that matter all issues of national security—should have nothing to do with fairness. Fairness is a subjective term and by definition an analysis of reality. National security policy is too important to be forged by the random whims of temporary, politically motivated alliances—it demands objectivity and consistency.

Gorbachev waited 12 days after his moratorium was to have expired to react because House action on the defense bill held great promise for the Kremlin, something they did not wish to jeopardize with a premature propaganda campaign. The House fulfilled the general secretary's wildest dreams and then some. These are objective facts that must not be lost in all the excited liberal rhetoric. Reality still confronts us each and every day and should therefore demand of our elected officials a coherent international posture. Hopefully such an approach to the world around us will not elude the House of Representatives for too much longer.

REPRESENTATIVE DIOGUARDI CALLS FOR REFORMS OF THE FEDERAL FINANCIAL SYSTEM

HON. JACK F. KEMP

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 12, 1986

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, as one of a handful of certified public accountants in our Congress, our colleague Representative JOE DIOGUARDI of New York is preeminently qualified to discuss the reform of our budget and financial process. In the following article, he persuasively argues that the Federal Government's financial, management, budget, and accounting systems are a national disgrace.

Representitive DIOGUARDI is not alone. The General Accounting Office Director Frederick D. Wolf has also argued for a revamping of the budget process, strengthened Federal accounting, auditing, and reporting systems, and improved and strengthened internal controls. White House Chief of Staff Don Regan also recently called for major policy initiatives to reform the Federal financial system.

As a beginning remedy to our chaotic and haphazard accounting procedures, Representative DIOGUARDI has introduced H.R. 4495. The bill would establish a new Office of Chief Financial Officer [CFO] to direct and coordinate Federal financial management. The bill also would establish an assistant secretary for financial management in each executive department; and a comptroller in each executive agency. In general, the CFO would provide leadership and direction while monitoring executive agencies in their financial management and reporting activities. As a cosponsor of this bill, I can fully endorse those goals.

In the following article, Representative DIOGUARDI discusses some very important reforms to put the Federal Government on a more businesslike footing. For example, he raises the idea of a Federal capital budget. The Federal Government's capital expenditures—for items like roads and bridges—run over $100 billion yearly. Yet under current accounting procedures, these costs are written off in a lump sum at the beginning, rather than over a period of years. At least 37 States now have a separate capital budget. It's time the Federal Government improve its own financial accounting system by considering this idea.

Representative DIOGUARDI also raises the issue of removing trust funds from the unified budget. Social Security, highway, and some other programs are financed by their own earmarked taxes. Yet under current procedures, they are comingled with generally financed programs. Proper accounting procedures should be developed for trust funds as well as long-term costs and obligations of the Federal Government.

The line-item veto is another important budget reform that should be passed by Congress. The administration has asked repeatedly for the authority to veto individual appropriation line items in the budget, a power already enjoyed by many Governors. It could be an important new discipline for Federal spending.

In short, the current system is antiquated, unreliable, and indeed disgraceful. Our hodgepodge financial systems have resulted in wasteful spending, sloppy management, poor planning, and inaccurate reporting of the budget deficit.

I congratulate Representative DIOGUARDI for taking leadership on this priority issue, which I believe will be an important one in the year ahead. I commend the following article to my colleagues.

[From Management Accounting, August 1986]

CONGRESSMAN DIOGUARDI: "THE U.S. GOVERNMENT NEEDS A CHIEF FINANCIAL OFFICER"

(By Kathy Williams)

Will the United States government ever be run like a business—subject to proper accounting systems and procedures, a capital budget, audited financial statements, fiscal responsibility, adequate record keeping, good controls? Congressman Joseph J. DioGuardi (R-N.Y.), a former partner with Arthur Andersen & Co. and one of only four certified public accountants in Congress, is doing his best to make it happen.

Last March the freshman representative from New Rochelle in Westchester County introduced in the House of Representatives Bill H.R. 4495, the Federal Financial Management Improvement Act, calling for a chief financial officer for the federal government. Operating in much the same manner as a controller or CFO of a corporation, the federal CFO would coordinate all federal financial management activities by consolidating them within a single organization. At present, these activities are scattered across several areas: the Office of Management and Budget (OMB), Office of Personnel Management (OPM), and the Treasury in the executive branch; the various executive branch agencies; and the General Accounting Office (GAO) in the legislative branch.

"None of these entities has clearcut responsibility for oversight and direction of the federal government's financial management operations and activities," Mr. DioGuardi notes. "In addition, financial management responsibilities have frequently been shifted from one central agency to another, and in each central agency, financial management functions must compete with a number of other assigned responsibilities for their fair share of attention. There is a missing link in the federal government. The linchpin of financial discipline is nowhere to be found. The financial management leadership void must be filled."

Mr. DioGuardi became determined to try to change the government's accounting systems after hearing "horror story after horror story regarding the lack of established businesslike financial management practices" during his first year on the Government Operations Committee and attending hearings on the deficit and government waste. The businessman of 22 years was appalled by the reactive attitude and actions of Congress, "robbing Peter to pay Paul, putting out fires every day, staying one step ahead of the sheriff—that's our budgetary process."

"I thought I was going to Congress to get on the Board of Directors of Government," he exclaims. "Accountability is key to a Board of Directors, but I found we didn't have reliable financial information upon which to make decisions and report back to the public, our shareholders." He also discovered that the U.S. government operates on "a Mickey Mouse, cash basis of accounting and has no strategic planning whatsoever. The government is trained to think only a year ahead. It asks what we spent instead of how we spent it. It builds the home from the fifth floor down instead of the ground floor up. We have conditioned people in government to spend, not save," he admonishes.

He felt the time was right to introduce his legislation because of the current emphasis on reducing the federal deficit and curbing waste. A CFO could pull together previous attempts at coordinating government financial management practices. For example, the GAO for years has been reporting that "Our departments and agencies are a veritable jungle of special-purpose, incompatible, antiquated accounting systems producing unreliable, incompatible, and often irrelevant financial information. One of the latest GAO studies, moreover, reports that the federal government now uses 427 separate accounting systems, of which 53% do not conform to GAO accounting principles, standards, and related requirements," the congressman says.

The now-famous Grace Commission declared its "War on Waste" after uncovering in the government an estimated $424 billion of mismanagement and projecting a $1.96 trillion national deficit by the year 2000. J. Peter Grace, head of the Commission and chairman of W.R. Grace & Co., is, in fact, spending his own money to bring this message before the public via television commercials and print ads. The Citizens Against Government Waste, co-chaired by Mr. Grace and columnist Jack Anderson, is a nonprofit, bipartisan foundation formed to educate the public and Congress about the Grace Commission recommendations. The Grace Caucus, of which Mr. DioGuardi is an avid member, is a group of about 150 senators and representatives proselytizing to "not let the Grace Commission recommendations sit on the shelf."

Other predecessors to Bill H.R. 4495 include the Inspector General Act of 1978; the Federal Managers' Financial Integrity Act of 1982; Debt Collection Act of 1982; President Reagan's Council on Integrity and Efficiency; the President's Council on Management Improvement; a proposal by the Association of Government Accountants to strengthen controllership in the federal government; and various attempts by executive branch departments and agencies to reform their systems. These efforts aren't new—over the past 30-35 years, various systems and controls experts have developed coordinated accounting systems for the military and for other governmental operations, only to have them squelched right before actual implementation or implemented only partially. Even William E. Simon, former secretary of the treasury, 1974-77, tried to institute similar procedures in the Treasury function before he left office, but to no avail, and after he left, the matter dropped. Now Congressman Joe DioGuardi has picked up the gauntlet.

SETTING UP THE ORGANIZATION

The management structure Mr. DioGuardi envisions encompasses the CFO, who would serve in the executive office of the President; an assistant secretary for financial management in each executive department; and a controller in each executive agency. All would be appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate. The CFO would serve a 10-year nonreappointable term, and the assistant secretaries and controllers would serve a four-year, reappointable term. A Federal Finance Council, consisting of the CFO and the assistant secretaries for financial management, also would be established to assist the CFO in formulating plans and objectives, comment on proposed major changes in financial management operations, and prepare recommendations on selected issues.

In general, the federal CFO would provide leadership and direction while monitoring executive agencies in their financial management and reporting activities. He would develop and maintain a five-year strategic plan that would cover "system enhancements, staffing needs, technology improvements, required legislative actions, financial management objectives, information requirements, and budget priorities," Mr. DioGuardi explains. The CFO also would create financial statements for the government, which would be subjected to audits, as well as maintain the government's central accounting and reporting records. He also would ensure that personnel were managing the financial operations properly—even down to the details of making sure cash and checks were deposited as soon as they came in, something that doesn't happen now. "He needs tentacles going into each governmental agency and operation if this thing is to work. Otherwise, he's going to be on Cloud Nine, talking about accounting principles and not knowing what's happening in the trenches," Mr. DioGuardi exclaims.

A natural candidate for the position, he muses, would be "someone from a major company—like ITT, Texaco, IBM—where you have to literally pull together all kinds of pieces of financial information from various divisions and industries and even holding companies. You need someone who has been in the trenches gathering information, managing the financial function—a CFO from the private sector, whether he or she is certified or not."

IS A CFO NECESSARY?

When criticized by other congressmen for concentrating too much on numbers and not enough on compassion, he instantly fires back that he is just as concerned as the next person about humanity, and cites other bills he has introduced—those on drug abuse, child abuse, suicide legislation, and homeless housing assistance. "I'm making qualitative judgments. I know there's a deficit problem, but I'm willing to increase some programs and decrease others based on how they are managed and what their needs are. Cutting right across the board to reduce the deficit is nonsense," he explodes. "We've got to exercise every bit of compassion to identify social needs, programs we need, and allocate resources. Once we allocate those resources, however, we must manage that program the way we'd manage any business. Let's make sure we hold people responsible. If they don't do their job, out! If they do their job, give them a bonus."

He reiterates his accounting background and speculates that if more members of Congress were attuned to business, they would better understand long-term ramifications of their decisions. "We've counted 245 attorneys and only four accountants in Congress—at a time when we are trying to balance the books in government, dealing with budget issues, tax issues, economic issues. More than half of what we do relates to analysis, either quantitative or qualitative, that almost requires an accounting or business background . . . budget systems don't tie in with accounting systems. We have a budgetary system, an appropriation system, and continuing resolutions and supplementary budgets. I'm a CPA, and you can't imagine how difficult it is for me to follow what's going on. How other legislators are making these multi-billion dollar decisions, don't ask me. Then waste—waste isn't one big thing. Waste is thousands of small things. It's structural, it's systemic, and it must be approached from the point of view of systems and planning—a CFO's point of view. That's why I have to make this issue my crusade."

Joe DioGuardi isn't alone in his efforts to install a CFO in the federal government. "The idea first began to be proposed seriously in the early part of 1980 by leaders in financial management in both the public and private sectors," he notes. "Roland W. Burris, the comptroller of the state of Illinois, and Joseph E. Connor, chairman of Price Waterhouse & Co., have both assumed a key role in promoting the need for a CFO." Various other individuals, nonprofit organizations, and private sector groups are continuing this effort.

The General Accounting Office, charged with setting uniform accounting standards and principles for all federal agencies, is the government's independent auditor and a strong proponent for financial management reform. Comptroller General Charles A Bowsher, head of the GAO, says, "We need better financial reporting at the federal level. It's the key to the whole issue. We have the auditor (the GAO) and we need a strong CFO function in the government—a scorekeeper for the executive branch. OMB is in charge of the budget, and the CFO would keep score of how the budgeted money is spent, so the two would work closely."

In a letter to a member of the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee, the counterpart to the House Government Operations Committee, Mr. Bowsher noted that "financial management in the federal government is a major problem facing us today. Poor systems, information inadequacies, and weak controls have frequently resulted in wasteful spending, inefficient management and losses totaling billions of dollars." He added, ". . . current financial reporting practices of the federal government do not disclose the actual cost of operations; do not disclose the financial condition of the federal government; do not disclose the current and probably future costs of investment or policy decisions; do not permit effective comparison of actual costs or accomplishments to budget plans; and do not provide the timely information required for efficient management of programs . . . there is no official with clearly defined authority and responsibility for assuring the effective and efficient operation of the federal government's accounting and other financial management systems. Clearly the original concept of tieing management improvement to the budget just hasn't worked; the time has come to find a more workable solution to these problems. I believe the establishment of an independent Chief Financial Officer is a major element of such an approach."

AN EDITORIAL VIEWPOINT

HON. DOUG BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 12, 1986

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, as Congress considers the troubling questions that have arisen since the tragic loss of the space shuttle, Challenger, the editor of the Omaha World Herald on September 2, 1986, produced a particularly insightful statement on the question of future spending for the Space Program. I commend the editorial to the attention of my colleagues.

BETTER OPTIONS ARE AVAILABLE THAN THROWING CASH AT NASA

Doubling the budget will not necessarily solve the problems the United States has with its space program. Spending twice as much is how the American Institute of Aeronautics and Astronautics proposes to solve the problem, but the solution isn't that simple.

For one thing, the government doesn't have the money to double the $7.5 billion-a-year budget of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

For another, the Challenger investigation has brought to light a number of questions about the agency's management procedures, as well as its mission and goals. These questions need to be answered before decisions are made about what level of financing will be necessary.

The country can't afford too much delay. Without the ability to replace its space satellites as they wear out, the country could eventually find itself at a severe disadvantage in the areas of communications, weather forecasting and military surveillance. The Soviet Union isn't the only competitor. Space programs also are emerging in Europe, Japan and China.

Last April, federal audits indicated that NASA and its contractors wasted billions of dollars on the shuttle and other space programs. The New York Times reported that the audits reflected "a far different picture from that widely held before the Challenger catastrophe of an essentially smoothly running, trouble-free agency."

A higher level of spending may become necessary to restore the nation's satellite-launching capability and pursue whatever other goals Congress and the White House set for NASA. The time to increase the spending, however, is when the goals have been set and NASA has demonstrated that it is able to pursue them efficiently.

ALABAMA WILDERNESS ACT OF 1986

HON. RONNIE G. FLIPPO

OF ALABAMA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 12, 1986

Mr. FLIPPO. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to introduce today the Alabama Wilderness Act of 1986.

In 1974 Congress enacted the Eastern Wilderness Act which designated 12,000 acres within the William F. Bankhead National Forest in Alabama as the Sipsey Wilderness. The legislation I am introducing today would expand the Sipsey Wilderness by designating an additional 17,700 acres located adjacent to the Sipsey as wilderness. In addition this bill would designate the Sipsey River as a component of the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System. The Sipsey Wilderness and the proposed changes are located entirely in Lawrence County, AL which I am proud to represent in Congress.

This is not the first time I have introduced legislation to expand the Sipsey Wilderness. I first introduced a bill to expand the Sipsey Wilderness in the 97th Congress in 1982. This bill proposed adding approximately 29,000 to the Sipsey. The House passed this bill on August 4, 1982 by a vote of 354 to 49. I reintroduced similar legislation in the 98th Congress. Again the House passed this bill on June 6, 1983 by voice vote with no dissent heard.

The bills approved by the House in 1982 and 1983 enjoyed widespread support throughout my district and the State.

The bills enjoyed widespread support in Lawrence County where the proposed wilderness land is located. The bills were endorsed by the county tax assessor, the county tax collector, the Lawrence County Association of Elected Officials, the local members of the State judiciary, the local chamber of commerce and a wide spectrum of public and private citizens.

The wilderness expansion bills of 1982 and 1983 were widely supported throughout the State of Alabama. The bills were endorsed by every major newspaper in my district and throughout the State. The Governor, Lieutenant Governor, the State attorney general, the State treasurer, the State auditor, the director of the Alabama Bureau of Publicity and Information, the commissioner of the State Department of Conservation and Natural Resources and the State Director of the Division of Game and Fish also supported the bill. In addition, the mayors of Anniston, Birmingham, Montgomery, and Decatur, AL endorsed the bills as did the Birmingham City Council, the Jefferson County Commission, the Lauderdale County Commission, the Bass Anglers Sportsman Society, the Lewis Smith Lake Civil Association and the city of Vestavia Hills, AL.

Despite the widespread level of support throughout Alabama, the bills passed by the House in 1982 and 1983 were not enacted into law. A few within the State demanded further negotiations and concessions.

The bill I am introducing today is the product of lengthy and tortuous negotiations and compromise extending over 3 years. This bill satisfies an estimated 99 percent of the concerns of the interested parties on both sides of the issue. I must admit that there are parties on both sides of the issue who apparently will never endorse a proposal that does not satisfy their every wish and whim.

The time has come, however, to put the hay in the barn and fully protect these priceless acres of Alabama.

The Alabama Wilderness Act of 1986 is really consistent with the Land and Resource Management Plan prepared for the National Forests in Alabama by the Forest Service and published last March. This plan recommended increasing wilderness area in Alabama by 9,793 to 18,720 acres. The Management Plan determined "that any wilderness acreage selected by Congress within a range of 9,793 to 19,350 acres would not appreciably affect the production of other nonwilderness goods and services".

The commercial forest land base in Alabama is the third largest in the Nation. Only Georgia and Oregon have more commercial forest land than Alabama. Two-thirds of the land in Alabama or 21.3 million acres are covered by forest. Some of this forest land located in the southern half of the State is among the most productive in the country. The expanded Sipsey Wilderness proposed in the bill I am introducing today of a little more than 30,000 acreas would only amount to less than six-tenths of 1 percent of the total land area in Alabama and less than two-tenths of 1 percent of the total commerical forest land in Alabama.

Like most other Southern States, 75 percent of Alabama's commercial forest land is owned and controlled by thousands of nonindustrial private owners. Our forestry industry depends on free timber markets with many participants for most of its wood supply. Public forest lands account for only 1 million acres of the total commerical forest lands in Alabama. The expanded wilderness that I am proposing would amount to less than 5 percent of the total public forest lands in Alabama.

This legislation proposes to include in the National Wilderness Preservation System approximately 28,500 acres, encompassing a network of canyon-enclosed streams and tributaries flowing directly into the existing Sipsey Wilderness Area, and culminating there in the formation of the West Fort Sipsey River. The protection thus afforded to a virtual entire watershed benefits our State and Nation by preserving a complete eco-system harboring a nationally renowned refuge for unique plant and animal life; by assuring the permanent physical intergrity of the beautiful West Fork Sipsey River, which has been designated by this Congress for study as a potential unit of the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System; and by helping maintain the purity of Lewis Smith Reservoir downstream, a major source of water supply for Alabama's largest city.

The canyons of the Sipsey, formed by tributaries slicing through massive, flat-lying sandstone beds, have long been recognized as a refuge for a unique diversity of life forms; 78 species of fish, including two unnamed, endemic darters, inhabit the Bankhead Forest's remote streams. The gorges and uplands provide habitat for 80 species of woodland birds, many of which must have hardwood to survive. The Sipsey has a full range of mammals, including not only abundant game wildlife, but also otter, mink, beaver, raccoon, opossum, shrews, bats, and—a true relic of ancient times—elusive evidence of mountain lion. The geology of the area is particularly remarkable, with precipitous cliffs and massive boulders revealing plant and animal fossils from the dim past.

But the Sipsey's greatest renown lies in its unique botany, resulting in part from the remarkable coincidence of three geographic regions, the Coastal Plain, Appalachian Mountains, and the Piedmont Plateau, and three frost zones in one area. In consequence, the deep, shadowy, and moist canyons harbor a plant fauna of unusual size, diversity, distribution, or rarity, some very damanding in habitat. Moreover, receding glaciers from the ice age have left within the narrow gorges a remnant of such northern trees as the Canada Hemlock and sweet birch, and 22 other plants which reach their southern limit in the Bankhead National Forest.

The watershed is also a refuge for the kind of old-growth hardwood forest which once covered the Eastern United States, but which survives now only in such remote areas as the Sipsey's canyons. According to U.S. Forest Service date, hardwood trees over 60 years of age constitute the single most predominant type in the acreage here proposed for inclusion in the wilderness. A few of the most inaccessible canyons contain coves harboring virgin stands of both hardwood and conifer, notably hemlock. A visitor to the proposed wilderness sees a forest that is overwhelmingly old growth, naturally regenerated, predominantly hardwood.

Honeycombed by canyons, the land involved in this legislation is not appropriate for intensive timber production. In 1971, the U.S. Forest Service performed a hydrological analysis of the entire watershed of the proposed wilderness and found that most of the acreage was inappropriate for intensive management due to a high erosion hazard and potential for intolerable solid damage on the steep slopes and floodplains. Indeed, according to current U.S. Forest Service data, less than one-fourth of the acreage included in their RARE II "further planning" areas here lends itself to intensive management, and this is restricted to the narrow divides between canyons. However, because the unique ecology of the canyons are dependent upon a water supply from slope wash and subsurface seepage from the divides, clearcutting, roadbuilding and other disruptive practices there can radically impact the canyons flooding them in wet seasons and desiccating them during drought. Therefore, the physical integrity of both the existing wilderness, and the expanded wilderness as here proposed, dictate that all of the land involved in this legislation be included in the National Wilderness Preservation System.

In the Sipsey, abundant water and sheltering walls enclose an island of the past. Sheer sandstone cliffs, crowned with mountain laurel and filled with rare ferns and wildflowers, rear above the steep valley slopes. Hundreds of waterfalls cascade down the rock walls or plunge to the valley floors. Numerous rock shelters occur throughout the miles of gorges, and monstrous boulders lie shattered at the base of the cliffs. Here indeed one finds outstanding opportunities for solitude and (the) primitive, unconfined form of recreation required by the Wilderness Act of 1964.

The Alabama Wilderness Act of 1986 differs in many respects from the 1982 and 1983 proposals to expand the Sipsey Wilderness. For the most part these changes reflect years of negotiations and compromise, the development of new information and data, the publication of the Final Management Plan for the National Forests in Alabama in March of this year, and the completion of the studies necessary to justify adding the Sipsey River to the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System.

In 1982 and again in 1983, the House passed legislation that proposed expanding the Sipsey Wilderness by 29,500 acres. The Alabama Wilderness Act of 1986 would add only about 17,700 acres. This represents a reduction of 11,800 acres or 40 percent from the original proposals.

The Alabama Wilderness Act of 1986 differs also because it includes language designating approximately 9,500 acres around the free flowing Sipsey River as part of the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System. This is a welcomed addition to this legislation.

The waters of the Sipsey River flow down through Alabama feeding the water supply for numerous towns and cities including the major metropolitan area of Birmingham, AL. The enactment of the Alabama Wilderness Act of 1986 would ensure the quality of this water supply by expanding the wilderness and protecting the river canyons that surround this watershed.

In addition the bill provides for added protection by including specific language directing the Secretary of Agriculture to monitor and maintain the quality of the water in the Sipsey River.

In earlier versions of this bill, I proposed keeping the socalled Northwest Road that runs from east to west along the top of the existing Sipsey Wilderness area open. After careful study and discussions with the Forest Service and others, I have decided to delete this provision from the Alabama Wilderness Act of 1986. This decision is based on a number of factors.

This road would bisect an expanded wilderness area and complicate the management of the entire area. In addition, maintaining the road in the middle of wilderness would be very expensive. The road cuts through a canyon, is very steep in parts and contains a number of switchbacks—all of which are expensive to maintain. The individuals who use this road have pointed out that the Ridge Road provides a convenient alternative route. The continued use of the road is not compatible with the wilderness concept.

There is also another reason for closing the road related to travel by horse. Horseback riding enthusiasts throughout the Southeast have long recognized that the Sipsey Wilderness is an ideal area for horseback riding. Unfortunately, the Forest Service currently bans travel by horse in the Sipsey Wilderness. I intend to press as I did successfully in 1982 and 1983 to include report language that would open an expanded wilderness to horseback riding. The closing of the Northwest Road would provide the Forest Service with the opportunity to develop an ideal horse trail.

Mr. Speaker, the infestation of the southern pine beetle in my State is creating havoc through the forest lands. This problem is of vital concern to everyone dependent upon the forest lands for their livelihood and recreation. The Federal, State and local authorities in Alabama are extending vast amounts of time, money and energy in the battle to stop this infestation. I am pleased to note that the Forest Service has published an environmental impact statement describing their plans and policies regarding this problem. I want to provide the Forest Service with the maximum amount of flexibility necessary to assist them in their work. This will be reflected in report language.

Mr. Speaker, the Alabama Wilderness Act of 1986 is the product of countless hours of intense study and negotiations on the part of many Alabamians. The widespread interest in this issue has enabled me to benefit from the advice and recommendations of large numbers of knowledgeable Alabamians with expertise in forestry, conservation, tourism, recreation, and education. I want to take this opportunity to thank each for their patience, participation, and contribution.

The Sipsey Wilderness has been the subject of extensive hearings in the House. The Subcommittee on Public Lands and the Committee on Agriculture both conducted hearings on this subject in 1982 and 1983.

I want to thank and commend Mr. SEIBERLING, chairman of the Subcommittee on Public Lands and Mr. DE LA GARZA, chairman of the Agriculture Committee for their patience, understanding and considerable contributions to this legislation. They along with their colleagues who serve on their respective committees and their staff have been a great source of encouragement and wise counsel throughout the many years we have worked on this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support the Alabama Wilderness Act of 1986.

A TRIBUTE TO DUANE NIGHTINGALE

HON. MEL LEVINE

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 12, 1986

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in recognition of Duane Nightingale, an exceptional American whom I have had the privilege of knowing for many years.

As the customer relations manager of General Telephone Co. in Santa Monica, Duane is a visible and respected figure in the greater Los Angeles community. In addition to his role at General Telephone, Duane donates his time and talents to a number of civic organizations where he has served as president of the Santa Monica Kiwanis, the Navy League, director of the Santa Monica Boys Club, director of the YMCA, first vice chairman of the Salvation Army advisory board, director of the Santa Monica College Associates.

It has always been a pleasure to work with Duane and a recent article in the Evening Outlook revealed that a number of people share similar feelings. I ask permissin to reprint this glowing profile which offers an accurate portrayal of a very special man.

A TRIBUTE TO DUANE NIGHTINGALE

(By Will Thorne)

Among the plaques and commendations that line the walls of Duane Nightingale's office—last one on the right, second row from the top, to be exact—is one naming him the Santa Monica Chamber of Commerce's "Ambassador of the Month."

The title given for the period of July to August 1984, has long expired, but it so neatly describes Nightingale's job that it still seems apt and current.

"It's a pretty good descriptive term." agreed Nightingale, who is actually described in the General Telephone Co. table of organization as the firm's "customer relations manager."

"And it works both ways, too. I represent the company here in the community of Santa Monica—and sometimes I find myself representing the community to the company. I'm here to help out whoever needs to be helped.

Nightingale, who started with —— a pole-climbing lineman 31 years ago, is the first company ambassador, a post that was created in 1981 after years in which the company suffered the slings and darts of a public outraged at what it considered the poorest service.

"In those years, we had quite an image problem." said Nightingale. "It was felt that somebody active in the community and working with the community could help to improve that image.

"When I was asked to do the job, they said they would like me to get out and tell our story—but they were not sure how I was to go about it and they could not offer any guidelines.

Wiser still was a GTC decision to plow enough money into its Santa Monica and Westside facilities to make the system work as well as any U.S. system can said Nightingale.

"The company spent a lot of money in the community to improve the system," he said. "Without that happening nothing I could have done would have worked."

Has it been a success?

Yes. Nightingale said without hesitation, "I feel very strongly that this has been a success."

The community seems to agree with him—and the reason it names for success is most often Nightingale himself.

"He's one of my very favorite people in the whole world," said Bernice Bratter, executive director of the Senior Health and Peer Counseling Center. "He's such a kind, decent caring type of person. Duane really cares. He has given us a lot of help with our work."

Pete Barrett a community-oriented businessman and himself a volunteer worker for a number of Santa Monica organizations, finds Nightingale a "very hard worker."

"I've been with him at committee meetings at 7:30 in the morning and again as late as 9:30 or 10 o'clock at night," he said.

"He really is a good guy." Said City Manager John Jalili, "Whenever we have contacted Duane on any issue, whether it's dealing with senior center bond act monies or the need for telephones in the park, he's always been very prompt and most helpful."

Over the years, Nightingale has won a reputation both for being influential and in a city where clefts have been deep between political factions, something of a power broker.

"He's a very objective and he looks at other points of view," said Aubreyu Austin, board chairman of Santa Monica Bank. "He's a no-nonsense guy with a good common-sense approach. He doesn't get ruffled."

"He's been very helpful to this office," said Carol Kurtz, administrative aide to Assemblyman Tom Hayden, D-Santa Monica, Malibu. "It's almost like you don't know where he stands politically."

The winner of all these kudos was born 52 years ago in Norfolk, Neb., the middle of three children of a salesman who took whatever work he could to keep his family going, and moved it to Denver when Duane was only 5.

Throughout high school, Nightingale worked to support himself at such jobs as sweeper boy for the school district and theater usher, and dreamed of becoming an architect.

"I always thought that would be an exciting profession to design buildings," he add. "But I just couldn't afford to go on past high school."

In 1955, at the age of 21, he joined General Telephone in Redondo Beach and, within six months, was a cable splicer. But in October 1961, when GTC started looking for an ambassador. Nightingale had worked his way up to area service operations manager in Santa Monica—and was already a known quantity in the community.

He was a past president of Santa Monica Kiwanis and the Navy League, director of the Santa Monica Boys Club, director of the YMCA, first vice chairman of the Salvation Army advisory board, director of Santa Monica College Associates and member of the college's advisory board and a host of others.

Among his honors were commendations from the Los Angeles County Board of Supervisors and awards as Lion of the Year, Navy Leaguer of the Year and—of course—the chamber's nomination as Ambassador of the Month.

"That's why I was chosen because I was already active in the community," he said.

"And I still would be, even if it wasn't my job," he added. This isn't work. It's fun."

TRANSMISSION OF AIDS

HON. HENRY A. WAXMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 12, 1986

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, as the AIDS epidemic continues to claim more Americans' lives, a great deal of confusion has arisen about the danger of transmission of this disease by means other than sexual contact, use of unclean needles, or from pregnant woman to fetus. I would like to call my colleagues' attention to two particular documents, demonstrating that, while AIDS is an extremely serious illness, it is not an easy one to transmit or catch.

The first is an article from the New England Journal of Medicine by Dr. Merle Sande. I find it to be a clear summary of the disease and the lack of any transmission through nonsexual, nonblood contact.

The second is a summary of a paper presented at the international conference on AIDS this summer, which lays out possibly the worst case imaginable—a violent, brain-damaged hemophiliac man with the HIV virus. Even in this worst case—involving biting and scratching—no transmission or even exposure occurred.

I commend these articles to my colleagues.

TRANSMISSION OF AIDS—THE CASE AGAINST CASUAL CONTAGION

(By Merle A. Sande, M.D.)

The epidemic of acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (AIDS) has become an epidemic of fear. Although our understanding of the disease has been progressing rapidly, the new knowledge has often produced more public concern than relief. The identification of the etiologic agent as a virus—although of critical scientific importance—did little to quell the fears of either the medical community or the general population. Instead, people reacted to the fact that AIDS is caused by a virus with a hysteria reminiscent of another viral infection—the polio epidemic of the early 1950s.

As each new obsevation was announced, concern intensified. Isolation of the virus from semen explained the rapid spread of the disease in the sexually active male homosexual population but aiso aroused the fear of potential spread in the heterosexual population. The recognition of an asymptomatic-carrier state amplified the fear of sexual contagion in our society, and that fear was further intensified by reports of widespread transmission of the AIDS virus by heterosexual activity in Africa. The recognition that contaminated blood and blood products were the vectors for transmission of the virus to transfusion recipients and patients with hemophilia and that intravenous drug users acquired the infection by sharing needles raised the possibility that health care workers could be at similar risk from occupational exposure. Probably the most sensational information, and perhaps the most misleading, was that the virus had been isolated from saliva and then from tears. This suggested to the public that the disease might be spread by food handlers, by kissing or shaking hands, or even by contact with fomites. The media did little to dispel these notions; on the contrary, the public was led to believe that AIDS was a highly contagious disease.

The belief that the AIDS virus can be transmitted by casual contact has produced numerous political, legal, and ethical dilemmas. Responses have been varied, including calls for quarantine, mass screening of all potentially infected persons, expulsion from military service of all antibody-positive personnel, and exclusion of infected children from schools. In some cases refusal to care for AIDS patients has been condoned.

Throughout the epidemic, the Centers for Disease Control (CDC) has had a critical role in countering such reactions. Rational guidelines (based on the best available data on the modes of transmission) for preventing the transmission of the AIDS virus were developed and widely publicized early in the course of the epidemic. However, the response of public officials has been erratic, and the public remains confused.

Where are we now, five years after the epidemic became evident? First of all, although the epidemic is still increasing at an alarming rate nationwide, there is some indication that the rate of increase is slowing in certain areas, such as New York City, and in San Francisco the number of new cases has actually been constant for the past year. This observation may reflect a slowing of the rate of viral acquisition. According to one recent epidemiologic survey in San Francisco, only 5 percent of seronegative homosexual men acquired evidence of infection between 1984 and 1985 (Moss AR: personal communication).

Secondly, and surprisingly, the disease has remained confined largely to the high-risk groups (homosexual men, intravenous drug users, patients with hemophilia and persons who received transfusions before blood screening was introduced, and the offspring and sexual partners of members of these groups), and the distribution of cases among these groups has been remarkably constant throughout the epidemic. In only 5 percent of cases is the mode of transmission unknown. Thus, there is no evidence that the disease is spreading to other populations.

Thirdly, certain factors have been shown to potentiate the transmission of the AIDS virus in the highrisk groups. Very early in the epidemic, studies from the CDC demonstrated that the risk of spread in the homosexual male population correlated with the number of sexual partners. This behavior accounted for the rapid dissemination of the disease throughout the country. Rectal receptive intercourse and the exchange of blood through the sharing of needles are activities that promote viral transmission. These activities may allow fluids containing infected cells to enter the circulation of the uninfected recipient.

In addition, intrauterine spread or vertical transmission of the disease from mother to fetus is an established mode of transmission. The chance that an infected mother will transmit the virus to her unborn offspring may be as high as 50 percent. Unfortunately, clinical AIDS is much more likely to develop in an infected infant than in an infected adult. The virus has been isolated from breast milk, and breast feeding could represent another mode of transmission.

Furthermore, there seems to be no doubt that the disease can be spread by heterosexual sex. Although heterosexual transmission has been postulated as the predominant mode of transmission in equatorial Africa, studies conclusively documenting this remain to be published. That the virus can be transmitted from men to women during vaginal intercourse is supported by the fact that female prostitutes in Africa appear to be at extremely high risk of infection. According to the CDC (CDC AIDS program: personal communication), the total number of such cases in the United States in which heterosexual transmission has been implicated remains low—only 180 so far—and the disease in 152 of these cases was transmitted from a man to a woman. On the other hand, examples of sexual transmission from a woman to a man are more difficult to document; only 28 cases have been reported in the United States.

It is possible that the difference between the two sexes in the rate of transmission is due to the fact that there are more male intravenous drug users and bisexuals capable of transmitting the disease to women than there are infected women capable of transmitting the virus to men. Although it would appear that the potential for the future spread of this disease in the heterosexual community remains a serious problem, we still do not know the relative risk of spread of the virus through vaginal intercourse and are even less secure in our knowledge about transmission from women to men. To date there is no evidence that the disease is spread by oral intercourse or by kissing.

Finally, remarkably consistent current data indicate that occupational exposure to patients infected with the AIDS virus does not pose a serious risk to health care workers. Over 1750 health care workers with intense exposure to patients with AIDS have been studied for evidence of antibody to the AIDS virus. Of the workers not otherwise members of high-risk groups (e.g., homesexual men or intravenous drug abusers), less than 0.1 percent were found to be antibody positive. In our institution (San Francisco General Hospital), more than 300 health care workers with intense and sustained exposure to patients with AIDS for nearly four years have been studied; all are antibody negative, with the exception of 14 of 50 homosexual male hospital workers (Gerberding JL: personal communication).

Can the disease be contracted by an accidental needle stick with a needle contaminated by blood from a patient with AIDS? Probably yes, but with an extremely low frequency (less than 0.5 percent). Only one documented case, in a British nurse who acquired the virus after actually receiving a microinjection of blood after an arterial puncture, has been reported. Three additional cases of possible needle-stick transmission in the United States have been suggested but not proved. One worker was not available for followup, and the other two denied high-risk activity; it is possible that in each of these three cases, acquisition of the virus could have been through one of the more well-described routes. In addition, over 660 subjects (including one who acquired hepatitis B) with needle sticks from infected needles have been studied and found not to have seroconverted. The low frequency of transmission of the AIDS virus by accidental needle stick as compared with that of hepatitis B, in which 20 to 30 percent of those so exposed acquire the virus, may be due to the large differences in the concentrations of infectious particles in the blood (up to 10^{13} viral particles per milliliter for hepatitis B, as compared with 10^{4} for AIDS). One can therefore conclude that caring for AIDS patients, even when there is intensive exposure to contaminated secretions, is not a high-risk activity. Infection-control committees should therefore implement policies to minimize accidental needle sticks and develop infection-control procedures based on the current CDC recommendations.

The article by Friedland et al. in this issue offers strong supporting evidence that the AIDS virus is not transmitted by casual contact, even within a family unit in which there is intimate contact with infected persons. Of 101 subjects tested who were living in a household with a documented carrier of the AIDS virus, none acquired the virus, and it seems clear that the one antibody-positive subject was infected by vertical transmission in utero or at the time of birth. The implications of this study are strengthened by the fact that the infection-control procedures followed by many health care workers were obviously not employed in the families studied. The duration of exposure reported was certainly sufficient, and the interactions numerous enough, to provide every opportunity for the virus to be spread within the family if such transmission was likely. Other, smaller family studies have produced results consistent with those of Friedland et al. Only 1 of 35 household members associated with 14 seropositive Danish patients with hemophilia had serum antibody to the AIDS virus (human T-cell lymphotropic virus Type III [HTLV-III]). This person had engaged in vaginal, oral, and anal intercourse with one of the infected patients with hemophilia. The failure of the virus to spread in the secretion-rich environment of the family may in part be explained by the very low isolation rate recently reported in samples of saliva. Ho and his colleagues could isolate HTLV-III from only 1 of 83 saliva samples cultured from antibody-positive subjects, although the virus was detected in 28 of the 50 blood samples tested from the same population. Others have confirmed these studies.

The picture is therefore clear. The AIDS virus is spread sexually, by the injection of contaminated blood, and vertically from mother to fetus. Other modes of transmission are extremely rare. Persons at high risk of acquiring the virus are men who are homosexually and bisexually active, intravenous drug abusers, persons receiving infected blood product intravenously, and children born of infected mothers. At intermediate risk are persons, expecially woman, who engage in heterosexual sex with members of high-risk groups. Groups whose members are highly unlikely to acquire the virus (i.e., virtually no-risk groups) include health care workers caring for AIDS patients and anyone who has casual contact with persons infected with the AIDS virus, including food handlers, schoolchildren, coworkers, and family members. On the basis of these facts, the keys to preventing transmission of the virus are (1) the screening of all donated blood and (2) education and other attempts to modify risky sexual behavior and intravenous drug abuse.

It is now time for members of the medical profession, armed with this knowledge, to take a more active and influential role in quelling the hysteria over the casual transmission of AIDS. We need to support public and medical officials who oppose universal screening, quarantine, the exclusion of students from classrooms, and the removal of employees, including health care workers, from the work place.[7] The evidence presented by Friedland et al. is a powerful argument with which to counter the public's fear of casual contagion and should be used to thwart attempts to discriminate against persons in the so-called high-risk groups.

SUMMARY OF PAPER PRESENTED AT THE INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE ON AIDS

Risk of Transmission of HTLV III/LAV from Human Bites. C. Tsoukas T. Hadjis, L. Theberge, P. Gold, M. O'Shaughnessy, P. Feorino. Montreal General Hospital, Hopital Notre Dame de la Merci, Montreal, LCDC, Ottawa Canada; CDC, Atlanta, USA.

HTLV III/LAV is known to be transmitted through intimate sexual contact, IV drug abuse or via blood transfusions. Casual contact in public schools should not constitute a risk of transmission of this virus. Arguments for keeping infected children out of school arise from concerns for potential exchange of blood or saliva via cuts, bites or bleeding. To examine the relative risk of transmission of this virus via bites and scratches, we studied 188 health care workers who were in contact with a brain damaged hemophiliac with AIDS-related complex (ARC). This 36-year old man suffered extensive neurologic impairment following a motor vehicle accident and now exhibits violent behaviour, including biting and scratching those around him. In a two-year period while he had typical manifestations of ARC, he inflicted bites and scratches on 30 health care workers causing skin puncture wounds with residual scars. His mouth was frequently full of saliva and blood, his fingernails soiled with semen, feces and urine.

Extensive immune evaluation was carried out on all personnel six months after skin trauma. All were normal and there were no significant differences between the bite and casual contact groups. All persons bitten or scratched were HTLV III/LAV antibody negative by Western blotting. The patient was antibody positive and his peripheral blood lymphocytes were virus positive on coculture with H9 cells. Lymphocytes of 25 exposed individuals tested were culture negative.

We conclude that this patient with ARC, proven viremic for HTLV III/LAV and producing copious amounts of body fluids, failed to infect those caring for him even through the extensive skin trauma produced by bits and scratches. Thus the risk of transmission of this virus from bites and scratches under similar conditions should be very low.

WHY THE DOG DIDN'T BARK IN ANGOLA

HON. WM. S. BROOMFIELD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 12, 1986

Mr. BROOMFIELD. Mr. Speaker, a recent Washington Times article by syndicated columnist Cord Meyer (August 29, 1986) provides an insightful analysis of the current situation in Angola. The article provides a useful update on recent events there and describes a military standoff that could spur negotiations which might lead to national reconciliation. This is the laudable goal of the Reagan administration and it should be supported by those of us in the Congress.

Mr. Meyer argues that the Marxist "MPLA leadership will not negotiate with UNITA as long as it has reason to hope that UNITA's access to U.S. arms will be terminated." It is clear that applying broad restrictions on the President's ability to conduct our Nation's foreign policy is not in the best interests of the United States, nor does it help the subjugated people of Angola. The article, which follows, is must reading prior to upcoming consideration of the Intelligence authorization bill.

[From the Washington Times, Aug. 29, 1986]

WHY THE DOG DIDN'T BARK IN ANGOLA

(By Cord Meyer)

Just as the dog that did not bark provided the crucial clue in the Sherlock Holmes story, so the failure to date of the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola (MPLA) to mount its long-threatened general offensive successfully is a critically important non-event.

It is the best evidence that military victory over Jonas Savimbi's UNITA guerrillas may be slipping beyond the reach of Moscow's Angolan satellite.

After last fall's powerful MPLA attack caught UNITA by surprise and almost overwhelmed Mr. Savimbi's main southern base, the Soviets appear to have decided to go for broke this year to knock UNITA out of the war before the newly authorized flow of covert American arms can improve Mr. Savimbi's chances.

After the tripartite Soviet-Angolan-Cuban consultations held in Moscow in January 1986, General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev asserted that "no one should have any doubts about the Soviet Union's unswerving commitment" to Angola. To make good on that promise, the Soviets have not only replaced all the equipment lost by the Angolan army in last year's fighting but have poured in additional modern fighter bombers, helicopter gunships, tanks, and radar to re-equip the 60,000 MPLA army and the 35,000 Cuban troops in Angola.

Faced with this formidable attempt to destroy once and for all the 50,000 UNITA guerrillas, Mr. Savimbi has carried out a brilliantly conceived and well-executed preemptive strategy of keeping President Eduardo dos Santo's Angolan army continually off balance. By raids against the oil installations in Cabinda and against the diamond mines and coffee plantations in the northeast, UNITA commanders have forced the MPLA to defend on a wide front and so far have prevented the concentration necessary for a successful attack on UNITA's southern base.

Finally, this month as the MPLA built up at Cuito Cuanavale the armor and ammunition for a major offensive, Mr. Savimbi struck preemptively with the new American anti-aircraft and anti-tank weapons his men have quickly learned how to use. On one day, the MPLA forces lost six military helicopters. Although heavy fighting still continues, both Pentagon officials and UNITA representatives in Washington are optimistic that, with the rains due in five weeks, the MPLA has almost run out of time to conduct its planned offensive.

In a demonstration of his confidence that he has fought the MPLA to a stalemate, Mr. Savimbi has announced the holding of UNITA's national congress at his southern capital at Jamba in a few weeks, and more than 2,000 delegates are expected to attend from within the country and abroad.

According to those who have spoken with MPLA President Eduardo dos Santos and his Cabinet ministers, the MPLA leaders attribute their failure to destroy UNITA to three major factors.

First, the UNITA spoiling offensive in the north and central regions forced them to disperse their forces and to resupply some towns by air.

Second, the repeal of the Clark Amendment and the Reagan administration's decision to supply American weapons to Mr. Savimbi covertly made any attack on UNITA's southern base much more costly and dangerous.

Third, the plung in world oil prices has cut the MPLA's hard currency earnings from $1.7 billion last year to an estimated $900 million this year. President dos Santos is understandably reluctant to risk in an offensive gamble modern weapons that he may not have the money to replace.

If, as now seems likely, UNITA has fought the MPLA to a standstill, the heavy rains in October will severely restrict the fighting until next spring, and the question is whether the military standoff can become the motive for the genuine negotiation toward national reconciliation that has always been Mr. Savimbi's basic objective.

According to reliable sources, there have been contacts between MPLA and UNITA officials but no evidence yet that Mr. dos Santos is ready to talk. The hard-line faction in the MPLA will predictably press for another Soviet-backed effort next year to destroy UNITA, while the moderates in the MPLA are known to favor negotiations with Mr. Savimbi and a Cuban troop withdrawal.

The current movement in the U.S. House of Representatives to end all covert funding to UNITA and to require that future American support to Mr. Savimbi be debated openly and provided overtly will give the Soviets and their MPLA allies a potent argument against negotiations at this time.

The African states through which covert American assistance has to pass cannot participate in an openly conducted aid program because of their diplomatic relations with Luanda. In effect, Democratic Rep. Lee Hamilton of Indiana, as chairman of the House intelligence committee, will only succeed in cutting off all U.S. military assistance to Mr. Savimbi, if he succeeds, through his proposed amendment, in making aid overt.

Moreover, the MPLA leadership will not negotiate with UNITA as long as it has reason to hope that UNITA's access to U.S. arms will be terminated.

RESEARCHERS DISCOVER SECRET BLOODBATH IN COMMUNIST VIETNAM

HON. ROBERT K. DORNAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 12, 1986

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today saddened by revelations of absolutely incredible human right atrocities which heretofore have gone unnoticed in Communist Vietnam. Very credible evidence has surfaced which details mass executions, torture, and total human degradation at the direction of Vietnam's Communist dictators. These inhumane Communist thugs have been able to accomplish such enormous brutalities because the Western World accepts their guise of reeducation of their non-Communist population. Mr. Speaker, let's wake up and recognize the true nature of Communism and totalitarian societies!

It has come to my attention that two University of California at Berkeley researchers have discovered that between 1975 and 1983 at least 65,000 politically motivated murders and executions have taken place behind that despicable curtain of silence which shrouds the Soviet-backed Government of Vietnam. A bloodbath of this dimension can only occur without the world's outrage in a totalitarian society which insulates itself from all Western scrutiny and wields absolute power at the expense of its own population.

Mr. Speaker, I submit to the RECORD the following Reader's Digest article which tells this sad tale. In reading this article, I urge my colleagues, particularly those who constantly make excuses for Communist nations, to remember that these atrocities take place with the blessing, and moral and economic support of that scourge of the civilized world—the Soviet Union. Gentlemen, please don't ever refer to a Communist society as America's moral equivalent!

ON THE TRAIL OF A HIDDEN MASSACRE

(By Ralph Kinney Bennett)

One evening in December 1981, in Berkeley, Calif., Professors Jacqueline Desbarats and Karl Jackson were studying the first batch of completed questionnaires for a survey they were conducting. Then, like some monster bursting unexpectedly from placid waters, the words leaped off the pages: "A whole group killed . . ." "Many prisoners executed . . ." "Two majors killed in concentration camp." Startled, Jackson spilled a cup of coffee over the papers. He quickly mopped up the mess—then read on.

The survey had started as two routine academic studies—Jackson's at the University of California in Berkeley and Desbarats's at Northwestern University in Evanston, Ill. Jackson, 39, wanted to determine the extent of political repression in Vietnam since the end of the war in 1975. Desbarats, 38, a geography specialist, wanted to study the migration of Vietnamese who had settled in the United States after 1975. Overall, Jackson and Desbarats wondered, what had caused this massive migration by a people who had suffered much, but in their long history had seldom fled from the place of suffering?

Both surveys involved systematic interviews of representative samples of Vietnamese. So the two scholars decided to pool their resources, which included a modest grant of $25,000 from the National Science Foundation. Over the ensuing months, the two academics fashioned a detailed questionnaire with more than 100 questions, designed to elicit a reliable picture of the Vietnam exodus. One section dealt with motivation—what caused the refugees to leave their homeland in the first place. It probed their experiences with political repression, forced relocation and the government's so-called reeducation camps.

GENTLE PRYING

The concerns of Karl Jackson and Jacqueline Desbarats were shared by human-rights activist Ginetta Sagan.[1] Sagan had condemned human-rights abuses by the old South Vietnamese regime and was becoming increasingly concerned about what was happening in the wake of North Vietnam's takeover. With meager funds, she had begun her own painful harvest of cries and whispers from refugees in the United States and France. Now, partly at Sagan's urging, Desbarats and Jackson added questions about all forms of political repression, including executions.

The two researchers tested their questionnaire in the Vietnamese community in Chicago. Vietnamese university students were hired and trained to conduct the interviews, which often took several hours. Right off, one thing became evident, something that could not be quantified by statistics; fear. Many refugees were afraid to tell what they had seen. Some of the information had to be gently pried out of them.

And it was this information, stark and chilling, that surprised Desbarats and Jackson when they reviewed the first survey results. As the two scholars pored over each page, it became part of a crazy quilt of horror. One Vietnamese told of a village chief disemboweled by his captors after being dragged through a mob and beaten. Someone else described how a former South Vietnamese soldier was shot to death in front of his house because he had "shouted words against the communist government." Another told of two inmates "released" from a re-education camp, then shot to death just outside the gates. "Trials" lasted two minutes, if that long. Every third respondent knew of at least one person who had been executed—and sometimes many.

"When we began our research," Jackson recalls, "we expected high estimates on the population camps but virtually no positive responses on political executions. We had accepted the conventional wisdom that no large-scale killing had occurred. The execution questions were added almost as an afterthought."

Besides, Hanoi had promised a new government of "reconciliation and concord" that would "prohibit all acts of reprisal and discrimination" against its former enemies. Emphasis would be on "re-educating" the South Vietnamese. Despite news of ill treatment in the campus, despite the "boat people" pouring out of Vietnam in a hemorrhage of misery, the world took the communists at their word. Former Sen. George McGovern declared, after a visit, that the blood bath was "one of the great false alarms of all time." As late as 1983, a State Department analysis concluded: "Execution for purely political acts is not accepted policy."

CURTAIN OF SILENCE

At first, Jackson and Desbarats agreed on a "rational" explanation for their unexpected findings. These initial questionnaires were from a "snowball sample"—a survey technique in which successive interviewees recommended others from among friends and social contacts. This could bias the sample; they might have hit a pocket of right-wing former supporters of Nguyen Van Thieu's regime, people more likely to have met reprisals and to make up stories putting Hanoi in a bad light.

Perhaps more research, using larger, rigidly random samples, would eliminate this apparent anomaly. They agreed to try it. But Jackson wondered about all those reports of killings.

In the months and years following the fall of South Vietnam, Hanoi had clamped a near total blackout on developments within its borders, so it was hard to know what was happening. In 1978, French journalist Ronald-Pierre Paringaux, who had been a scathing critic of South Vietnam and U.S. support of its government, wrote ruefully that "a curtain of silence has fallen in Vietnam on the subject of human rights." Jackson thought of that curtain now. Was it possible that behind it, hidden from the world, an orgy of retribution had indeed been taking place?

To broaden their survey sample, the pair picked two additional areas with high concentrations of Vietnamese refugees—San Francisco and the Orange County suburbs of Los Angeles. French-born Desbarats confessed she was largely aloof from the political aspects of what the two were uncovering. She emphasized the use of the most conservative methodology in gathering and analyzing the interview information. She poured over the questions. Were they perfectly clear? Were they completely neutral? Did they avoid such pitfalls as one question suggesting the "right" answers to the next one?

In kitchens and living rooms of "Little Saigons" around Los Angeles and San Francisco, trained student helpers conducted more than 500 interviews from June to December 1982. As the questionnaires were translated, the percentages of the Chicago sample held up. One of every three Vietnamese interviewed had personal knowledge of executions, and they poured out an awful catalogue of killing:

"Witnessed execution of a leader of the Hoa Hao religion who was imprisoned in the same barracks as me. He was stabbed in the belly and his head was cut off in public."

"Twenty people were caught trying to escape. Nineteen were shot on the boat. The other was killed on shore."

"A lieutenant colonel tried to escape from the Lang Son re-education camp. He was buried alive."

The sheer horror of the stories made it all the more imperative that their authenticity be established, either as isolated occurrences or as part of a larger pattern. In analyzing their results, the two scholars used strict statistical methods. And they set clear ground rules about the data they would accept: the survey would not include deaths in the re-education camps caused by overwork, disease, malnutrition or suicide, or people "accidentally" killed when they were forced to clear old mine fields.

FINAL PROOF

Fully 35 percent of the respondents reported they either saw or had heard of political executions. And over a third of these gave eyewitness accounts, most of them providing names, dates, places, reasons. These details were vital. "Otherwise," says Jackson, "it was entirely possible they could all be reporting the same, relatively small number of executions." Through meticulous cross-indexing, the two scholars eliminated duplication, which accounted for only 34 percent of the original total.

Finally, Jackson and Desbarats consulted statisticians to come up with a sophisticated methodology that would allow them, as fairly as possible, to project their survey figures for Vietnam as a whole. This involved analyzing the nature of the two Vietnamese "populations"—the one inside the country and the more than one million refugees who had fled—and developing a system for deflating the number of executions to allow for duplication or exaggeration.

Their final, carefully extrapolated figure for the number of victims killed by political violence between 1975 and 1983: at least sixty-five thousand.

By now, Jackson and Desbarats had no doubts that the phenomenon they had detected was real: a blood bath had occurred. Still, they delayed release of their findings, deciding to go one step further. "Perhaps there was something unique about the refugees who found they way to America," Desbarats reasoned. "Maybe moderate and left-wing South Vietnamese who engendered less retribution from the new government settled elsewhere —most likely, France."

To extend their study, however, the two needed more funds. They found it tough going. Jackson still feels strongly that the emerging facts about executions had, in some quarters, turned social science into "politics." "It seemed fairly obvious that some funding sources didn't want to lay a finger on something that opened up a new and frightening dimension to Vietnam," Jackson says.

Undaunted, the two scholars scraped up enough money to conduct research in four of the largest cities of France: Paris, Nice, Lyon and Toulouse. After nine more months of surveying, the U.S. figures held up. In fact, the findings from France were slightly higher—with 37 percent of randomly selected respondents reporting executions.

SECRET BLOOD BATH

Three years of exhaustive research, conducted in seven cities and two countries, with more than 800 refugees interviewed, had finally provided persuasive evidence that a blood bath had occurred in Vietnam. "We shouldn't have been surprised, knowing what history tells us to regimes such as Hanoi's," says Jackson, now newly appointed Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense for East Asia and Pacific Affairs. "A lot of reasonable people doubted the reports from escapees of Nazi concentration camps." And Desbarats and Jackson note: "Governments, the media and the public often treat the absence of reports from closed societies as proof that something—like widespread killing—has not happened. It is not prudent to apply to any totalitarian society the same standards of proof we would apply in a free society, with a searching press and groups dedicated to disclosing the truth."

In a perverse way, the torture, hunger and degrading conditions of Vietnam's infamous re-education camps had actually drawn attention away from its "secret blood bath." The fear and cultural reticence of the Vietnamese refugees had also helped keep this slaughter in the shadows. But now, the research of these two scholars has directed a shaft of light into the darker recesses of this repressive and vengeful regime.

LEWIS LEHRMAN ON THE REAL MEANING OF THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE AND THE RESTORATION OF THE AMERICAN REPUBLIC

HON. JACK F. KEMP

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 12, 1986

Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, the August 29, 1986 issue of National Review includes a brilliant essay by my good friend Lew Lehrman on the human rights issue of this century—the right to life. His essay argues that the issues of slavery and the rights to life are more than historically analogous—they are the same issue, and they represent the continuing challenge to the principles of our Constitution which guarantee to each individual the protection of their most fundamental God-given rights, the right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. I commend this essay to the attention of my colleagues.

THE RIGHT TO LIFE AND THE RESTORATION OF THE AMERICAN REPUBLIC

(Lewis E. Lehrman)

The Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States inaugurated not only the American experiment, but also one of the great economic booms in history. Americans moved West and South, labored North and East to till the soil, build roads, finance banks, invest in new technologies, discover new methods of farming, mining, and manufacture. "We made the experiment," Lincoln wrote during the prosperity of 1854. In America "we proposed to give all a chance." Now "the fruit is before us. Look at it—think of it. Look at it in its aggregate grandeur, of extent of country and numbers of population—of ship and steamboat and rail."

In 1854, almost four score years had gone by since the Founding and nearly as many years divided the abject poverty of Thomas Lincoln from the prosperity of his son Abraham, the "lone Whig star" of Illinois. In twenty years of hard work before 1854, Lincoln had been preoccupied with personal advance in law and politics, during which time he had focused on the great issues of economic nationalism: the tariff, the National Bank, and internal improvements. It is true that he was only one among thousands of apostles of national development and economic growth; but he was utterly devoted to their cause.

In 1853, all America basked in the glow of a prosperity Americans took as their just deserts. The period stretching from the inauguration of James Monroe in 1817 through the early 1850s has gone down in American history as the Era of Good Feeling and of Manifest Destiny—an era during which, despite the great perils faced by the infant nation at the turn of the century, America had conquered a continent and established her independence of Europe. The new nation had finally settled down.

Then, out of the Great Plains, the Kansas-Nebraska Act of 1854 blew in upon American politics with the force of a tornado, sweeping aside the economic issues paramount in the immediate past. The old Whig Party disintegrated under the pressure of the new politics, and so, in all but name did the Old Democracy, the party of Jefferson and Jackson—both parties swept aside by the gale force of a single moral issue, or what our pundits today would call a social issue. That issue, the extension of slavery to the territories, led ineluctably to the great national debate over the "unalienable right to liberty" of the black slave. It was neither the first nor the last, but it was, up to that time, the greatest debate over the first principles of the American Republic.

At first, Americans—Democrats and Whigs alike—refused to believe that the work and wealth of recent decades, not to mention the pocketbook politics of the era, would be swallowed up in a moral struggle over a single issue. But, in opening all the Western lands to slaveholding, Kansas-Nebraska shattered the spirit of the Missouri Compromise of 1820, which had limited slavery to states south of 36°30'. If it were true, as Lincoln would later say, that eventually the nation must be all slave or all free, there could be little doubt in which direction the new act was taking us.

In the words of one distinguished historian of the period, Professor Gabor Borritt of Gettysburg College, Kansas-Nebraska shook national politics like Jefferson's "firebell in the night." So abrupt was the transition from preoccupation with economics and national security ("Manifest Destiny" and "Western Lands") that Abraham Lincoln, himself one of the most knowledgeable of Whig leaders on tax, tariff, and banking issues, abandoned further discussion of them. After 1854, he became almost mute on economic issues, claiming in the year he stood for President that "just now [tax, tariff, and financial affairs] cannot even obtain a hearing . . . for, whether we will or not, the question of slavery is the question, the all-absorbing topic of the day."

Today, six years after President Reagan's first victory, we are far along with economic expansion and just as far along with rebuilding our national defense. Financial markets have risen to new highs. Employment levels and new business formations have reached new peaks. In Libya and Grenada we have successfully, if ever so cautiously, tested our willingness once again to use force in defense of our national principles and interests. Politicians of both parties still speak as if they expect Americans, riding the wave of new prosperity at home and restored prestige abroad, to continue to focus on economic and defense issues as they have for a generation. As Vice President Bush declared in an interview in June, "Today, people vote their pocketbooks." We shall see.

For I believe that today the American people are prepared to put their pocketbooks back into their pockets. I believe that Americans once again are preparing to ask fundamental questions, about life and death, about our special purpose as a nation, and about the first principles and fundamental law by which, as a nation under God, we have dedicated ourselves to live. I believe that national politics during the late 1980s and the 1990s will be dominated by the great constitutional, moral, and social issues of our time.

Chief among these issues will be the right to life. Thirteen years ago, in Roe v. Wade, the Supreme Court overthrew the common law of centuries and the statute law of fifty states, authorized abortion on demand, and thereby severed the child-about-to-be-born from the Declaration of Independence. It was in the Declaration, the organic law of the American Founding, that the Fathers of our country proclaimed the self-evident truths of our fundamental moral and constitutional law: that all men are created equal, and that all men are created by God with the unalienable right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. It was this original charter of the nation that the Supreme Court violated in Roe, without even the mandate of an election or a vote in Congress.

Five thousand days and twenty million lives later, abortion on demand has buried a nation of children as big as the whole of Canada. But far from resolving the issue of the right to life, as the Justices intended, the Court has stirred up all America and ignited the moral tinder deep in the souls of our countrymen. The Court, by creating a great debate over our fundamental law and essential character as a people, has guaranteed that abortion will surely sweep away all more mundane political considerations.

I suggest not merely that the issues of slavery and abortion are historically analogous. Rather I say that they are, in a crucial sense, the same issue. Both are but particular cases of the recurring challenge to the first principles of the American Revolution, which forbid the violation of the God-given rights of any person, no matter how convenient such a violation might be for some powerful individual or faction, or even a majority.

In the normal course of our politics we do not experience this challenge in its starkest terms. Our fundamental law, our fundamental purpose as a nation is not fully articulated in the positive law by which we govern our daily affairs. The Declaration of Independence, in which our nation's fundamental principles are stated, is not phrased in such a way as to give perfect guidance to the resolution of everyday political disputes. In the normal course of events the American people are content to let the Declaration's unalienable rights be secured by the more intricate structure of the Constitution, which by the genius of the Founding Fathers transformed the play of political interests into a dynamic balance wheel of human and civil rights. Nevertheless, the Declaration gave birth to America as an independent nation and best expresses our ultimate reason for national being.

From time to time, our ordinary politics fails us in ways too dramatic to ignore. An impasse develops in the constitutional process. A weakness shows up in the architecture of liberty. Our positive law (including even the Constitution, or its interpreters) can fail in some critical way to uphold the first principles of our national Founding. It is at such times that it becomes necessary for Americans—who seem now, as they seemed in 1854, too concerned with progress and payrolls—to reconsider the organic law written in their hearts. It is then that American politics again becomes a struggle over the meaning of the Declaration of Independence.

In our time, most leading politicians and intellectuals argue that such philosophical struggles, turning ultimately on moral and religious questions, should be excluded from American politics. With Senator Stephen Douglas, Lincoln's great opponent, who held that Kansas-Nebraska and the Dred Scott decision (1857) made the black man forever a slave in America, they hold that the Supreme Court can settle and has settled forever the abortion issue. They are content to accept, paraphrasing Judge Taney, that the child in the womb has no rights which Americans are bound to respect. They argue, with Supreme Court Justice John Paul Stevens, that only "secular interests" are fit subjects of national debate. Some even argue that the resurgence of religion and moral issues in American politics is but a passing fad, safely scorned by sophisticated pragmatists concerned with the weightier matters of wealth and weaponry.

These opinions are as unsurprising as they are unconvincing. What we hear rolling across the Potomac are the hollow, haunting echoes of the great slavery debates of the 1850s. For decades the battle over slavery had been stayed by the timely intervention of grave Whigs and eloquent Democrats who foresaw what passions would be loosed when men ceased to struggle for gain and ground and sought instead to live faithfully by the Divine standards Americans had set themselves in the Declaration. Webster and Clay, Calhoun and Douglas, prudently had sought to guide the energies of the people into economic growth and westward expansion, to mitigate, even to avoid the supervening moral and religius issues raised by the debate over slavery. The remarkable thing is how successful they were for so long in convincing Americans that slavery could be countenanced if its extent could be compromised.

But the insurgent noise would not be silenced. For the muffled murmur throughout the land was the sound of the slave, his tortured breathing rustling the pages of the Declaration of Independence, scaring up from the dry parchment the great truths placed there by Jefferson. For the needs of nation-building, for the sake of a union between slave and free states, slavery may have been legalized in the Constitution. But it was the Creator, as the Founders proclaimed in the Declaration, Who gave men the unalienable right to life and liberty. This contradiction, like a house divided, could not stand.

Just three years after the Kansas-Nebraska Act, the Dred Scott decision gave meaning to Lincoln's warnings; it declared the U.S., in effect, a slave nation. Dred Scott held that the black slave was not a person under the Constitution, and it made inviolate the property rights of slaveowners. In the very next election, the nation responded by choosing a President who had proclaimed Dred Scott unbinding as a "rule of political action" in virtue of the fundamental law of the Declaration and the power of Congress to prohibit slavery in the territories. Six hundred thousand men and boys, the flower of American youth, perished in a war over the meaning of a religious and moral principle—or, in the words of "The Battle Hymn of the Republic": "As He died to make men holy, we shall die to make men free."

There is then no need to be surprised that in the battle over Roe v. Wade—wherein we deal not only with life and liberty, as in Dred Scott, but with life and death—moderate men and women should wish to put the fundamental issues aside. There is no reason to be astonished that so many leading intellectuals wish to believe that the Supreme Court has settled the matter. Nothing should be easier to understand than that the political, business, and academic establishments are embarrassed by the issue and affect to scorn those who raise it. After all, if the modern followers of Lincoln are right, no material bounty America bestows on her people or the world can excuse her crime. If the party of Lincoln is right, there is only one road to national rededication: to fight the evil of abortion until it is extinguished, a fight that may make the divisions of the 1960s, from which we are barely recovered, look like a family reunion.

One way of scorning the issue—one popular tune to whistle past the graveyard—is to deride abortion as a "single issue" pursued by fanatics to the detriment of the common good. Those who take this tack understand neither the issue nor their countrymen. The unalienable right to life is not for America, a single issue, but a first principle, a self-evident truth established at its Founding. Nothing is more striking about American history than our willingness to take principles of truth and right seriously. Americans know that neither blood, nor culture, nor even locality is what binds us together. Uniquely among nations we are bound together and defined by our founding principles. It is the pragmatic politicians of the pocketbook who do not know their countrymen.

July 4, 1776, was an event of worldwide significance, not because a new nation was founded on the shores of the Atlantic, but because a new nation, the very first of its kind, was founded "under God," begotten, as Thomas Jefferson wrote, according to the "Laws of Nature and of Nature's God," a nation dedicated, in fact, to a religious proposition, a principle of natural theology. Consider again the phrasing: "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights," to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness. This proposition, the great Emancipator proclaimed, is "the Father of all moral principle" among Americans, the animating spirit of our laws. By reason of this founding principle, Lincoln called his countrymen "the almost chosen people"; and it was Jefferson himself who proposed that the national seal portray Moses leading the chosen people to the promised land.

The Founders' principles of equality and unalienable rights are characterized by their universality and claim to Divine sanction. The universality of the principles makes it clear that the Founders did not mean that all human beings are or ought to be equal in all respects—height, weight, beauty, wealth. They meant instead that no person has to another the relation God has to him: Thus the rights enumerated in the Declaration are God-given, and hence "unalienable." Neither the weight of tradition nor the exigencies of statecraft can rationalize the false claim that the unalienable rights of the Declaration are a gift of the state or of the people. As Professor Harry Jaffa would put it: No man has a natural right to rule over any other man, as God does over man; thus a man may rule over another, his equal, only with his consent. This is the essential meaning of our founding law. If there were ever any doubt that we are bound by it—and the Declaration is still put at the head of the statutes-at-large of the U.S. Code and described therein as organic law—Lincoln's testimony and the general assent given it by Americans then and later should have laid that doubt permanently to rest.

But while most Americans take the Declaration seriously, we do have a tendency to fix upon its assertions of equality and liberty, quickly passing over its guarantee of an unalienable right to life as if it were merely a glittering generality. The truth is that life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness are a logically ordered sequence. The rights to liberty and to the pursuit of happiness derive from every man's right to his own life and are meaningless without it.

Life precedes liberty in the words of the Declaration because liberty was made for life, not life for liberty. If the right to life is omitted, then liberty is a right contingent upon force and without moral substance, and the Declaration is a nullity. Moreover, it is by reason of the unalienable right to life that all men hold the right to the fruits of their labor. A free society dissolves into an absurdity if the right to life is denied.

Abortion, like slavery, allows equals to rule over equals without their consent, depriving the child in the womb not only of the right to liberty, but of the right to life as well. But there is a disputed point: Do unborn children hold these rights? There can be no denial that they have life and have had it from the very first moment of conception: That is true in medicine as in law. But what is more important is that, as our fundamental law affirms, they hold life as a gift of the Creator—Who "created" them "equal" and "endowed them" at creation "with certain unalienable rights"—from the moment of conception. Creation does not occur at the second trimester, or at the third, or at viability, but at the very beginning of life. The usual arguments about viability. intelligence, pain, quickening, meaningful life, or unwanted children are as irrelevant as earlier arguments, that the poor, black slaves were better off under the rule of a benevolent master. Under the Declaration, under the Divine and natural law by which we have promised to live, the child about to be born, no less than the black slave, holds rights unconditional upon the convenience of others, rights that cannot be altered because other men place a lesser value on the life of a child in the womb.

It is no use, in extenuation, to invoke the pluralism of opinions, or the absence of consensus, as if, in the struggle over Roe v. Wade, all disagreements were merely part of a friendly historical debate; as if no lives were at stake and there were no ultimate judge to whom to make an appeal. The organic law of the American nation and the Divine law prevail over all positive law, and thus over the litigious subtleties of politicians and judges.

Our task is easier than Lincoln's, and its strain on the country will be less. In the Constitution, Lincoln faced an explicit, it time-bound, sanction for slavery, which is lacking in the case of abortion. Each in its own time, slavery and abortion have masqueraded as the law of the land; and the abortion masquerade is utterly transparent. There is an inescapable absurdity in the Supreme Court's argument that the same Fourteenth Amendment that made the black slave a person can be used to deny the personhood of the child about to be born. In 1868, when the Fourteenth Amendment was passed, 28 of the 37 states held abortion to be a criminal act, even prior to quickening. (Over the next 15 years seven more states made abortion a crime. By the time of Roe v. Wade, in 1973, nearly all the states had criminalized abortion. There was a national consensus on abortion: that it is wrong.) In view of the near universality of the laws against abortion at the time the Fourteenth Amendment was passed, there can be no doubt about its intent or the meaning of the amendment today. The Court's decision in Roe v Wade had absolutely no basis, literal or implied, in the Fourteenth Amendment. If the Fourteenth Amendment calls for anything, it calls for reversal of Roe v. Wade.

Roe v. Wade may for now be a legal decision of the Supreme Court; but it is unlawful in the full sense of the word. It is without any identifiable source of authority in constitutional law. In the light of logic, the moral law, and American history, Roe v. Wade is absurd; it comes to just nothing—nothing but "raw judicial power." It requires no irreverence for the letter or the spirit of the Constitution to declare that the decision must be overturned, by a subsequent Supreme Court decision if possible, but if not, then by constitutional amendment or congressional act. There is in the Federalist Papers, the original handbook of constitutional interpretation, a clear warrant for such a rebuke of the Court. Federalist Number 81 declares that if judicial "misconstructions and contraventions of the will of the Legislature" do create constitutional defects, there is a constitutional remedy. Even if the legislature cannot "reverse a [judicial] determination once made, in a particular case," it can "prescribe a new rule for future cases." Above all, and despite recent judicial imperialism, the three branches of the Federal Government are coequal, and all subordinate to "the people" who "ordained" the Constitution to fulfill the promises of the Declaration.

Yet this argument does not end the debate. For the ultimate charge against those who would push the right to life to the top of our political agenda is that they are mixing religion and politics, trying to impose a single set of religious values on the nation. But the link between religion and American politics is indissoluble, for, at the very beginning, in the Declaration, the nation was founded upon the principles of natural religion; it would collapse without them. Jefferson himself, often falsely described as a completely secular man, acknowledged this link, writing that "The God Who gave us life, gave us liberty . . . Can the liberties of a nation be secure when we have removed a conviction that these liberties are the gift of God?"

Those who fear the intrusion of religion into politics are not all wrong. We have been well served by the consensus that excludes sectarian passions from ordinary political disputes. But when fellow Americans of good will ask us to grow quiet on the painful but fundamental issues of abortion, prayer, or pornography, for fear of starting a divisive debate over religious and moral principles, they make a rule of thumb into a rule of life. The truth is not that religion never belongs in American politics. The truth is instead, as Lincoln argued, that religion belongs in American politics only when our politics have been forced back upon first principles.

By nature Lincoln was as much politician as prophet. He was a moderate and judicious man, certainly not inclined to fanaticism. Neither was he a natural candidate for a martyr's crown. But when the crucial issue was joined, Lincoln exposed the counsels of moderation for the well-meaning sophistries they were. And he died a martyr.

Some of us, dreading the great moral conflict Lincoln faced, might have sided with Douglas. But now, more than a century later, who laments the reversal of Dred Scott or would rewrite history to keep the slave in chains? Who now holds up the memory of Chief Justice Taney for the honor of the ages? Who now wishes that Lincoln had used the Court's decision as an excuse to turn to other matters? Who can forget what Lincoln, against all polite opinion, and borne up by his faith in a just God, did for free men?

We know it intuitively. It is the Declaration's principles and Lincoln's example we must follow. Certainly not to violence. There will be no need, for, as I said at the outset, the law to which we appeal is inscribed on the hearts of all Americans, more deeply now than ever. The abyss of civil war does not lie before us. If we fail, we will have been overcome by nothing but false opinion and the petty demon of polite society—because we are afraid of the elite consensus and the inelegance of moral commitment, afraid to take on the establishment by naming the national sin, unwilling to bear witness to first principles while the party of prosperity is going so well. But to name these considerations is to know how shameful it is to hold back. We must be bold; so that for now and for all time to come, the unalienable rights to life and liberty, the promises of the Declaration of Independence, shall not perish from this earth.

AN EDITOR SPEAKS OUT

HON. DOUG BEREUTER

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 12, 1986

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, while there are a number of important issues that face the Congress in the next few weeks and most certainly next year, few compare to the need to bring the deficit under control. This point is driven home in an editorial that appeared recently in one of the daily newspapers in my congressional district.

I commend to the attention of my colleagues the editorial, "Presidential Priority," that appeared in the August 26, 1986, edition of the Norfolk Daily News:

PRESIDENTIAL PRIORITY

Donald T. Regan, White House chief of staff, hopes his boss can provide a major push for overhauling the federal budget system during his last two years in office. As he explained in an interview last week, many of the budget practices at the federal level "would be considered dishonest and illegal if done in the private sector." He was referring to trust funds that are mingled with ordinary receipts. He could have mentioned, too, the now time-honored practice of simply spending money that has not yet been printed.

Mr. Regan sees the answers in a variety of measures. Among them: Biennial instead of one-year budgets, a balanced budget amendment to the Constitution, line-item veto power for the president, creation of a separate capital budget for construction projects and the removal of trust funds (Social Security is one) from the general treasury.

The proposals stemmed from staff considerations of what should be President Reagan's No. 1 domestic concern for the remainder of his term. Mr. Regan said the fight against drug abuse would be given the sort of priority status in these next two years that tax revision received earlier.

Serious as the drug problem is, Mr. Reagan and his White House staffers ought to be reminded that, like all crime problems, states and local governments figure so largely in the solution that federal money and federal personnel will not supply the solution. Washington can only help effectively to a limited extent, and in protecting borders against traffickers. Presidential attention, yes, but a priority to the exclusion of budget control, no.

With a tax system revised—for the better, we believe—and inflation under control, the major remaining problem which demands urgent attention is the deficit. You can attack deficit problems only through budgetary control. That deserves the top priority. It is a problem that also demands constructive congressional attention—the sort provided in the intense effort to arrive at the new tax bill.

The time has come to put the deficit No. 1 on the Reagan hit list.

THE PERES-MUBARAK SUMMIT: NEGOTIATIONS WORK IN THE MIDDLE EAST

HON. CHARLES WILSON

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 12, 1986

Mr. WILSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to congratulate Prime Minister Peres of Israel and President Mubarak of Egypt, who met today in Alexandria, Egypt, for the first time since Mubarak became President of Egypt. It is also the first summit between the heads of state of Egypt and Israel in 5 years.

I know that all of my colleagues agree with me that this is an historic meeting, and hope as I do that it will usher in a new era both in Egyptian-Israeli relations and in the search for a comprehensive peace in the Middle East. The meeting is the result of arduous negotiations between Egypt and Israel over a broad series of issues, and proves the difficulty of securing and maintaining peace in this region. I think that these negotiations prove once and for all to those of use naive enough to believe that the peace treaty signed at Camp David would be easy to implement, that peace in the Middle East is a process that we must continue to work on.

In taking note of this occasion, I believe that it is important that we note the strong and important support of the administration for the negotiating process between Egypt and Israel. The role of the executive branch, and in particular of the Assistant Secretary for Near East and South Asia, Richard Murphy, was critical to the negotiations leading up to this summit. Murphy has for the last several days traveled back and forth in the region to ensure that agreement was reached. The administration is to be applauded for its willingness to put out this kind of effort in support of peace.

I believe that these negotiations have shown again, to those of us who didn't already know it, that the United States is a necessary element in the Middle East equation, and that peace can only come with direct and forceful U.S. participation. The timeconsuming and sometimes disheartening work which Assistant Secretary Murphy undertook is precisely the kind of effort which must be undertaken in order to promote peace in this troubled region, and especially the search for a comprehensive peace agreement.

In recent months, this kind of active support for the broader peace process simply has not been forthcoming. The Administration has urged the parties to move, but has generally sat back and waited rather than take an active stand in their search. I belive that this must change if we are to make any real progress in this region and in solving this crisis. The same commitment by the United States, except on a greater scale is needed if the broader peace process is truly to move forward. The issues between Egypt and Israel were relatively easy when compared to the broader regional issues: the future of the West Bank and Gaza, the security of Israel's borders, the rights of the Palestinians. Progress on these issues is only possible if the U.S. Government puts its strongest effort into the search for peace.

Mr. President, I want to again applaud the efforts of Prime Minister Peres and President Mubarak, and to extend to them the fullest possible support and encouragement of the United States.

I also urge the executive branch to search creatively for new ways in which it can move ahead to promote the broader peace process, so that some day we can take note of a summit between an Israeli Prime Minister and another Arab head of state who has signed a peace agreement with Israel.

EFFECT OF ANTIAPARTHEID LEGISLATION

HON. MICKEY LELAND

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 12, 1986

Mr. LELAND. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues the following article published in today's Los Angeles Times. It was written by Mr. Gerald Warburg, an adviser to Senator ALAN CRANSTON on foreign policy, defense, and trade matters. In his article, Mr. Warburg reviews the issue of preemption and the intention of the Senate in that regard. He points out that the Senate version of antiapartheid legislation, which was approved by this body today, was drafted by more than a half-dozen Senators, many of whom utterly reject Senator LUGAR's interpretation of preemption.

In approving today's legislation, this body clearly stated its intention that the legislation will not preempt or supersede any local or State antiapartheid laws. I believe my colleagues would be interested to learn that many of our colleagues in the other body agree with us on this important matter.

Again, I commend this article to my colleagues.

[From the Los Angeles Times, Sept. 12, 1986]

DIVESTITURE WILL SURVIVE

(By Gerald Warburg)

Will the South Africa sanctions legislation pending in Congress undermine California's new anti-apartheid law? Can federal authority require local governments to profit from apartheid against their will?

The answer to both vexing questions is yes, according to proponents of a sweeping federal preemption doctrine recently advanced by Sen. Richard G. Lugar (R-Ind.).

The specter that enacting the pending congressional measure on anti-apartheid trade sanctions would strike down broader state divestiture legislation has alarmed grass-roots activists. At stake is the fate of as many as 20 state statutes and more than 80 city and county regulations that address the South Africa issue.

There is valid reason for concern when one hears the views of Lugar, the respected Foreign Relations Committee chairman: "When we get into anti-apartheid law, the federal government is speaking for the nation . . . we cannot have individual states and cities establishing their own foreign policies."

Lugar rests his case on the presumptive constitutional grant of federal supremacy in international affairs, and concludes that any federal legislation on South Africa—no matter how limited its scope—preempts all state legislation on the matter.

But before the activists' concern turns to panic, the full record needs to be scrutinized. There is no reason for California to back away from the strong measures adopted in Sacramento. Lugar's is a minority opinion—one unlikely to prevail if pressed in a legal challenge.

"When I use a word, it means just what I choose it to mean," says the Queen in "Alice In Wonderland." So it often is with lawmakers struggling to place their own interpretation on legislation during the drafting process. Lugar currently is advancing his own preemption thesis as a selling point to persuade the White House and corporate leaders to live with the Senate bill, which Lugar maintains would at least get local authorities off their backs on the emotionally charged South Africa issue.

Yet the "Lugar bill" actually is a cut-and-paste job of legislation drafted by a half-dozen senators. These co-authors utterly rejected Lugar's interpretation, as the following statements culled from the long and tortured legislative history of the South Africa debate illustrate.

William Proxmire of Wisconsin, senior Democrat on the Banking Committee: "We have no intention of preempting state divestment law."

Alan Cranston of California, Democratic floor manager of the measure: "Courts always recognize the distinction between the state as market participant and the state as a market regulator . . . we have no intention of compelling sovereign states to invest in companies that they do not wish to invest in."

Edward M. Kennedy of Massachusetts, senior Democrat on the Judiciary Committee: "The law is clear that this legislation will not preempt the kind of state and local action against apartheid that has occurred throughout this country."

Advocates of total preemption make much of a vote last month against an amendment by Sen. Alfonse M. D'Amato (R-N.Y.). But this amendment pertained only to a special contracting issue (whereby federal funds for New York City might be withheld if local authorities, acting against companies still in South Africa, ignored U.S. civil-rights and budget laws requiring acceptance of low-bid contracts). D'Amato said explicitly that this debate "had nothing to do with divestiture."

Those who wish that the federal legislation explicitly preempted local divestiture have failed to win their point in the congressional debate. The only effort to legislate a total ban on state laws pertaining to South Africa, an amendment introduced by Sen. William V. Roth Jr. (R-Del.), was withdrawn in the face of very strong opposition. The final legislative product has no substantive provisions whatsoever on preemption. And it is totally silent on the divestiture issue. Thus it is grasping at straws to maintain, as Lugar has, that the bill "occupies the field" on all South Africa-related matters.

While Lugar is correct that the Constitution yields supremacy to Washington in conducting foreign relations, the Supreme Court has defended repeatedly the right of states to manage their own funds—even if their trusteeship involves choices affecting international affairs.

As is often the case, Washington lawmakers have followed, not led, local governments, churches and university activists in addressing the South Africa issue. The federal courts are unlikely to sustain an illogical assertion that congressional action, which imposes trade sanctions but is silent on divestiture and preemption, could force states to keep their IBM stock. Yet, because of the stir created by Lugar's assertions, proponents of sanctions will move to enact new provisions that would make the case for total preemption legally untenable.

The bottom line is that local authorities already have a clear legal right (and moral obligation) to exercise discretion in how they invest their money. While a minority may wish that the emerging federal law would immobilize grass-roots action, wishing isn't going to make it so.

THE VILLAGE OF THE LIVING DEAD

HON. ROBERT K. DORNAN

OF CALIFORNIA.

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 12, 1986

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, next week we are likely to revisit the debate on assistance to the freedom forces in Angola. Fourteen months after Congress repealed the Clark amendment, section 107 of the Intelligence Authorization Act of 1986 would have us again place the same "country specific restriction" on the conduct of U.S. foreign policy in Africa.

Once again, liberal Members of Congress seek to tie the hands of the President of the United States. Simply stated section 107 takes away the President's authority to assist anti-Communist forces in Angola through covert means. U.S. foreign policy objectives are not always best conducted under public scrutiny or with public debate. How successful would our attack against Libya have been if we had held public hearings over the correctness of that direct military action? How many lives would have been needlessly lost? Public debate is an important right of Americans, but it must be balanced with the President's constitutional duty to manage the foreign policy of the United States.

The most distressing point I must make is that this bill reinforces a naive assumption that the United States must conduct all aspects of its foreign policy in public. Why do we continually feel the need to question the motives of the President of the United States? Isn't it time to reaffirm our trust in our forefather's drafting of the Constitution and stop these attempts to cross over the dividing line between the constitutional power of the President to conduct an effective foreign policy?

With the repeal of the Clark amendment, on July 10, 1985, one of the last vestiges of the Vietnam syndrome was removed from the books. Although the drafters of the original Clark amendment hoped that the opposition forces to the Communist regime would falter without U.S. assistance, the pro-Western forces of Jonas Savimbi have struggled on for 10 years. Today President Savimbi's UNITA forces control a substantial portion of the Angolan countryside and enjoy broad popular support north to south of that huge country. The area under their control is well managed and free. But these areas come under regular attack by Soviet and Cuban manned aircraft and tanks.

The freedom forces of UNITA have been fortunate in that, even without United States help, they have held their own against superior, Soviet equipped, Cuban trained forces. This is underscored by the major Communist offensive, with direct Soviet and Cuban assistance, direction and participation that was launched against UNITA this past year. The UNITA forces not only held on, but managed to repel the Communist forces.

Moreover, the Communist forces do not confine there attacks on the freedom forces of Jonas Savimbi, or others fighting to bring an end of tyranny to their country. Rather, as in Afghanistan, Vietnam, Cambodia, and Nicaragua the Communist controlled Government terrorizes innocent citizens throughout the countryside. As a former Cuban member of Castro's expeditionary forces in Angola explained, "any village more than 10 kilometers outside the town we were attacking was automatically considered to favor UNITA and was therefore subject to punitive measures." Orders were, "Destroy everything, burn down the houses, kill the cattle, neutralize the population." Those unfortunate innocent Angolans, living at the capricious whim of the Luanda government, are indeed inhibiting villages of the living dead.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to read the following article from the American Spectator that documents the atrocities committed by the Communist government in Angola against its own people in areas that the Communist government itself controls. After reading this nightmarish account how can any Member of Congress not repeal section 107 of the Intelligence Authorization Act of 1986.

[From the American Spectator, August 1986]

THE VILLAGE OF THE LIVING DEAD

(By Nicholas Rowe)

I was in Angola earlier this year with a Canadian news team. Outside Jamba, the provisional capital of rebel leader Jonas Savimbi's UNITA movement, is a small village housing refugee women from the regions under the control of the Luanda Communist regime. It is known as "the village of the living dead." Some of the women are mutilated, others have lost their mind, all are victims of Soviet-inspired barbarism. And yet they speak of themselves as the lucky ones; they have survived.

Through our interpreter we spoke to some of the women able and willing to recount their experiences. The first was Madalena Ngueve, who looked much older than her forty-five years:

"It was the second of November 1984 when the Cubans came to our village. I tried to stop them taking away my son. He was twelve, and from the age of ten and upwards they come and ship them off to Cuba. I tried to stop them but one of the Cubans cut off my arm with a bayonet. They were beating the children who didn't want to leave their parents, beating them with the butt ends of their rifles. So, while I was bleeding, they took away my son. He was my only child. I've had no contact with him since that day."

Severina Chilombo, arms crossed tight over her stomach, rocked compulsively back and forth as she told us her story:

"The Cubans arrived at my village just at daybreak. They locked some of the people into the huts and burned them alive. Others, their limbs—arms and legs—were cut off. My father burned to death in one of the huts, also my uncle. They poured gasoline on the huts and with torches they lit the fires. They ripped the baby I was carrying off my back. They swung and smashed her against a tree. She died, her little head cracked open. I was pushed into a lorry with some of the other younger women and boys. Later they stopped. I was raped the first time by ten men. We were raped in front of the boys deliberately. The Cubans said to them, 'Look how we rape your mothers and sisters so they can't have any more children.' During the journey we could choose whether we wanted sex voluntarily or not. Those who resisted were stabbed by bayonets. Then they were raped. Then they were killed. At the end of the journey the boys were taken away and the women put into prison. We weren't allowed to wash or anything for the first seven days. But every day the Cubans came and . . . and . . . violated us. I lost my father and my mother. Everybody. There are days when I don't have any more tears left to cry. Today is almost one of those days. It was my first baby. My only baby."

Veronica Kahali was concerned that we would not believe her. She kept repeating to our interpreter, "I am not inventing a story, I saw what I saw with my own eyes." She would point to her companions in distress. "They know I am telling the truth. . . . We have all seen so much, been through so much." Reassured that we did not doubt her and that our tape-recorder would capture every word, she began in a flat, emotionless voice, as if memory of her Calvary would be erased by its telling:

"When the Cubans arrived at my village, all the people were rounded up. The older people were killed, the younger ones taken away, the boys to the army. The young women were separated from the men and taken to prison." Almost as an afterthought, she added, "The pregnant women in prison were killed by having their bellies cut open. The Cubans cut open the pregnant women by bayoneting them from just below the breast downwards."

There was an involuntary gasp of horror from our interpreter, herself a mother. Veronica Kahali was again immediately on the defensive. "But I saw it! My sister was close to her time and her belly was ripped open. She died next to her unborn baby. I saw it!"

Once calmed, she resumed her monotone monologue:

"Our people were sorted out into groups: old men, young men, old women, young women, children. The old men were killed right there on the spot. The children who gave problems were beaten to death with rifle butts . . . anything . . . hacked with choppers, pangas. The group of girls I was in, the Cubans and Fapla [soldiers of the Angolan Communist army] came very day. . . . five of them sometimes. They chose a woman and took her out of the cells. I was raped continuously. They had no mercy. If you screamed or made any noise they just gagged your mouth and held you down. Of course some of the women cried. That made it worse for them. They were beaten up and then, afterwards, they were killed."

Angelina Missoji was much more emotional; anxious that we should hear her story but ashamed of her part in it:

"It was a very sad morning. The people were walking down to the fields, it was harvest time. We walked into an ambush laid by the Cubans and some Fapla soldiers. When we fell into this ambush, I tried to run away but I was shot in my foot. Later I was taken away by the Cubans. The bone in my foot was not shattered by the bullet, but in prison the bottom part of my leg was amputated anyway."

At first undecided whether to display her mutilation or to conceal it, she finally tucked her truncated leg under the wooden bench where she was hunched.

"The villagers were divided into groups. The very old people were killed immediately, other old women taken to prison to work there. The younger women were raped and the young men sent for military training. I saw with my own eyes two different ways of killing the old. Some were lined up and shot. Others who were very old were simply clubbed to death, or kicked to death with boots or bayoneted. Both my mother and father were killed by the Cubans. I was there, I saw it. Both were killed in more or less the same way. First they were clubbed and then shot. I was very sad and also angry with myself that I did nothing, said nothing. But I would have been killed as well. I was afraid. It is very difficult for me to remember these things. No, I can't talk any more about this. I'm sorry. Forgive me."

The question we all asked ourselves was why: why attack these villages deep inside the part of Angola nominally controlled by José Eduardo Dos Santos and his Cuban allies? The answer came from an unexpected source, a Cuban who deserted to join UNITA. Miguel Garcia Enamorado, from the Cuban province of Gran Ma, explained that any village more than ten kilometers outside a town was automatically considered to favor UNITA and was therefore subject to punitive measures, "pour encourager les autres." Orders were, "Destroy everything, burn down the houses, kill the cattle, neutralize the population."

The above testimony makes me think that if Jonas Savimbi and UNITA lose their war, the village of the living dead may become the country of the living dead.

H.R. 5484, THE OMNIBUS DRUG ACT OF 1986

HON. ARLAN STANGELAND

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 12, 1986

Mr. STANGELAND. Mr. Speaker, we have just considered H.R. 5484, the Omnibus Drug

Act of 1986. As an original cosponsor of the bill, I am pleased it passed overwhelmingly.

I have long been concerned over this issue. The easy access to illegal drugs and significant use by Americans demonstrate the validity of taking harsh steps to escalate the war against drugs.

It is my feeling that statistics on the availability and use of drugs in the past several years explain the problem. For instance, estimates indicate that 150 tons of cocaine—including large quantities of "crack," a relatively new, particularly potent free baser form that can be smoked—will enter the United States this year, compared to 85 tons in 1984. In addition to cocaine, 12 tons of heroin, between 30,000 and 60,000 tons of marijuana, and 200 tons of hashish will cross U.S. borders this year. Despite increased interdiction efforts, enforcement officials intercept only 10 percent to 15 percent of the drugs which enter this country each year.

Matching the escalating supply of drugs is an equally disturbing rise in demand. Americans spend an estimated $120 billion annually on illicit drugs. Figures for 1985 show that 5 million Americans use cocaine regularly, with 1.2 million addicted and requiring treatment. Approximately 7 million abuse psychotropic drugs and 550,000 suffer from heroin addiction. However, the most troubling statistics emerged from a 1985 high school senior survey which revealed that almost two-thirds of those questioned have used illicit drugs—54 percent reported using marijuana/hashish, 18 percent inhalants, 12 percent sedatives, and 12 percent tranquilizers.

Our legislation—H.R. 5484—generally takes steps in five areas to help attack the drug problem.

First, the bill establishes educational programs to teach Americans, especially our young, the effects and problems associated with drug use. Also, drug treatment and prevention centers will be built.

Second, H.R. 5484 increases penalties for drug offenders in the following fashions. It establishes a minimum mandatory 5- and 10-year prison terms for new categories of offenders in major drug trafficking and serious drug trafficking. It provides an automatic sentence of life imprisonment without parole for a second conviction of an adult who sells a dangerous drug to a child or near a schoolyard. H.R. 5484 makes possible a sentence of death for anyone who commits murder while involved in a continuing criminal narcotics enterprise. And, there are provisions creating new crimes of money laundering, designer-drug trafficking, and using children to manufacture or distribute drugs.

Third, the measure will allow for more enforcement of current statutes by providing over $100 million for more Drug Enforcement Agency [DEA] personnel, U.S. attorneys, and U.S. marshals. Because increased enforcement will mean more prisoners, authorizations are provided to build new prisons.

Fourth, the proposal expands the opportunity for interdiction—generally the seizure of smuggled drugs—as over $200 million will be authorized from the existing fiscal year 1987 Department of Defense appropriations for procurement of equipment, such as certain radar, designed to detect and combat drug trafficking on U.S. borders. Also, more Coast Guard personnel will be available for drug-interdiction efforts, and Coast Guard personnel will be assigned to Navy ships to make arrests.

Fifth, opportunities to eradicate—to destroy drug plants—will be increased as the President will be required to deny trade benefits to countries which do not cooperate in eradication efforts. Also, U.S. officials will be allowed greater involvement in overseas narcotics raids. In addition, our bill requires drug-producing countries to establish eradiction programs as a condition of U.S. support for multilateral development bank aid.

This is truly comprehensive legislation. However, Federal Government intervention is not the entire answer. The challenge is so enormous it will never be fully met without significant private and business assistance. Therefore, it is important that Americans obtain the resolve necessary to overcome this menace. For until we do, more lives will be lost, dreams shattered, and normally admirable citizens will turn to crime out of a despicable dependency.

A SPECIAL PRAYER BY JAMES D. LOY

HON. ROD CHANDLER

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 12, 1986

Mr. CHANDLER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call your attention to a very special prayer that I received from one of my constituents. It was written by a gentleman from Federal Way, WA, Mr. James D. Loy, who on September 2, 1986, lost his long fought battle against a malignant brain tumor. Yet, through his trials and pain, his faith endured. And it is symbolized in this simple prayer, which he wrote. "With love, humbleness, and meager understanding we acknowledge our domain. Universal forces and laws prevail. With available talents and energy we seek knowledge of the universal phenomena to be used for positive creative utilization and extension of this domain." Mr. Loy's wife, Doris, sent me this prayer and I would like to share it with my colleagues, taking a moment from our day to pay tribute to one man's spiritual path and the universal message it holds for us all.

MESSRS. PEPPER AND FASCELL SUPPORT FREEDOM IN ANGOLA

HON. BOB STUMP

OF ARIZONA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 12, 1986

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, Congressmen CLAUDE PEPPER and DANTE FASCELL show the way for a responsible, bipartisan policy to meet the Communist challenge in Angola by opposing section 107 of the intelligence authorization bill (H.R. 4759). Section 107 eliminates any possibility of covert support to the freedom fighters in Angola. I urge my colleagues to stand with these two leaders of the House in support of the motion to strike section 107 of the intelligence authorization bill when it is considered on the House floor.

I urge my colleagues to read the Pepper-Fascell "Dear Colleague" letter on Angola.

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, September 8, 1986.

DEAR COLLEAGUE: We are writing to again ask your assistance in a matter of vital concern to United States foreign policy and security interests.

The House soon will consider H.R. 4759, the Intelligence Authorization Act of 1987. Section 107 of that bill reverses the House position on the "Clark Amendment" decided only last year, by a vote of 236 to 185. The repeal of the Clark Amendment eventually became law. We seek your continued support to sustain the important policy victory we achieved then by asking that you vote with me to delete section 107 from the bill.

Under section 107 of the Intelligence Authorization Act, Congress would reinstate the Clark Amendment. The 1976 Amendment, modified slightly in 1980, singled out Angola as the only foreign country in the world where no covert assistance of any kind could be provided. Instead, under section 107 and the Clark Amendment, the Congress must first pass a joint resolution, publicly specifying in detail all assistance given and identifying the recipients, before any aid may be given.

In 1976, the Clark Amendment had a plausible justification that it lacks now. Then, it was expected that Angola would sort out its own affairs, following its 1975 independence from Portugal, free from superpower entanglements—provided the U.S. demonstrated restraint. A permanent legislative prohibition against any covert assistance was intended to provide the Soviet Union with sufficient incentives to also show restraint.

Our calculations proved sadly wrong. Instead, the Soviet Union exploited this unique loophole by pouring in military assistance on behalf of a Marxist faction with little popular support. The Soviet intervention worked, and the MPLA quickly broke their promises to hold free elections. And in the process they snuffed out Angola's best chance for liberty.

With your support on July 10, 1985, we finally admitted our error by repealing the Clark Amendment. However, its supporters want it reinstated and have invented a new rationale for adoption. Because reports have surfaced that Angolan freedom fighters, led by UNITA's Jonas Savimbi, have received U.S. military assistance, they claim our support is no longer covert. Apparently, since some covert Angolan activities have been leaked and made public, any future activities should, in their view, also be made public.

Revealing in advance our intentions, as section 107 demands, will erode our prospects to bring freedom to Angola for several reasons.

First, it provides valuable information to the MPLA. They will learn in advance the nature and amount of any assistance provided, making it easier to develop countermeasures.

Second, it discourages other nations and groups who are discreetly giving to UNITA from continuing to do so by increasing the potential political cost if their role in backing the U.S. and UNITA is revealed.

Third, it encourages the Soviet Union to increase further its level of support out of fear of losing face in view of a publicly acknowledged military challenge to their communist allies.

A corollary argument used by Clark Amendment supporters claims that the South African government also wants UNITA to win. Therefore, we should not take steps to help UNITA because we will also somehow help the South African government in the process.

We believe this argument is wrong for two reasons. First, it says the Angolan people must be denied liberty because of the sins of an ally they cannot control. And secondly, it says that we must reflexively oppose every action the racist South African government makes. Under this logic, we should stop helping starvation victims in Ethiopia because South Africa is also donating aid. We believe that it would be a mistake to deny assistance to Angolan freedom fighters based solely on this guilt by association. In this instance, the South Africans are right; UNITA deserves our support. This same point was made by Winston Churchill years ago when he claimed, "I would accept help from the devil if he joined us in fighting Hitler."

We look forward to your continued support and ask that you join us in deleting section 107 from the Intelligence Authorization Act.

Kindest regards, and Always Sincerely,

DANTE FASCELL,
Member of Congress.
CLAUDE PEPPER,
Member of Congress.

DISTRESS CALL HOAXES

HON. GERRY E. STUDDS

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 12, 1986

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, week in and week out, the personnel of the U.S. Coast Guard strive to make American waters as safe as humanly possible. From time to time, however, these valuable and often courageous search-and-rescue efforts are abused by persons who make false distress calls. These false alarms divert the Coast Guard's limited resources and unnecessarily put Coast Guardsmen and women at risk.

In this context, I would like to insert into today's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the following editorial from the September 11, 1986, Quincy Patriot Ledger in Massachusetts:

DISTRESS CALL HOAXES

In the past 12 months, the men and women of the Coast Guard district headquartered in Boston have saved 232 lives. During the same period, 48 people have lost their lives in First District seas off Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts and Rhode Island. The Coast Guard's rescue mission is very serious business.

But a few times a year, someone decides that it would be amusing to interfere with that mission. A phony distress call gets made—and the Coast Guard responds in force.

That's what happened on March 20—a cold, windy, icy day. A call came in for a sinking yacht with 10 people aboard. Three Coast Guard patrol boats, a jet, a helicopter and a tug were dispatched to find and help the "Lady Blue."

There was no Lady Blue, the call was a hoax. Coast Guardsmen risked their lives needlessly. Rescue boats and aircraft were spread out over 9,100 miles of New England ocean on a bad-weather day when they well might have had a real emergency to respond to.

In dollars, the price of the intensive 20-hour search amounted to $77,900. That's what it cost the Coast Guard.

For Norman Miller, 18, of Chelsea, the cost is also high. He was sentenced last week in federal court to a year in prison after admitting he made the phony distress call.

If Miller had been tried by the Coastguardsmen he endangered, or by the fishermen whose safety net he jeopardized, the sentence might have been even tougher. The hoax call "is a terribly dangerous thing," Judge John J. McNaught said. "I hope other people understand that."

The one year in prison should help get the judge's message through.

INSIDE A MIND JAIL

HON. ROBERT K. DORNAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 12, 1986

Mr. DORNAN of California. Mr. Speaker, all citizens of the United States are justifiably outraged by the obvious frameup and subsequent jailing of U.S. News & World Report Correspondent Nicolas Daniloff. However, the truth is that thousands of Soviet citizens are regularly subjected to the horrors now visited upon Nick Daniloff as he languishes as a hostage in Lefortovo Prison. So when something like the Daniloff outrage occurs, the last thing Americans should be is surprised, and yet so many of us are.

I therefore believe that now it is an especially appropriate time to submit for the historical RECORD the following article that appeared in Newsweek magazine outlining the incarceration in a so-called psychiatric institution of Serafim Yevsykov, a man whose only crime is that he wants to leave the Soviet Union. It is a particularly tragic story, and one that screams out to be told.

Mr. Speaker, when Nick Daniloff is finally released, as I am sure he soon will be, it is critical that we in the free world remember that for every Nick Daniloff freed, there are thousands of Serafim Yevsykovs still prisoners of the brutal Soviet system of injustice.

The article follows:

[From Newsweek Magazine, Aug. 11, 1986]

INSIDE A MIND JAIL—A SOVIET DISSIDENT GETS THE TREATMENT AT A MENTAL HOSPITAL IN MOSCOW

(By Joyce Barnathan, Moscow Bureau of Chief)

The shabby white building is nearly hidden by an imposing wall on a quiet back street in Moscow. Only the horizontal bars on its windows set it apart. A sign marks the single public entrance in the wall: Central Moscow Provincial Clinical Psychiatric Hospital. A muddy path leads past a construction site, some ambulances and garages. In front of the building sit women of all ages. Many wear hospital gowns. Some stare into space listlessly. Others chat. Inside, among the mentally ill, is 53-year-old Serafim Yevsyukov, a little-known Soviet dissident. Like many others who have undergone psychiatric "treatment" in the Soviet Union, he is quite sane.

He sits in self-imposed silence in his room on the all-male third floor. Two beefy women guard the entrance to the floor. There are no doorknobs in the building; nurses carry them in their pockets so they can lock patients into their rooms more easily. Institutional green walls make a gloomy backdrop for the few patients permitted to sit in the corridor during visiting hours. When his daughter, Lyudmila, 25, arrived recently for one of her daily visits, Yevsyukov was hunched over on a ratty couch in the corner.

"How do you feel, Papa?" Lyudmila asked, full of respect.

"I feel tired," he said, speaking sluggishly. "The injections make you want to do nothing, to think about nothing. I am always tired."

While Mikhail Gorbachev courts the West over arms control and the superpowers mark the 11th anniversary of the Helsinki accords, the Yevsyukov case demonstrates the Soviet Union's continued callousness toward human rights. Yevsyukov is a former Aeroflot navigator who, during the Khrushchev era, had traveled abroad, occasionally even to the West. In 1978 he quit his job and filed a petition to emigrate. Two years later he lost his subsequent job as an airport engineer. His case is not one that would draw much attention. He is not Jewish. He is not a political activist. He has no relatives in the West. He and his family simply have decided they want no part of their country and would prefer to leave.

He was picked up on his way to a weekly family protest against the imprisonment of his 24-year-old son, also named Serafim. The young man had already served a 2½-year sentence in Siberia for draft evasion; he refused to serve in the military of a country he demanded to leave. After his release Serafim again refused to serve, and he was sentenced to another three years. Once a week his father, mother and sister would protest by standing in front of the Pushkin monument in downtown Moscow, wearing badges with young Serafim's name on them. The protest drew some modest attention when the family's plight was featured in a broadcast by Radio Liberty in May. Last month KGB agents arrested Yevsyukov at a railway station en route to the monument. First they took him to a militia station and used a razor blade to rip his son's prison name tag from Yevsyukov's shirt. Then they moved him to the hospital. It took his family two day to find out where he was being kept.

Word of honor: It was the third time that Yevsyukov had been taken before psychiatrists. He was picked up by the police in June as he awaited the return from the United States of Soviet dissident Yelena Bonner at Moscow's Sheremetyevo airport. According to Lyudmila, he was taken to a militia office where a psychiatrist pronounced him sane. Earlier, in April 1985, his request for an exit visa brought him three days at the Central Psychiatric Hospital. First a bureaucrat had assured him that a visa would be granted if he obtained an invitation from the Dutch Embassy. When Yevsyukov protested that access to the embassy was blocked by militia guards, the bureaucrat gave him his "honest party word" that his entry would be permitted. Then, when he showed up at the embassy, he was hauled away to the mental hospital.

This time around Yevsyukov was sharing a room with 13 others, all of them mentally ill, when his daughter made her visit. His wife did not go because she always wears her son's name tag—and suspects that she, too, will be locked up or questioned if she pays a call. Half a dozen roommates sprawled out on narrow beds, never uttering a sound. The barred windows in the barren room were closed on a warm summer's day. The patients are shaved twice a week; Yevsyukov sported a day-old beard. According to Lyudmila, her father had not been permitted to shower or receive fresh bed linen or clothes for 10 day. Forbidden to wear civilian clothes, he had on white cotton pajamas and a stained dark brown robe. He was not wearing his glasses because glass is forbidden in the hospital . He had no appetite for the kasha and cabbage soup served to him—nor for the fresh apricots his daughter had brought.

Getting rough: A male sanitar (orderly) keeps close tabs on Yevsyukov's limited movements. Pale, blond and hulking, the sanitar sits on a chair facing the special-security room, where Yevsyukov resides. He always positions himself to be directly across from Yevsyukov's bed. "He will not let me exercise, even in bed," Yevsyukov whispers. The sanitar is sitting just five feet away, only barely out of earshot. "He will not let me sit on the couch in the corridor when there are no visitors. He allows only two of us in the toilet at once. And from the toilet he makes sure I return straight to the room. I can take no walks. Most of the day, I just lie in bed."

Sometimes his warders get rough with him. Two days earlier a nurse had insisted that Yevsyukov swallow pills, which he says are numbing. He refused, shutting his jaw tight. They first tried jamming the pills into his mouth. Then the orderly strapped him to the bed and employed two mentally ill inmates to help hold him down while they closed his nostrils and tried to force him to open his mouth. His nose bled. Finally they gave up and injected him instead—with a promise to repeat the process if he refused the pills the next time.

Seven days into his confinement, Yevsyukov said he was being shot up twice a day; later, after he grew weaker, his injections would be reduced to one a day. Lyudmila says she suspects that his warders plan to subject her father to a long hospitalization—and don't want him to become too ill. Yevsyukov always refuses to take pills. A nurse usually asks him to go into a special room where they administer the shots. He refuses. She then demands that he roll over. No reaction. The husky sanitar forcibly rolls him over—and the nurse sticks Yevsyukov in the buttocks with the needle. Back to the fog.

Yevsyukov seems undaunted. His captors' strategy, as he tells it, is to rob him of his physical and mental energy and at the same time extract from him as much information as possible, so the KGB can later use it against him. His only weapon is silence. "My goal is not to listen to them and not talk to them," he says. Neither he nor his family has ever heard an explanation of Yevsyukov's alleged mental illness. "We never tell relatives anything about the diagnosis," Lyudmila reported the doctor as saying. At least once and as many as three times a day the doctor tries to question Yevsyukov on his background, his problems, his fears. He responds with fierce silence. Lyudmila is likewise uncooperative. "The worst thing that you can do for yourself is not speak to me," she says she was told by the doctor. "You aren't going to answer my questions," Lyudmila told her. "Why should I answer yours?"

Yevsyukov's optimism shows even through the drug-induced fog. "I know everything will eventually turn out all right," he says. "I can wait." But since he does not fall into any neat category of dissident, his future is less than promising. "The Western embassies tell us, 'You have no invitation to leave. You are not Jewish. You are not a divided family. There is nothing we can do for you'," says Lyudmila. "They are killing us because we are a unique case. We just want to leave."

Out in the corridor, nurses chat with each other. Yevsyukov winked a gray-green eye in surreptitious appreciation of his daughter's visit. On the way off the floor, one of the plump guards stopped Lyudmila. "Did he talk to you?" she asked her. "Of course," Lyudmila told her. "Why doesn't he say anything to us? He doesn't say a single word. It's very bad." "Maybe he doesn't want to talk to you," Lyudmila replied. "Well, you ought to tell him to start talking to us." That was an order. It was met with the silence of a devoted and determined daughter.

Outside the building she looked back and saw a tall, sane man behind a barred window on the third floor. It was Yevsyukov waving goodbye with both arms, a drugged but unbroken man.

PARALYZED VETERANS ASSOCIATION'S EXPO

HON. DAN MICA

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 12, 1986

Mr. MICA. Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct the attention of my colleagues to the Paralyzed Veterans Association's Expo for the Handicapped 1986, which is being held in Coral Springs, FL October 9–10.

This is a doubly gratifying moment, Mr. Speaker, because it permits me to recognize not only the Expo's organizers, but the far-ranging contributions of disabled persons to our community, our State and our Nation.

Today more than ever, the complex issues facing our society demand all our resources. Only by pooling our diverse talents will we meet these challenges, and that is why Expo 1986 is so vitally important. It signifies our resolve to work together, and to recognize that each of us has a unique gift that all should share.

This Expo, which is held each year in conjunction with National Employ the Handicapped Week, is an ideal opportunity for all Americans to rededicate themselves to ensuring that the handicapped enjoy the same opportunity for employment, education, social interaction, recreational facilities, quality medical care and other resources that are available to others.

I would ask my colleagues to join me in commending Committee Chairman George H. Snyder and his colleagues for their tireless work in this area. We salute them, and wish them every success in making Expo 1986 the most successful ever.

SANCTIONS, A CRUCIAL FIRST STEP

HON. DON EDWARDS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 12, 1986

Mr. EDWARDS of California. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased that the Senate has now joined the House in declaring that the President's policy of constructive engagement is a total failure. Finally, a long awaited package of sanctions against South Africa is being sent to the President by Congress.

While this is certainly a very important step, there remains much more work to be done to establish meaningful dialog between blacks and whites in South Africa. We must continue to focus our attention on the situation there, and follow through with our commitment to bringing democracy to South Africa.

As we take this important first step, I would like to share with my colleagues two very well written pieces which support the decision we have made here today. The first was written by William Gould IV of the Stanford University Law School. Mr. Gould very forcefully, and correctly, states that Congress must take full responsibility for any and all United States sanctions against South Africa.

The second piece, written by Steven Phillips of the San Jose Mercury News, clearly explains the significance of the California State Legislature's decision to divest $11.4 billion of State funds from United States firms doing business with South Africa. In his piece, Mr. Phillips explains clearly the practical effects, and strengths, of economic sanctions.

S. AFRICAN SANCTIONS, CAREFULLY CALIBRATED

(By William B. Gould IV)

South Africa's apartheid is the object of near universal condemnation in the United States. Its political and moral unacceptability is a reflection of our civil rights revolution which, while failing to eliminate a good deal of this country's discrimination, has made racism disreputable.

Yet this summer's debate about sanctions reflects an undercurrent of traditional racial attitudes held by the Reagan administration and its allies (including Britain's Thatcher government) on one side—and a streak of self-righteousness on the other. Sometimes the debate focuses more on how Americans can or should feel about themselves than on the conditions of South African blacks.

One need look no further than President Reagan's 1981 interview with Walter Cronkite, when he praised South Africa as a World War II ally, and his July 22 speech bestowing more accolades upon the Botha government's "reforms." Besides its "constructive engagement" policy toward South Africa, the Reagan administration's tax enforcement of civil rights in the United States, its opposition to affirmative action and its sponsorship of tax exemptions for segregated schools all belie Assistant Secretary of State Chester Crocker's assertion that this country is united behind common objectives vis vis South Africa and that the debate is exclusively implementation.

At the same time, unfocused moral indignation is demonstrated by statements such as that made by Sen. Lowell Weicker, R-

Conn., during a recent Public Broadcasting Corp. interview to the effect that the impact of sanctions doesn't matter—what matters is that we remain "true to our traditions."

It is, of course, vital that we disentangle the web of complicity so assidously spun by the Reagan administration and some of its predecessors. The object, however, should not be catharsis for Americans, but rather the promotion of the interests of the black opposition and, to the limited extent possible, facilitation of a non-racial democracy.

Symbolism is always important in foreign policy. In this case it must be designed to distance us from the Botha government—which is hardly likely to rush into the open arms of the Soviet Union—and to establish a modus vivendi as well as friendship with its successors, regardless of ideology.

The United States must enact legislation containing sanctions against South Africa, in concert with our European allies if possible. Congress should pass a bill that is carefully calibrated to inflict both economic pressure and psychological isolation upon the South African regime—and that leaves us an opening to respond to a genuine dialogue between blacks and whites or the emergence of a representative government.

True, we should not "cut and run" as President Reagan has said. But we must do what little we can to promote a relatively peaceful transition.

The legislation should not call for the suspension of any sanction when the executive branch of government "certifies" that there has been "progress" in South Africa. Congress must take full responsibility. And Congress should opt for sanctions as the stick for any carrot, for three reasons:

The Reagan administration policy of constructive engagement is morally bankrupt, as it has given the Botha government respectability. This policy also has produced a complete dead end in South Africa, as the current state of emergency makes clear. It has not brought President P.W. Botha to the bargaining table with blacks. On the contrary, the government has grown more truculent than ever! As Bishop Desmond Tutu has said: "There is no guarantee that sanctions will topple apartheid, but it is the last nonviolent option left and it is a risk with a chance. President Reagan's policy of constructive engagement, and similar efforts to persuade white South Africans who support apartheid to change, have failed dismally."

All blacks, except Zulu chieftain Gatsha Buthelezi, overwhelmingly advocate sanctions. Indeed, the principal black trade union federation (Cosatu) has called for sanctions with full recognition that its members will be hurt first. Cosatu has judged that the suffering imposed by apartheid outweighs the relatively short-range economic harm done to blacks.

South Africa fears the discontent of both blacks and whites that will flow from sanctions. At some point, they could contribute to a turmoil that may, as foreign policy writer Connor Cruise O'Brien has suggested recently, lead to military intervention by the United Nations.

That is why South Africa fights sanctions so fiercely. That, along with the demographics of a swelling black majority, is why she has pushed so hard to institute modifications of apartheid through "reforms" deomonstrating its good faith to the West.

The fact is that South Africa understands and responds well to the language of sanctions. Consider the government's reaction to the sports boycott and its mild efforts to integrate, to avoid ostracism.

Nevertheless, the objections to sanctions are legion. Why single out South Africa?

As our actions against Nicaragua, Libya and the Soviet Union (in the wake of its invasion of Afghanistan) demonstrate, we frequently impose sanctions upon governments with morally repugnant policies. Moreover, our economic and military ties to South Africa make it a kind of creation of the West. We can influence it more effectively than most nations, and our conduct with it should therefore meet a higher standard.

Another reason why South Africa should be treated differently from the Soviet Union, for example, is that the racial injustice which permeates the former country is unique and abhorrent—an evil familiar in our own recent history.

A more formidable argument against sanctions is that they don't work. The experience with Rhodesia (now Zimbabwe) and the arms embargo against South Africa are not encouraging. Sen. Jesse Helms, R-N.C., says sanctions will topple the South African government and bring left-wing blacks to power, but this assertion is wildly simplistic.

The impact of sanctions is a long-range proposition. For starters, the United States would have to scrutinize the conduct of third parties, such as Israel, that are alleged to be transfering American assistance through channels with place arms, for instance, in the hands of South Africa.

The United States ought to enact legislation that will inflict economic pressure and psychological isolation upon the South African regime. The regime and many influential white citizens want and crave contact with the West. We should exploit this and exert pressure with our allies—Reagan's special relationship with Thatcher would be very useful here. Yet, some measure of contact should be preserved.

Contact could mean influence with a future government. Contrary to the urgings of some African National Congress representatives, diplomatic relations should not be broken with South Africa—or with any other country of which we disapprove. At a minimum, we need diplomatic relations to understand the injustice we should fight.

Nor should investment and trade be completely cut unless and until it is clear that measures such as those advocated here have had no effect. All of this is not intended to quarrel with the Dellums embargo on trade and investment passed by the House, which has moved the American dialogue forward—with a tremor sent through the business community.

But in 1986 our first genuine sanctions should be designed to offer a carrot. A primary reason for this approach is that a black-rule South Africa will need foreign multinationals and the export capacity that some of them possess. Part of newly independent Zimbabwe's economic success is attributable to such corporations' expertise and the fact that they, along with many white Zimbabwean farmers, did not up and leave.

But if, after 12 or 18 months, a Senate-House fact-finding team determines that the sanctions advocated below are not working and that the West is perceived by blacks to be on the wrong side, more drastic steps can then be taken. This could include divestiture, despite its harmful consequences.

Legislation enacted this year should contain the following elements:

A ban on all new investments in all forms of capital inflow. This is contained in a bill introduced by Sen. Nancy Kassebaum, R-Kan., and it is an important first step in convincing South Africa that we will use economic pressure. Resumption of investment should not be conditioned upon any certification by the Reagan administration that the South African government has made any progress.

A boycott of all imports of coal, steel, uranium, cement and aluminum from South Africa's publically owned or "Para-statal" enterprises. This measure is contained in Senate Foreign Relations Committee Chairman Richard Lugar's bill. It will deprive South Africa of badly needed foreign exchange and will have the additional benefit of placing our own nation in concert with boycotts that may be instituted at the European Economic Community's meeting in September. It might encourage EEC action along such lines.

A freeze on all South African bank accounts held in the United States. This will squeeze those whites who seek to depart from South Africa and thus pressure their government.

A cancellation of U.S. landing rights for South African Airways.

A ban on visas for South African parastatal officials. Such a ban should logically be extended to private citizens who propagate apartheid, just as South Africa excludes U.S. citizens whose views it finds uncongenial. But here again, the Reagan administration cannot be trusted.

An obligation for American companies still doing business in South Africa to bargain with black unions—the most important black opposition groups in South Africa—and to provide them with work place facilities. Theoretically, this has been done by the Sullivan Principles —to which numerous U.S. companies are signatory—but monitoring and enforcement of the principles have never materialized.

A sale of some or our reserve gold stocks, to depress gold prices. This step is advocated by the respected and conservative Economist of London.

Congress should explicity pledge itself to provide foreign aid to compensate countries such as Zimbabwe, Mozambique and Zambia, which may suffer severe economic harm as a result of our sanctions, and which may endure South African reprisals in the form of deportation of their workers now employed in that country.

As I visited South Africa and met with black South African leaders in this country, there has been a constant refrain: "You Americans must get on the right side for a change." Sanctions would be an effective first step in that direction.

Divestiture, a First Step—United States Firms Help Maintain the South Africa Status Quo

(By Steven C. Phillips)

Last week, the California State Legislature voted to divest $11.4 billion of the state's funds from U.S. firms doing business with South Africa. Many people, including a majority of our own editorial board, think the action may have been ill-advised and impractical. Others of us think it was the right thing to do.

When asking, "Why divestiture?" it is imperative to understand the rule foreign investment plays in perpetuating apartheid. U.S. companies profit from that system and their taxes contribute to the maintenance of the economic status quo. In 1978, the Senate Foreign Relations committee concluded that "the net effect of American investment has been to strengthen the economic and military self-sufficiency of South Africa's apartheid regime."

It is from the desire to remove foreign investment as a pillar of the apartheid system that the call for divestment has sprung. The divestment movement seeks to pressure U.S. corporations into withdrawing their holdings from South Africa.

How can the divestment of a few million dollars each from major multinational corporations induce those companies to pull out of an extremely profitable country? Some may say that divestment will have little effect. Viewed in narrow economic terms, such as a loss in the value of stock, it probably won't Divestment, however, is more than an economic maneuver; it is a political action.

Where the California Legislature goes, other state legislatures and boards of trustees might well follow. And with enough investors of enough large blocks of stock pulling out their funds, that movement is sure to make waves at least in some corporate board rooms, if not on Wall Street.

The groundswell against apartheid already has risen beyond what organizers could have hoped a decade ago. With more groups demanding that their money not support companies dealing with South Africa, boards of directors will certainly review whether their policies are worth jeopardizing their public image, if not their profitability.

Public relations are important in the corporate world, and no company wants to be seen as supporting legalized racism. Highly publicized divestiture actions ensure that corporations continue to question their actions.

True, a consumer boycott of products may be more productive than simply divesting of stock that others may buy. But this is not an either-or choice. In expressing outrage at apartheid, divestiture is a simple, one-vote first step, compared with the efforts involved in organizing a long-term boycott.

A second practical result of divestiture is that it sends a strong message to the South African regime. Every act of divestment in the United States makes headlines in Pretoria and contributes to the international movement to isolate the apartheid regime.

With Ronald Reagan widely viewed as South Africa's last best friend, it is important to show that many official sectors of America are strongly opposed to the repression and denial of democracy in that country. State legislatures do not have the power to impose economic sanctions—perhaps the United States' most effective tool—against the Botha regime. Divestiture is, indeed, an indirect way to attack the evil of apartheid. But in a war in which our own federal government drags its feet, we choose the weapons, however small, at our disposal.

Divestiture also fuels the Free South Africa movement in this country. Historically, grass-roots pressure has produced changes in U.S. policy. In the past year, it has been the demonstrations on the campuses and in front of the South African embassies and consulates that have pushed this issue up on the national agenda.

Lastly, we must avoid arrogance as we seek to assist the struggle for freedom and democracy in South Africa. Ultimately, it will be the South Africans that free South Africa. Given that, we need to ask those working for change what kind of help we can offer. The answer, from Archbishop Desmond Tutu, the United Democratic Front, the African National Congress, and the black trade unions is loud and clear: Withdraw foreign investment.

Divestment is one means to speed that withdrawal. It is not the only way. Rather than criticize it, we should embrace it and then suggest other ways to effect change.

There is no single, clear and easy path to ending apartheid. Neither is there time for self-satisfying, morally cleansing actions. We need to confront the political realities of the hour pragmatically, and respond to the urgency of the moment. Divesture marks only the beginning.

TRIBUTE TO ANTHONY BIVONA

HON. ROBERT J. MRAZEK

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 12, 1986

Mr. MRAZEK. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to my friend Anthony Bivona, a man dedicated to the service of his community.

Tony Bivona, a fellow resident of Centerport, Long Island, retired this year after 22 years of service to the Deer Park School District as a teacher and speech pathologist. The school district and, more importantly, the students of the district will miss his dedication and energy.

But there are other sides to the community spirit shown by Tony Bivona, Mr. Speaker. He has given freely of his time to provide service to local hospitals and nursing homes. He developed and continues to direct an acclaimed summer recreation program for the handicapped in Huntington, a program he initiated while serving as town administrator. He also has served the people as a member of the Suffolk County Legislature.

Mr. Speaker, I'm honored to be able to call Tony Bivona my friend. I wish him well as he enters the next phase of his life, and commend him to my colleagues as a worthy example of the exemplary citizens among us.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. WILLIAM E. DANNEMEYER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 12, 1986

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, unfortunately, due to a longstanding commitment, I was unable to attend the session on Friday, August 15, 1986 and subsequently missed 12 rollcall votes. Had I been present, I would have voted:

"Present" on rollcall No. 353, a quorum call;

"Aye" on rollcall No. 354, the Dickinson substitute amendment to the Hawkins amendment to H.R. 4428, which would have raised the threshold for applicability of the Davis-Bacon Act to $250,000;

"Aye" on rollcall No. 355, the Hawkins amendment to H.R. 4428, to raise the threshold for applicability of the Davis-Bacon Act to $25,000;

"Aye" on rollcall No. 356, the Solomon amendment to H.R. 4428, to clarify that former members of the armed services who were honorably discharged, or permanently handicapped cannot be refused Federal benefits for having failed to register for the draft;

"Aye" on rollcall No. 357, the Dickinson motion to recommit H.R. 4428 to the Committee on Armed Services with instructions to report it back containing an amendment to permit use of Armed Forces for interdiction of narcotics and with the following amendments deleted: the Aspin amendment relating to nuclear testing, the Dicks amendment relating to SALT II, the Brown of California amendment relating to anti-satellite weapons, and the Porter amendment relating to chemical munitions;

"Nay" on rollcall No. 358, final passage of H.R. 4428, the Department of Defense Authorization;

"Nay" on rollcall No. 359, a separate vote on the Waxman amendment to H.R. 3129, to prohibit the Department of Transportation from contracting for construction of the Los Angeles metro rail;

"Aye" on rollcall No. 360, the McEwen motion to recommit H.R. 3129 to the Committee on Public Works and Transportation with instructions to report it back containing an amendment to take the Highway Trust Fund off budget;

"Nay" on rollcall No. 361, final passage of H.R. 3129, the Surface Transportation Authorization;

"No" on rollcall No. 362, to agree to Senate amendment No. 1 and disagree to Senate amendment No. 2 to H.R. 5395, to increase the statutory limit on the public debt;

"No" on rollcall No. 363, to table the motion to reconsider H.R. 5395; and "Nay" on rollcall No. 364, motion to adjourn until noon on Monday, September 8, 1986.

EDUCATIONAL EXCELLENCE IN LOUISIANA

HON. JOHN B. BREAUX

OF LOUISIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 12, 1986

Mr. BREAUX. Mr. Speaker, today, 272 public and private schools are being recognized by the Department of Education for educational excellence. This honor is being bestowed on these schools for their effective educational programs.

Of the 272 schools being honored today, 7 are from Louisiana. Four of these schools are public schools. Three of them are private schools. I salute them for their outstanding work in educating our young students.

Two of Louisiana's seven schools being recognized today are from the Seventh Congressional District. They are St. Michael's Catholic School, at Crowley, and Our Lady of Fatima, at Lafayette. As Representative of the Seventh District, I wish to bring this award to the attention of the House and to applaud them for achieving it.

As a former student of St. Michael's and a graduate of St. Michael's High School, I am proud to see it receive this recognition.

Particular attention should be given to all those who contribute to and work so hard on behalf of educational excellence at these schools. For the students, the faculty and staff, the parents, and the others who participate in the school's program, this honor will always be valued and treasured. Let it serve, too, as a challenge for the future, to continue the effective education for which they have been recognized.

Let this be an occasion, too, to renew our commitment to outstanding achievement in education, at all levels, as it is so important and vital to this Nation, now and in the years ahead.

CATASTROPHIC OUT-OF-POCKET MEDICAL COSTS

HON. CHRISTOPHER H. SMITH

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 12, 1986

Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, nearly 16 million American families, or about one family in five, incur catastrophic out-of-pocket medical costs each year, according to a recent study funded by the National Center for Health Services Research. The study found that people suffering catastrophic costs—greater than 5 percent of the family's gross income—were of two types: Those who had good health insurance but had very large costs beyond their coverage, and families for whom relatively small out-of-pocket expenses represented a high percentage of their income due to a combination of low and inadequate or nonexistent health care coverage.

In many cases, Mr. Speaker, catastrophic medical costs stem from long-term care for an elderly patient. An estimated 6.6 million Americans 65 and older require long-term care. Of the elderly over 84 years of age, 22 percent are institutionalized. Moreover, the elderly population is increasing in record numbers. Life expectancy at birth has reached a new high of 74.6 years.

In general, America's families are shouldering the burdens of paying for long-term care with their personal financial resources. In fact, 40 percent of nursing home care is paid for from private sources. Insurance policies for long-term care are available, but only a small fraction of Americans have taken advantage of them.

This may be because many older Americans mistakenly believe that Medicare covers nursing home care. A 1983 survey by the American Association of Retired Persons, for example, showed that 79 percent of those who thought they might enter a nursing home erroneously believed Medicare would pay all or part of the bill.

The fact of the matter is, Mr. Speaker, that Medicare pays only for short-term stays—up to 100 days. It does not cover custodial long-term care. Medicaid, the joint Federal-State health plan for the poor, does pay for nursing home care.

But Medicaid was designed to help only the truly needy. Before it will pay, patients must be poor already or spend down their assets to meet strict eligibility standards. Sadly, once a person is in a nursing home, that process does not take very long.

Mr. Speaker, our Committee on Aging found that 63 percent of older Americans with no spouse impoverish themselves after only 13 weeks in a nursing home. According to that same study, 83 percent become impoverished within a year.

Having realized the magnitude of the problem of paying for long-term care, Congress, the White House, and the private sector are seeking appropriate means to pay for catastrophic health care. The U.S. Chamber of Commerce has formed a task force to study private sector alternatives. The President's Blue Ribbon Panel will issue a report by the end of the year. In addition, budget reconciliation legislation that became law in April called for an 18-month study by a new task force to recommend long-term care policies to Congress and State governments.

Current proposals in Congress range from expansion of Medicare coverage to include an optional part C; to medical IRA's; to tax deductions for the care at home of chronically ill, elderly family members. Most of these proposals are vehicles for discussion of possible ways the public and private sectors can meet the vast need for a long-term care policy.

Once the various task forces, commissions, and private sector groups have completed a comprehensive examination, including study by the Select Committee on Aging, I believe there will be a consensus here in Congress to take action on this vital issue.

GATT TALKS

HON. DAN MICA

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 12, 1986

Mr. MICA. Mr. Speaker, beginning next Monday, trade ministers from 92 nations will open a new round of global trade talks in Punta Del Este, Uruguay. The great need for a renegotiation of the general agreement on tariffs and trade [GATT] is indisputable. I strongly support U.S. Trade Representative Clayton Yeutter's stance as we enter the talks.

Yeutter has clearly expressed U.S. priorities for the GATT talks. They include: an end to agricultural subsidies; stricter prohibitions against piracy of intellectual property; a halt to barriers to trade in service industries such as banking and insurance; free flow of investment funds; and revision of the GATT dispute settlement mechanism.

GATT has served the world well since its inception in January 1948. It has promoted large-scale trade liberalization and fostered economic growth and higher living standards. However, GATT must adapt to changing world conditions if it is to survive. Consideration and adoption of reforms proposed by the U.S. Trade Representative is imperative to this survival.

A WINDOW OF OPPORTUNITY TO SOLVE TIMBER PRICING PROBLEMS

HON. RON WYDEN

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 12, 1986

Mr. WYDEN. Mr. Speaker, the key to economic health in the Pacific Northwest is a healthy, vibrant timber industry. Over the last 5 years, Canada has cornered a growing portion of the timber market previously serviced by Americans. Why? The primary factor is a pricing imbalance that some have called a blatant Canadian subsidy.

I am not here to call names or make charges. But I think that we have a window of opportunity between now and October 9 of this year to pursue a strategy that could help both American and Canadian timber interests.

On October 9, 1986, the Commerce Department will arrive at a decision in a countervailing duty case as a whether Canada subsidizes its timber prices. If that decision finds that there is a subsidy, a heavy tariff—that some say may be 27 percent—will be applied to all timber coming into the U.S. from Canada, and the trade war begins.

The solution does not lie in an identical pricing system, but it might lie in one which ultimately connects the prices of our two countries: a common stumpage pricing system. Over the last 5 years, the effective exchange rate between the U.S. and Canada has been relatively stable. With attention paid to maintaining that balanced exchange rate, a common pricing system—leading to a freer and fairer timber market—should be within our grasp. Thus united, we might even be able to address our mutual concerns of Japanese tariffs and untapped markets.

Mr. Speaker, we should not be facing a choice between submitting to an unfair subsidy or unleasing a harsh tariff. And yet, that's the direction we seem to be headed. Secretary Malcolm Baldrige, together with U.S. Trade Representative Clayton Yeutter, are in the best position to create a third choice, but it hasn't been done.

I can think of no better time to move into high gear than the present. The ruling on October 9 provides a window of opportunity to solve this trade dilemma. What better reason can be given Canada to negotiage than to avoid this big "sanctions" stick?

It is high time that this administration recognized that its negotiating positions have been ineffective. We have the tools to put our trading partners' feet to the fire and negotiate some real solutions. But unless the administration acts quickly, in this window of opportunity, we will have lost the chance to achieve an innovative solution to our timber pricing problems.

LEGISLATION TO CALL IN THE $100 BILL

HON. THOMAS J. MANTON

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 12, 1986

Mr. MANTON. Mr. Speaker, everyone agrees the Congress must take strong, decisive action to attack the drug epidemic which is destroying our youth and fueling the crime rate in our communities. The House recently took a major step toward arresting this plague when it passed overwhelmingly H.R. 5848, the Omnibus Drug Enforcement, Education, and Control Act which is now before the Senate. I believe the Congress must continue to search for other avenues to stop the drug trade and put drug traffickers behind bars.

Recently I had the opportunity to visit with my good friend, Jerry Finkelstein, the publisher of the New York Law Journal. Mr. Finkelstein had an excellent idea which I believe would go a long way toward identifying drug traffickers and drying up their illegal profits. His idea is very simple: Call in the $100 bill.

Currently, there are approximately four $100 bills in circulation for every man woman and child in this country. However, few Americans carry $100 bills in their wallet. Most large retail purchases are made by check or credit. In fact, more than 90 percent of consumer and business transactions are handled by checks. Only small retail purchases are routinely made with cash.

Where are all the $100 bills? The vast majority of $100 bills held domestically and internationally are in the hands of big-time drug traffickers, loan sharks, tax evaders, gangsters, and other law breakers.

The $100 bill is the currency of the drug trade. In most drug busts, it is not uncommon for police to find suitcases or brown paper sacks stuffed with $100 bills. A drug dealers need for large denominations of cash is obvious. Cash eliminates bank records which would lead law enforcement officials straight to the criminals. Under current law, banks are required to report large cash transactions. Also, large denominations make it easy for drug dealers to transport the billions of dollars in which they deal. Quite simply, $100 bills make the drug dealer's life that much easier.

Today, I am introducing legislation to direct the Secretary of the Treasury to promptly recall the $100 bill. This legislation will take from the drug dealer one of his most vital resources—a convenient medium of exchange.

My legislation would simply require the Treasury Secretary, within 30 days after enactment, to use his existing authority to recall the $100 bill. The legislation would also authorize the Secretary to issue regulations to facilitate such a recall and to provide for the minting of replacement $100 bills in a different form.

Calling in $100 bills would send fear through the hearts of big time drugpushers. They would be forced to come to the surface to turn in their old hundreds for new money, and our law enforcement officials will be waiting. If they failed to do so they would lose hundreds of millions of dollars made through this deadly trade.

Mr. Speaker, we must stop drug pushers from poisoning our children and threatening our society. Eliminating their primary medium of exchange would help to do just that. I urge my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring this important bill. By enacting this simple, straightforward proposal, we can drive a big spike into the heart of the drug trade in the United States.

KALAMAZOO, MICHIGAN'S CHURCH OF GOD'S CENTENNIAL

HON. HOWARD WOLPE

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 12, 1986

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Speaker, I want to pay special tribute to Kalamazoo, Michigan's Church of God on the occasion of its centennial celebration.

In 1886, with the visit of a traveling evangelist, Sebastion Michels, to Kalamazoo, came the Church of God movement to Michigan. One of the attendees of Michel's tent worship meeting was William Ralph Hartman, who was so moved by the gatherings that he decided to become pastor of the Church of God, in which capacity he continued to serve for 51 years. The group of six converts grew steadily until 1908 when, with 60 members, the first church building was erected on Ransom Street.

There are many dates important to the history of the Westwood Church of God: 1920, when a new 200-seat, brick building was built, completely financed through freewill offerings; 1960, when a newer church was constructed at its current location on Gorham Lane; 1966, when the church "mothered" a new congregation on the south side of town serving 30 families from the established congregation; 1977, when the current senior pastor and his wife, Tom and Jean Tufts, began their service; and November 1981, when the rebuilding of the sanctuary, which had been demolished by a tornado on May 13, 1980, was completed.

Mr. Speaker, the members of the Westwood Church of God take understandable pride in their history and in the strength of their faith. The centennial celebration commemorates the church's founding and serves to demonstrate its sense of the history and its confidence in its future. I am privileged to represent the members of the Westwood Church of God and to work with constituents who use the celebration of their history as a means of recommitting and rededicating themselves to their religious heritage and to service to their community.

PESTICIDE RESISTANCE AMENDMENT TO FIFRA

HON. JAMES H. SCHEUER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 12, 1986

Mr. SCHEUER. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing an amendment which I plan to offer when the Federal Insecticide, Fungicide, and Rodenticide Act comes to the floor next week.

While H.R. 2482, as amended by H.R. 5440, provides important new provisions, it does not address one issue which will increasingly confront farmers and environmentalists in the years to come: the alarming increase in the number of insects and other pests which have grown resistant to pesticides and can no longer be controlled or killed.

Entire classes of once highly effective pesticide compounds have been rendered entirely useless. Indeed, seventeen species of insects are now resistant to all of the five classes of pesticide compounds in existence—including most recent products of sophisticated research. Already, we no longer have any effective pesticides against some major crop pests. In Long Island, for example, potato farmers have no effective pesticide against one of the crop's major insects.

The prestigious National Academy of Sciences has warned, in a 1986 report, that: "The bright future for crop protection and public health as a result of the introduction of synthetic organic pesticides is now open to serious question because of an alarming increase in * * * resistance."

Our traditional answer to pesticide resistance—switching to a new pesticide—is rapidly becoming impossible. The chemical industry has nearly exhausted the potential of traditional chemical pesticides. Finding new effective chemical pesticides is becoming more difficult—and more expensive. The number of new pesticides introduced has dropped sharply in the last several years.

Making this problem all the more difficult is the fact that many pests that develop resistance to one group of chemicals also turn out to be resistant to other groups of pesticides. Almost half of the anthropod species are resistant to more than one out of the existing five classes of chemical pesticides, sharply reducing the present possibilities of pest control.

The tragedy in human terms is brought home vividly by the World Health Organization's ill-fated attempt in the 1970's to eradicate malaria mosquitoes by widespread use of DDT. The mosquitoes are now widely resistant to DDT, and malaria is surging back to epidemic levels. Unfortunately, scientists fear that DDT-resistant genes will also protect mosquitoes against the last possible class of insecticide.

Fortunately, scientists all over the world are working on pesticide management techniques which can greatly retard the development of pesticide resistance. For example, the National Academy of Sciences' report suggests a number of alternative strategies for pesticide management, including alternating, rotating, or developing new sequences for pesticide applications.

The amendment I have proposed would give EPA, for the first time, explicit authority to address this urgent problem. The amendment will direct the EPA to establish a Pesticide Resistance Management Program to conduct research and testing on management methods to control pesticide resistance. The amendment also directs EPA, in consultation with the Secretary of Agriculture, to share the information developed by the program with all involved parties, including farmers, farmer organizations, manufacturers, and pesticide applicators.

While the coalition supporting H.R. 2482 is generally opposing floor amendments, I am encouraged to know that the coalition, including the National Agricultural Chemicals Association, has no objection to this amendment.

Pesticide resistance cannot be dismissed as a future problem. The problem is now. Unless we take action now to reduce the explosive growth of resistance to pesticides, we may find ourselves in the 21st century facing an exhausted chemical arsenal against pests, and the prospect of suffering the 19th century ravages of nature on our health, our crops, and our environment.

I urge my colleagues to support this very modest step to address this most serious problem.

ACTION AGAINST APARTHEID CANNOT BE DELAYED

HON. GEORGE MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 12, 1986

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, the apartheid system of racial oppression in South Africa must be abolished. It is an immoral and unjust system. It is an affront to human dignity, and that is why the House must vote to impose strong sanctions against South Africa.

Although I support the stronger language contained in the original House-passed bill, I am voting for the sanctions contained in the bill before us today.

The President's policy of constructive engagement has proven to be an embarrassing failure. It has utterly failed to move the South African Government toward an end to apartheid. Instead, the Botha Government continues to write a tragic history of oppression, violence, and death.

Together with other nations, we need to send a strong signal—and this bill is that message.

We must help bring to a close this sorry chapter of the Pretoria Government's inhumanity to its people, and of our own Government's insensitivity to the horrible suffering being endured by the vast majority of South Africans.

Admittedly, this bill does not contain all that we wanted. But it does light a long-dimmed candle for the oppressed in South Africa.

And the strong, bipartisan support behind this bill will hopefuly persuade even the President—who has threatened to veto this legislation—that the time has come to say "No More" to apartheid.

This bill does not preempt any State or locality from enforcing even stronger divestiture and disinvestment legislation, such as the new law we have enacted in my own State of California. I support that action, and wish the Congress would have agreed to legislation more along its lines.

Apartheid must be confronted head-on. It is a morally repugnant symbol of repression, a disease that must be eradicated once and for all.

SHAVING THE NOTCH

HON. BRUCE F. VENTO

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 12, 1986

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, this week, nearly 1,000 senior citizens rallied on the steps of the Capitol in support of legislation to correct the Social Security notch inequity. These 1,000 citizens represent 10 million Americans who are unfairly treated under the Social Security system because they were born during the "notch" years of 1917 through 1921.

As a result of changes in the Social Security law in 1977, beneficiaries born in 1917 and later receive significantly lower benefits than those born in 1916. The 1977 law was enacted to correct an error in the Social Security benefit formula enacted in 1972 that would have provided overly generous benefits to future retirees. Unfortunately, in correcting the formula, a "notch" was created in which individuals born months, weeks, and even days apart receive widely disparate benefits.

I am sure that our colleagues have all heard from many constituents who are receiving hundreds of dollars less in Social Security benefits than they should be just because they were born during the notch years. We are aware that an injustice exists for these Social Security retirees. This is not a question as to whether an inequity exists; it is a question of whether or not the cost of correcting this inequity will jeopardize Social Security.

The fact is that the Social Security funds can afford this modification and this legislation will in no way jeopardize the stability of Social Security. It is estimated that Social Security trust funds will have large surpluses in the future, totaling $186 billion by 1990. The estimated cost of correcting the notch inequity, including $22 billion in retroactive benefits, may be as high as $80 billion over the next 5 years. This is a significant cost, however, we can correct the notch and still expect Social Security trust fund reserves to exceed $100 billion in 1990—a more than twofold increase over today's Social Security reserve level.

Opponents of this legislation argue that correcting the notch will increase the budget deficit. The truth of the matter is that this legislation will reveal more of the true deficit but it would have no actual effect on the deficit. Social Security is independently funded from employee and employer payroll taxes on a "pay as you go" basis. The Social Security system is not responsible for any of our national debt, however, surpluses in Social Security trust funds are now being used as a shield to make the budget picture seem brighter. As my colleagues are aware, using the surplus to offset the deficit is deceptive and should not be permitted. In July, the House passed legislation which would prevent this deception and other injustices by reestablishing the Social Security Administration [SSA] as an independent agency. I congratulate all of you who supported H.R. 5050 to prevent injustices in the SSA. Now I urge your support for H.R. 1917 to correct an injustice in the Social Security payment system.

The 1,000 citizens who came to Washington to protest and the 5 million Americans who signed petitions to correct the notch inequity, brought a powerful message to Washington this week. Due in part to their efforts, H.R. 1917 now has more than 150 cosponsors, and the list of supporters is growing.

Soon, the notch protestors will leave the Capitol, but their message to Congress will remain: We must address this inequity by shaving the notch and restoring just treatment to 10 million of our Nation's senior citizens.

PROPOSALS ON CONTROLLING DRUGS PRESENTED BY MAYOR THEODORE MANN OF NEWTON, MA

HON. BARNEY FRANK

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 12, 1986

Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, Mayor Theodore Mann of the city of Newton, MA, recently presented to the task force on drug control of the United States Conference of Mayors, the report on drugs compiled by the executive department of the city of Newton. An ad hoc committee with membership representing the public schools, representatives of drug treatment facilities, and citizens of various sorts, presented a comprehensive program which the mayor has passed along to the Conference of Mayors.

I'm impressed by the thoughtful and dedicated work of this committee. I commend Mayor Mann for this latest example of his strong leadership on difficult and important issues, and I ask that the text of the mayor's transmission letter and the accompanying report be printed here.

CITY OF NEWTON, MA,
Newton Centre, MA, September 5, 1986.

The TASK FORCE ON DRUG CONTROL,
U.S. Conference of Mayors, Washington, DC.

LADIES AND GENTLEMEN: The enclosed report on the subject of drugs was compiled by the Executive Department of the City of Newton in preparation for the first meeting of the Task Force in Washington, DC, on September 8, 1986.

I share with you the results of Newton's ad hoc committee's work. The membership included representatives of the Newton Public Schools, principals of major drug treatment facilities in the northeast, and citizens interested in assisting all levels of government in advancing programs that will help deal with the spectrum of issues involved in drug control.

Further information from any of the sources mentioned herein would be made available to the USCM Task Force, as would representatives of the several organizations which made such significant contributions to the preparation of this report and its recommendations.

Sincerely,

THEODORE D. MANN,
Mayor.

MAYOR'S AD HOC ADVISORY COMMITTEE ON DRUG AND ALCOHOL ABUSE

PREAMBLE

Whereas, an estimated 20 million people in the United States have used cocaine, and

Whereas, approximately 5 million people are regular users and 2 million are cocaine-dependent; and

Whereas, it is estimated that Americans spend more money on drugs than they spend on food; and

Whereas, the only age group for which the death rate increases each year is 15-25 years old; and

Whereas, 71 percent of the three largest causes of death in this group (accidents, suicides, and homicides) are related to alcohol and drug abuse; and

Whereas, over thirty billion dollars are spent each year on cocaine alone; and

Whereas, one out of fourteen high school seniors uses marijuana daily: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That a comprehensive approach to the problem is necessary, and the following recommendations are to be submitted for consideration to the Task Force on Drug Control of the United States Conference of Mayors.

Sources include: The Surgeon General's Report to the Nation; National Institute of Drug Abuse Alcohol and Drug Problems Association of North America; and the Mediplex Group.

RECOMMENDED SEVEN POINT PROGRAM

1. Comprehensive plan to attack the supply of drugs, nationally and internationally.

Cooperation with other nations to defeat international drug trafficking, including economic sanctions on all countries which do not cooperate with United States rules and regulations concerning herbicides and drug growing.

Federal and state legislation to support the plan.

2. Strengthening of law enforcement efforts.

Coordination of federal, state, and local enforcement agencies—creation of a superagency (include military) at the federal level to implement plan.

Prompt and severe penalties for drug sellers, including mandatory sentencing beginning with first offense.

Federal funding for courts and facilities—additional judges, as well as other enforcement personnel, as needed to implement plan.

Confiscation of property of drug sellers and buyers (a possible funding source for financing the plan).

3. Public education and awareness campaigns.

Disseminate appropriate information warning of the dangers posed by drug abuse.

Expansion of drug abuse education as part of health curriculum; mandatory in grades K through 12. (Please note enclosed: "Newton Task Force on Alcohol & Drugs—Presentation to School Committee—March 5, 1986; draft of "A Parent's Guide to Teen Parties;" and Statement of Concern published in newsletter of Newton Council of PTAs.)

Involve media in public awareness programs.

Local programs to educate parents and members of the public. (For an example, see the enclosed description of the Newton Youth Drug/Alcohol Program.)

Teacher training in drug education—for public and private schools, colleges and universities, and in educational programs geared to public and private business enterprises. (Enclosed is job description for Health Education/Substance Abuse Specialist in the Newton Public Schools.)

4. Identification/Intervention campaigns.

School-based intervention programs to identify "at risk" students, evaluate abusers, and refer them for appropriate treatment.

Employee assistance programs in private and public sectors to identify and refer employees to appropriate resources. (A model plan has been developed by Abruzzi Enterprises of Newton, which includes employee awareness programs and a reward system.)

Criminal justice screening units in both juvenile and adult systems.

5. Treatment resources to be developed in both the private and public sector.

Expansion of insurance benefits for drug/alcohol treatment by mandated state and federal law.

Expansion of coverage for Health Maintenance Organizations by appropriate state and federal law.

Additional funding at federal and state levels for treatment programs for the uninsured.

Expansion of Titles 19, and 20 coverage to include alcohol and drug abuse free-standing rehabilitation facilities.

6. Drug testing programs for private and public enterprises which deal with public safety.

7. Co-sponsor a national conference on "Combating Drug Abuse in the 1980's: A Cooperative Effort." This effort could be a cooperative one among Robert M. Stutman, Special Agent in Charge, New York office of the Drug Enforcement Administration, United States Department of Justice; Matt Green and Joan Green, consultants with Sameem Associates, a private consulting agency for drug and alcohol issues, located in the greater Boston area; and The Mediplex Group, Inc., Alcohol and Substance Abuse Division, also in the greater Boston area.

THE FUTURE OF ARKANSAS FARMERS DISCUSSED IN URUGUAY

HON. BILL ALEXANDER

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 12, 1986

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, the future of Arkansas farmers will be discused in Uruguay next week when member nations of the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade [GATT] will meet to set the schedule for the next round of multilateral trade negotiations. Agriculture must be put at the very top of the agenda. Our U.S. representatives in their insistence on this top priority for agriculture, must be as hard as a pawnbroker's smile.

And, our representatives must be as relentless as the passage of time in their demand that the negotiations on agriculture issues be put on a fast track toward final agreements.

American agriculture policy and, to an important degree, farmer production decisions are rooted in the assumption that U.S. agriculture products will be exported. The health of our farm sector, as it exists today, depends on being able to sell into the international market place approximately one-third of our production. But, during the past 6 years, exports of our farm products have dropped 37 percent. Current estimates for this year put us dangerously on the edge of, if not already into, the Death Valley days of importing more agriculture products than we export.

Since the beginning of this current Presidential administration we have received repeated pie crust promises that agriculture will be right at the head of the table in international trade negotiations. It is time that the pie crust gets a fresh, healthy filling of performance.

The GATT negotiations are not the end all-be all panacea for the problems U.S. farm exports are encountering. Of course, they are not. Unlike 1973 when we had a world food shortage crisis, today there is a maldistributed abundance of food supplies. And, the persistent over-valuation of the U.S. dollar against foreign currencies has been a problem; but, progress has been made in resolving that one. The 1973 and 1975 embargoes on farm exports and the 1974 restrictions on those exports shook world confidence in U.S. reliability as a supplier and encouraged a rise in new competitors in world markets. We have made progress in overcoming those problems.

But, the GATT mechanism can be of major importance in resolving such unfair trade practices as export subsidies and quantitative import restrictions. American farmers are efficient. Our farmers produce more high quality agriculture products than any other nation in the world. Our farmers can be competitive, under fair rules, with those of any other nation in the world.

But, if the deck is stacked against our agriculture exports—as in the case of variable levees where foreign governments continually jiggle the charges against our products—our farmers face unbearable odds in the marketplace.

In the arena of non-tariff barriers, where GATT negotiations could be helpful, some of our trading partners—such as the European Economic Community and Japan—have shown as much conscience as a hungry fox in a hen house.

TRIBUTE TO DR. GABRIEL S. SINISI

HON. ROBERT G. TORRICELLI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 12, 1986

Mr. TORRICELLI. Mr. Speaker, I rise in honor of Dr. Gabriel S. Sinisi as he becomes the 120th president of the Bergen County Medical Society.

A graduate of Seton Hall University, New York University, and Fairleigh Dickinson University, Sinisi received his medical degree from the University of Guadalajara, in Mexico. A member of the American College of Physicians, he serves on the staff of Holy Name Hospital in Teaneck. He is a 32d degree Mason.

Dr. Sinisi serves his community with a deep sense of commitment. We wish him well during his tenure as president of the Bergen County Medical Society.

MEDICARE DEVICE IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 1986

HON. HENRY A. WAXMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 12, 1986

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing H.R. 5516, the "Medical Device Improvement Act of 1986." When the medical device amendments were originally introduced 10 years ago, they established a comprehensive scheme for the regulation of medical devices that has provided substantial protection to the American public in absolutely essential ways.

We in the Congress have monitored the implementation and administration of these amendments during the past decade. Although the act remains essentially sound, certain problems have become evident that need to be addressed. In particular, the Food and Drug Administration has been forced to spend excessive amounts of time and effort working on matters that are relatively trivial while ignoring other, more important, projects because of some unnecessarily burdensome requirements in the act.

H.R. 5516 would modify these portions of the law to permit the agency greater discretion to redirect its energies into more productive and essential activities. The legislation would not make any changes that would lessen the public's protection from unsafe or ineffective devices.

Mr. Speaker, we are late in the session and I recognize that time pressures and pure logistics may prevent passage of the bill in the 99th Congress. On the other hand, I am concerned enough about the need for modifying the law that I am prepared to try to move the bill this year. The legislation was prepared in close consultation with representatives of the Food and Drug Administration, Contact Lens Manufacturers Association, the National Electrical Manufacturers Association, Health Industry Manufacturers Association, consumer representatives, and others.

In order to reach consensus on this legislation the subcommittee stands willing to consider any reasonable changes in this current bill. I invite Members to review H.R. 5516 and would appreciate any comments or suggestions. Should passage of the legislation not be possible before the Congress adjourns, the subcommittee will seek consideration of similar legislation in the next Congress.

CELEBRATING THE AMERICAN CAR

HON. MARJORIE HOLT

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 12, 1986

Mrs. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, each year, the Laurel, MD, Lions Club sponsors an automobile show to raise funds for its various charitable endeavors.

This year's event was the 22d annual Laurel Lions Auto Show, and 827 antique, classic, and special cars were displayed at Laurel Race Course. An estimated 7,000 to 8,000 visitors attended. Richard Jesneck, Lions chairman, and Ron Xifo, show chairman, deserve great credit.

Of special interest at the event was the large assembly of DeSoto automobiles brought to Laurel for the first annual convention of the National DeSoto Club. The occasion also marked the 10th anniversary of the Maryland DeSoto Club led by J. Francis Werneth. On display were the largest number of DeSotos assembled in one place since the manufacturer ceased production on November 30, 1960.

Mr. Speaker, 1986 marks the 100th anniversary of the gasoline-powered automobile. It is said that Americans have a love affair with their cars, and it is true that we love the mobility provided by the automobile.

To visit the Laurel Auto Show and behold the beautifully restored cars of the past is to visit an important part of American history. I congratulate the Lions Club, the DeSoto Club, and the other auto enthusiasts who made the Laurel event such a great success.

AWARD OF CARNEGIE HERO FUND COMMISSION MEDAL

HON. RALPH M. HALL

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 12, 1986

Mr. HALL of Texas. Mr. Speaker, during a heavy rainfall and flood, an act of heroism on the part of Mr. Benny Gracy, chief of the volunteer fire department of the city of Rockwall, TX, resulted in the posthumous award of the prestigious Carnegie Hero Fund Commission medal to that gentleman. The award was made to Mrs. Edith Gracy, the mother of the deceased, who resides in McKinney, TX.

The following is a transcript of the circumstances surrounding the act of heroism for which the medal was awarded:

Carnegie Medal awarded to Benny Gracy, who died helping attempt to save Charles W. and Billy J. Christmas from drowning, Rockwall, Texas, April 27, 1985. Charles, 94, and his son Billy were passengers in a car that was stranded by the rising floodwaters of Buffalo Creek. Gracy, 32, sanitation company operations manager who was also chief of the volunteer fire department, responded to the scene, where he waded to the car to assist a deputy sheriff who had secured a hold on Charles. Before Gracy and the deputy could remove Charles from the car, the force of the water lifted the car and pulled it into the creek, where it lodged against the opening of a 300-foot-long culvert. Charles drowned. Gracy, Billy, and the deputy were pulled by the current through the culvert. Billy and the deputy were able to leave the creek, but Gracy drowned.

It is fitting and proper that this tribute to the heroism and courage of Mr. Benny Gracy should be recognized by the House of Representatives through inclusion in the House RECORD.

THE TURKISH SYNAGOGUE MASSACRE

HON. CHARLES B. RANGEL

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 12, 1986

Mr. RANGEL. Mr. Speaker, I rise to express my deepest sympathy for the victims of the recent massacre of Turkish Jews in Istanbul's central synagogue. This attack was an act of murderous terrorism, repugnant to all members of the world community.

We must remember, Mr. Speaker, that this was not an attack directed solely against Jews. It was an assault upon everything human and decent, an act of violence against innocent civilians. Terrorists claim that they are freedom fighters, yet they commit horrible acts in the furtherance of their cause. The truly freedom-loving people of the world are not the allies of these people, but their victims.

Just as all Americans were hurt by the assassination of Martin Luther King, Jr., so too are members of the world community hurt when innocent people are murdered. The world's spiritual leaders have an absolute duty to come together as one body to unite people of all faiths against senseless violence. They must speak out as one voice in affirming the morality of peaceful coexistence and peaceful change.

Mr. Speaker, let us understand that two of this century's greatest freedom fighters were men of peace. Martin Luther King and Mohatma Gandhi freed their people through peaceful and uncompromising revolution. They never resorted to acts of desperation despite the extreme acts of violence directed at their followers.

Catholics, Protestants, Jews, and Muslims must remember this legacy for the sake of all people. I urge my colleagues to help build this new consensus.

SENATE—Monday, September 15, 1986

The Senate met at 11 a.m., and was called to order by the Honorable JOHN C. DANFORTH, a Senator from the State of Missouri.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

God that made the world and all things therein, Lord of Heaven and Earth, dwelleth not in temples made with hands; neither is worshipped with men's hands, as though He needed anything, seeing He giveth to all life, and breath, and all things * * *.—Acts 17:24-25.

Lord of life, it is superfluous to invoke Your presence in this place for You are here as You are everywhere. We acknowledge Your presence and ask for Your wisdom and guidance for the Senate this week that the impossible may be done—the people served—truth and justice prevail.

As our city hosts 10,000 men and women from nearly 100 nations at the World Congress on Cardiology, we praise You, O God, for life. Thank You for the human heart—this awesome muscle without which life would be impossible. What makes it start? What keeps it going—like perpetual motion, pumping 70 times a minute, hour after hour, year after year, filling our bodies with energy?

Forgive us, Lord, when we presume upon this indispensable gift—when we neglect it—abuse it. Help us to appreciate it—treasure it—take its health seriously. Thank you, gracious Father, for men and women dedicated to the human heart—its care, its health, its preservation. Bless them this week in our city as they devote themselves to becoming increasingly proficient in the care of the human heart. Bless You, Lord, for this remarkable gift to us. Amen.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

The legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, DC, September 15, 1986.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, section 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable JOHN C. DANFORTH, a Senator from the State of Missouri, to perform the duties of the Chair.

STROM THURMOND,
President pro tempore.

Mr. DANFORTH thereupon assumed the Chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the majority leader is recognized.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished Presiding Officer, the distinguished Senator from Missouri [Mr. DANFORTH].

SCHEDULE

Mr. DOLE. At 12 noon today, the Senate will resume executive session to consider the nomination of Justice Rehnquist to become Chief Justice of the Supreme Court. It is also my hope that later this afternoon we can dispose of the Interior appropriations bill, though I recall, I indicated on Friday there would be no votes today, so if we cannot do it without a vote that may create a problem. But we could have the vote set over to tomorrow. It would be my hope that we could on tomorrow complete action on the Rehnquist nomination; also, on the Scalia nomination; and also, if we can work it out, the Interior appropriations bill. So there is no question about it, there will be votes tomorrow. I am not certain when they will begin, but I assume sometime after the policy luncheons which start at 12 and end at 2 o'clock.

On Wednesday, depending on discussions with the distinguished chairman of the Budget Committee, it is quite likely we will go to the reconciliation bill. That is under a statutory time agreement. There will be, as I have discussed with the distinguished minority leader, a time that evening made available. In other words, there will be a wide window there. I know there are many obligations on both sides in early evening.

There will be, of course, a session on Thursday. There will be a session on Friday. I do not anticipate at this point a Saturday session but probably on the next weekend there could be a Saturday session, depending on where we are in completing what we must do before we adjourn on October 3. I say adjourn. I would hope to imply by that we would not be coming back after the election. Even though we have a rather large amount of work to do, I still believe we can complete it.

PRESIDENT AND FIRST LADY CRUSADE AGAINST DRUGS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I congratulate the President and the First Lady for their stirring "heart-to-heart talk" with America last night. Their personal, nonpartisan message underscored the seriousness of the drug problem and made clear the high priority the President has given the drug crisis. It was a fine opening salvo in the war against drugs.

I stand ready to work with the President, and leaders in both parties, to help turn the corner on the tragedy of drug abuse.

Already, some very good initiatives have been introduced in both Houses, from both parties. This week, I plan to introduce a comprehensive antidrug package. It will use the administration's proposal as its foundation, and as such it will support a substantial Senate Republican amendment that will include some of the initiatives of the bipartisan House package and some of the good initiatives in the package introduced, last Tuesday I believe, by my Democratic colleagues in the Senate led by the distinguished minority leader.

Mr. President, before we push ahead into our legislative attack on drugs, I especially want to commend the First Lady for her continued leadership on the drug front. Her dedication and concern will serve as a beacon for all of us, as we unite for a full-scale assault on the drug epidemic.

The Nation owes her a special debt of gratitude. The President and the First Lady have set the pace—it is now our responsibility to follow. There is no time to lose.

THE SENATE CAN FINISH ITS WORK

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, let me also indicate we are getting to that stage which happens every time a Congress is about to wind up as to whether we can finish our work, and again I believe we can. I am an optimist at heart. I know there are a number of things that are must pieces of legislation. There are other matters that Senators would like to bring up. I know trade is a matter of great importance to Members on both sides; product liability is a matter of great urgency with the American people, and we intend to bring up product liability. I am not certain for how long we can bring it up. It depends on whether we can get a time agreement. The same with trade. If we have a trade bill, hopefully bipartisan, then there may be some way to pass it. But if somebody offers a textile bill, for example, then I assume we are in for a long debate and we do not really have time for long debates.

But this week, as I have indicated, I hope we can dispose of the Supreme Court nominations and then move to budgetary matters; namely, the reconciliation savings package.

Now, there are some who would say, "Well, we have too much backed up in the waning days of the session." My view is and has always been that when you have a lot of work to do, the only response is to get right down to business. I think that will call upon all of us to probably put in some long hours between now and October 3, but in my discussions with the distinguished minority leader I think we agree we ought to be able to finish by then. We do not want to extend the session to the 10th of October. We do not want to come back after the election.

However, I do want to offer a few words of encouragement, because we have been down this road before. It is not without precedent that when you get to the end—in fact, there is a lot of precedent, whether it is a State legislative body or the Senate or the House—that there is always a rush to get things done. We have passed only three appropriations bills this year. We hope do another two or three before the week is out. As I have indicated, a number of remaining bills, should be acted upon during the last week of the session.

Some would say, "Well, the Senate is slowing down, it is out of control, TV has taken over." I do not share that view. In fact, I am going to place in the RECORD some information that indicates how many days and how many hours we have been in session over the past years, and I think it will reflect that we are doing quite well.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a chart showing the party ratios, the number of days in session, the hours in session, in every Congress since the 94th Congress.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Congress	Dates	Majority leader	Party ratio	Days in session	Time in session
94th I	Jan. 14 to Dec. 19, 1975	Mansfield	60D [1]–38R–1 Ind [2]	178	1,177 hrs., 11'.

[2] Senator Harry Byrd, Virginia Independent.

Note: Figures taken from the Congressional Record Daily Digest "Resume of Congressional Activity."

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I think the chart is helpful. If there are those who would say that we are delaying the Nation's business because of television or whatever, or that we are out of control and we are putting in long hours, which we are, they will see, in perspective, that everything looks pretty good.

I am confident that we are going to have a lot of action the next 3 weeks. We are going to have a lot of bipartisan cooperation, and we are going to adjourn—unless by some unforeseen problem we cannot—on the 3d of October.

So what I am suggesting, as I have indicated, is that there probably will be no session this coming Saturday, but I would not foreclose a session on the following Saturday and on October 4, if necessary. There might be a session then. That is a holiday for some of our colleagues.

RECOGNITION OF THE DEMOCRATIC LEADER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Democratic leader is recognized.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the Chair.

THE WORK OF THE SENATE

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I join the distinguished majority leader in not only expressing the hope but also in urging that all of us work hard to complete the business of the Senate by the close of business on October 3.

The number of days or the number of hours are important only to the extent that the Senate is doing something on those days and in those hours. The Senate can be in session a great number of days and a great number of hours, but if it is doing nothing much in getting its work done, then the number of days, in itself, is not determinative of the quality of the work that is being done or the amount of work that is being done.

Incidentally, I have never heard that television coverage was slowing down the Senate. From what I have seen of television, as I perceive it, the debates have been more probative, more substantive. I think the debates have been better since we have had television and radio coverage of the Senate.

I must say that I am a little surprised to hear that anyone has complained of television coverage as having slowed down the Senate. It comes as somewhat of a disappointment and surprise to me. I have not heard this. If that is being said, I would certainly be the first to help debunk the idea that television coverage is slowing down the work of the Senate.

I stay on the floor of the Senate as much as does anybody. The distinguished majority leader and I are here as long, as early, and as late as anybody else in the Senate; and there is nothing to support the contention that television coverage is slowing down the work of the Senate.

Mr. President, I am willing and ready to stand with the distinguished majority leader if he feels that we should come in this Saturday as well as on either or both of the other two Saturdays. There is a lot of work to be done, and I hope we would not wait until the last week to take up the continuing resolution, for example. Our timing, to some extent, is affected by the work of the House in that regard. The continuing resolution is not over from the House yet, but as soon as it comes over from the House, it seems to me that the Senate ought to get busy on it. I am sure that the Appropriations Committee of the Senate will do that. But the earlier we get the continuing resolution before the Senate, the better.

One of the things that can keep us here the longest is the continuing resolution, because that is a lightning rod for so many amendments of all kinds, germane and otherwise.

The distinguished majority leader has a job to do. He has a responsibility to perform. I have a job and a responsibility. Those responsibilities that are incumbent upon us as leaders do not make it easy for us to be liked among our colleagues. We have to get this job done. We can elect to go out on the 3d and come back after the election, or we can elect to proceed after the 3d and go for the next week before we go out for the election. But I join the majority leader in saying that I believe we can get the work done by the close of business on October 3. It is not going to be easy; I believe we can do it. It is going to require a great deal of effort and some long hours, and maybe we cannot do it. But I join the leader in saying that we ought to do it, and we are going to do it if it can be done. Part of that will depend upon the House. But let us try to get it done.

The majority leader is spending a good bit of time on the Rehnquist nomination, which he has to do, and perhaps that is pushing off some of the other work. However, as he has indicated, if there is a lapse during the debate on that matter today, he will try to bring up the Interior bill.

I hope the distinguished majority leader will not be criticized for his efforts in keeping the Senate in and working late, but I only offer the one caveat, that we not wait until either the next week or the last week to start doing that. The platter is full and maybe we should do it earlier rather than later. That is my only suggestion; and in making that suggestion, I carry part of the responsibility here for trying to inveigh on my colleagues to be ready, ready to manage bills, and ready to call up their amendments earlier rather than later.

Mr. President, with that, I ask the majority leader if he could proceed now with the two items that are on the Calendar of the Bills and Joint Resolutions Read the First Time, and dispose of that matter at this point, rather than at the close of morning business.

DRUG ABUSE COMBAT POLICY

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read S. 2798 for the second time.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2798) to establish and implement a comprehensive policy to combat drug abuse in the United States.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I object to any further consideration.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under rule XIV, the bill will be placed on the calendar.

SUPREME COURT POLICE

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will read S. 2814 for the second time.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2814) to preserve the authority of the Supreme Court Police to provide protective services for Justices and Court personnel.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I object to any further consideration of S. 2814.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under rule XIV, the bill will be placed on the calendar.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished majority leader.

I yield the floor.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR PROXMIRE

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senator from Wisconsin is recognized for not to exceed 5 minutes.

TV IN THE SENATE

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I hesitate to disagree with my good friend, the minority leader, Senator BYRD. I agree with him on almost everything. I disagree with him on TV in the Senate.

I disagree with him on TV in the Senate for several reasons. I think it may have prolonged the sessions of the Senate so far, but if it has done so, it has done so by mistake. It has done so on the assumption that people are watching what we are doing in the Senate on television.

I submit they are not. On TV in the Senate I receive no mail, literally not one letter. I receive 1,000 letters a day. I get none on anything I said on the floor or anyone else said on the floor. I receive none from people from what they have seen on television.

I think it is something that the membership realizes is not having any impact.

I think we go back to the old bad habits and continue as we have before. The bad habits will be better, however, than the worse habits we adopted since television is prolonging the debate, implying that somehow we are addressing the vast audience of millions of people.

I get letters from people who were in the gallery. They see me in Wisconsin when I go out to the State and shake hands.

People say, "I saw you on the floor of the Senate."

I ask: "Did you see me on television?" "No."

They are sitting in the gallery watching it.

So I think this is a myth that anyone is watching us on television. I would not be surprised if it were announced that the cameras have not yet been turned on for the last several weeks, that we have been under the illusion we have been operating on television, but we have not been.

TIME HAS COME TO ACT ON ARMS CONTROL

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, in this era of the collapse of arms control agreements such as the SALT II Treaty and the ABM Treaty, it is an astonishing irony that there are more widespread discussions between the super powers on arms control matters going on than ever. Consider the sweep of current peace negotiations. At Geneva, Switzerland nuclear and space arms talks have been continuing since March of 1985. A sixth round of these meetings will begin on September 18. Also at Geneva a conference on a total ban of chemical weapons concluded one session on August 29. It will resume later this year. Concurrently the super powers are meeting now and will continue to meet until September 19 in Stockholm to negotiate ways of reducing the risk of accidental war. The goal of this negotiation is the notification of each super power by the other of the movement or military exercise of NATO or Warsaw Pact troops in Europe. Meanwhile in Vienna, Soviet and United States negotiators are conferring on the reduction of NATO and Warsaw Pact troops stationed in central Europe. Concurrently, negotiators Paul Nitze representing the United States and Victor Karpov for the Soviets have been meeting in Moscow and Washington to seek a basis for progress in the Schultz-Shevadanaze meeting that will in turn try to set an agenda for the likely summit meeting between President Reagan and Secretary Gorbachev later this year.

But all this is only the beginning. The super powers have been meeting in Bern, Switzerland this month to negotiate a curb on the spread of chemical weapons. And back in Geneva technical experts have been meeting in an entirely different forum to try to reach some super power accommodation on nuclear testing. As we know, the United States is trying to reach agreement on the verification of underground nuclear weapons test explosions. The Soviets want an outright and total ban on such tests. Also in Geneva a separate task force of United States and Soviet negotiators has been meeting to set up nuclear risk reduction centers in Moscow and Washington. The centers would exchange information about strategic exercises and missile tests. Geneva is also the site for continuing current meetings of the Standing Consultative Commission. This Commission was established by the ABM Treaty of 1972 to provide a forum for reconciling differences over allegations of violation of strategic arms control treaties. The Commission met in July. It will meet again in October.

In addition to this series of super power arms control parleys there have also been super power conferences on nuclear energy issues, separate meetings on developing agreements to reduce the risk of superpower confrontations at sea, discussions in both Washington and Moscow over regional problems such as in South Africa, Afghanistan, and Central America. Superpower conferences also continue in Washington and Moscow on cultural and scientific exchanges and trade and human rights.

Mr. President, all of this remarkable series of discussions is taking place at a time when Marshall Shulman, the director of the Institute for Advanced Study of the Soviet Union at Columbia University declares that in the more than 40 years he has intensively studied the Soviet Union, there has never been a time when the Soviets were more willing to negotiate peace-promoting agreements with the United States than they are now.

What an irony that at this time when the opportunities for advancing the cause of peace are better than they have been since the end of World War II arms control is in greater disarray than it has been at any time since the dawn of the nuclear age. Why should this be? Should we wait to negotiate until the United States and NATO have further built their military power? No. Here's why. Obviously the United States negotiates right now, today, from a position of overwhelming strength. The U.S. economy is literally twice as big and productive as the Soviet economy. The GNP of the NATO alliance is three times greater than the countries of the Warsaw Pact. The U.S. technology is superior in 14 of the most vital areas of military technology. The Soviet Union is ahead in none. Both superpowers have about the same number of strategic nuclear warheads which constitute the heart of the great deterrent to nuclear war. But three-quarters of the United States warheads are deployed in submarines and bombers while three-quarters of the Soviet deterrent is land based and stationary. What does this mean? It means the Soviet deterrent is far more vulnerable from the United States deterrent. As our most expert Sovietologist, Marshall C. Shulman, has told us, the Soviets are more ready to negotiate now than they have been for the past 40 years.

Can anyone doubt that the time to negotiate an end to the nuclear arms race is now? Mr. President, it's time the President gave his negotiators the signal to act on all fronts now. And, I mean now.

CORPS OF ENGINEERS WIN GOLDEN FLEECE

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, my Golden Fleece Award for September goes to the Army's Corps of Engineers for pigging out on foreign travel by increasing spending from $276,662 in fiscal year 1983 to at least $406,638 in fiscal year 1985, a fat 47-percent increase. Their total budget during this period actually got leaner, falling by 3 percent.

When the trough at home starts leaking, the corps casts its eyes overseas. But the taxpayer should not have to pay for the corps' sudden craving for stir-fried pork.

In fiscal year 1983, 275 corps eager beavers flew off to foreign lands. Of this number, 118—43 percent—stayed in this hemisphere; 91—33 percent—went to the Far East; and 54—20 percent—headed to Europe. Each trip by an individual lasted about 6 days and cost the taxpayer a little over $1,000 on the average.

By fiscal year 1985, the number of globe-hopping porkmeisters had increased to 413, a jump of 50 percent, even though their budget for work at home had fallen on hard times. Many traveled in this hemisphere, 196—47 percent—followed by trips to the exotic East, 142—34 percent—then by trips to Europe, 69—17 percent.

The corps is still digging around trying to find out how much it spent on foreign travel in fiscal year 1985. At first, it reported spending $513,437, but after catching some flak for the increase, it reduced its estimate to $406,638. Whatever the amount of the increase, it is too much.

That statement applies with extra force to the corps because economic development experts are thoroughly disenchanted with large-scale public works, the corps' forte. Far too many of these projects are conceived in hope but end in despair. The American taxpayer ends up paying for many of these flops in the form of foreign aid.

Talk about a double whammy. First, corps employees hop, skip, and jump around the world looking for new business. Then foreign countries hit on Uncle Sam to pay for their pork barrel projects. The taxpayers get it going and coming.

We should be hammering a tight lid on this pork barrel. The taxpayers have suffered more than enough from the corps' homegrown pork barrel. They should not have to pay for exporting it.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The clerk will call the roll.

The legisative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I ask for recognition.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Mississippi.

DEFENSE AUTHORIZATION BILL FOR FISCAL YEAR 1987

Mr. STENNIS. Mr. President, I do not propose to present a long speech. But I have a few remarks to make concerning procedures on the question of completing and taking up the military authorization bill for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year which begins shortly.

Let me make clear, Mr. President, that I have no expressed or implied suggestions of holding back by those who are in charge of the bill on the House side or on this side, or any individual that is chairman of a committee or subcommittee. Nothing could be further from my mind than those subjects that I have mentioned.

But my concern is that the session now is almost down to its last days—and this is the largest single bill that we have had for the year, the largest sum of money that is carried in one bill. Even though the measure has passed the House of Representatives in one form and even though it has passed this body in another form, they have not been able to get the measure to a conference where those differences are always worked out, and a bill agreed on. And the final agreement is used, of course, as a basis for the appropriations that are made. Again this is the largest appropriation for the fiscal year for any purpose—the military Department of Defense appropriations bill.

As I emphasize, there is no fault or no blame to be attached here to any Member, or to the floor leaders. We have never had better ones in my time who are this good on utilizing the time that we have. But at the same time we cannot afford, as I see it, to fail to function on the large, important, and primary parts of the entire budget without giving every Member and even every person that might be interested a chance to find out just what is in the measure and the prime reasons by the different Members of either or both bodies as to why those provisions are thought to be necessary or why they are thought to be best.

I am concerned that the Department of Defense authorization bill for fiscal year 1987 is in serious danger of not being enacted into law as such.

That bill has been passed as I have said by both the House and the Senate, and is awaiting conference, but there are a great many controversial issues in the defense bill. And we are running out of time rapidly in this Congress. If the bill is not enacted, it will be a serious failure of the congressional system.

That is what we have to be more concerned about, Mr. President. We are not in an emergency now any more so than we have been in any preceding months and probably will be in succeeding months. We are gradually letting our system suffer through misuse or nonuse, failing to carry out the highly important functions of our system in the way that we prescribed ourselves, that it shall be done in order to have the best chance to fully understand them by the Members, by the officials that are going to administer the law, and by the people that are going to pay the taxes to operate it.

The Defense authorization process began in 1959 with a simple amendment to require the annual authorization of the procurement of ships, aircraft, and missiles. Within a few years and during the 1960's and 1970's, the Defense authorization bill became the centerpiece of Congress' consideration of major defense problems. Major questions such as troops in Europe, the All-Volunteer Force, the Vietnam war, and strategic nuclear weapons were routinely debated and settled on this bill. But the coverage of this bill also has grown over the years adding research and development, manpower, and other items. Finally in 1982, Congress decided to require all appropriations for defense to be annually authorized. I am concerned that the DOD authorization bill has become overloaded and is carrying too much.

I am satisfied with this. I am in the position at least to make a judgment on that because of my continuous years of service here under the two systems. This measure has grown so much that it is absolutely necessary in my humble opinion that we follow these processes or something very near to them, and complete action on a separate defense authorization law standing on its own foundation.

The alternative, if we do not have this bill that has already been passed—to continue the further steps that are necessary to put it on the President's desk and get it made into law—is to put it on as a so-called floor amendment to a measure that is pending at that time which is strictly a temporary measure by its nature. We call it the continuing resolution. It may or may not have many other subject matters foreign to this purpose in the bill already.

It is unthinkable to me that we would let a measure as important as this bill just linger around, be pushed from pillar to post, and delayed and not acted on in the ordinary way, in a way that is not conducive to having a strong law with the sinews in it that will carry out the purposes as intended—a law in its own right, subject to the President's approval on its own merits rather than as a part of a bill with a great many other subjects, some of which were related and some not related, and without having the dignity, the power, and the strength that should go with a measure of this kind.

As I say, that procedure is just impossible, to me to imagine, that we could satisfy our own conscience, so to speak, by treating this type of legislation, this volume of legislation, in what I think is a careless and almost an indifferent way.

We must find a way, Mr. President, to settle the most important and urgent issues in connection with the DOD authorization bill and put off some of the other issues, if necessary, for other legislative vehicles. The committee system is the backbone of the work of Congress. The Defense authorization bill has provided a focus and forum, together with leverage on the military program and budget so that the committees and Congress can resolve some of the very difficult problems we face in this dangerous world. It provides a way to bring to bear the expertise of the Members, the staffs, the executive branch, and experts and professionals from around the country. It provides a benchmark that all Senators and Congressmen can rely upon to provide for expertise among our colleagues.

Certainly, our splendid staff members, and we have many of them, are not working under the most favorable circumstances when they have to become a part of a continuing resolution, that part being the contents of the authorization for a certain total fiscal year.

This year's bill, which is awaiting conference, represents a great deal of work by the Armed Services Committee. Both the House and Senate Armed Services Committee have devoted hundreds of hours of Members' time and thousands of hours of professional staff time to bring these two bills to where they are ready to go to conference. A way must be found, Mr. President, to salvage the best of that effort.

I do not speak lightly here, of course, about the importance of the work that has been done by the membership of these committees. I do not claim any credit for any that I have done. I have done very little. But Members have been in session day and night, day after day, weekends included, working on various aspects of this enormous bill.

Staff members have worked day and night all during the year, the 12-month period since we were at this stage last year. Work of this kind has gone on by these people who become experts, many of them, really worthwhile experts, in the field where they are engaged. They are the connecting link with the members of the committees and subcommittees who have many other duties. They are a connecting link with the Department, with the civilian employees of the Department of Defense, who are administering most of the contents of the bill.

I have said that there is nothing the matter with our system. We are proud of our system. We are celebrating the 200th anniversary of the continuous and unbroken administration of our Government under the terms and conditions of the Constitution of the United States.

We have reason to be proud of that fine record.

But we are being overcome now, and overtaken and overburdened by the bigness of this Government, the enormous size of these departments.

Of course, we all know there are great sums of money required to operate them. I am talking now about the operations from the standpoint of proficiency and efficiency and the standpoint of knowledge that goes into making of these laws, the final form of the laws, by the membership, what time they have left from the many other duties they have, and the continuous work of those who serve as members of our valuable staffs.

If we fail to produce a defense authorization bill this year, it would be a beginning of the pulling down of the committee system, which is Congress' principal means for dealing with the volume and complexities of problems we face today. That would be a tragedy. I believe the leadership, the membership, and the committees of both Houses of Congress should make every effort to bring forth a defense authorization bill and let it stand on its own strength and its own right.

I know it is necessary to reach that point that the Armed Services Committee should meet in conference as soon as possible. I am certainly not trying to tell them what they must do, but I am referring to the system that those of us who work in those departments respect, and, as a whole, we have carried out over the years. However, as this problem has grown and the size of this bill has grown, so has the contest for the division of time grown and the ability to keep up with it in a casual way can no longer be carried out. It has to be given a preference. It has to be given a time in order to reach its better attainments, its best form, and proceed then in the way I have already outlined where it would have a chance to become the best law possible.

They should attend to the major defense policies and weapons that are at issue and try to reach an agreement on the major military questions. If necessary, they should set aside some of the contentious issues that are important but tangential to the military questions. In the end, we all must work to preserve the process, and that means to bring out a conference report on the defense authorization bill for fiscal year 1987.

I do not want to mention blame. This is no attack on the people who are involved in this enormous amount of work. That work has largely been done, and now we are talking about trying to finalize it and bring it to a conclusion in its best form, to give the President of the United States a chance to pass on it as he should have and must have, really, to be at his best, as to whether or not he will sign the bill rather than having to sign the substance of it in with a number of other matters in a continuing resolution.

It is unthinkable that we should let this happen, that we are not willing for it to be settled in any such way.

Mr. President, I know that sometimes a continuing resolution serves a good purpose. I remember when its use was started. I think I remember the first time it was ever used. It was just used then to take care of omissions of a relatively small kind and extent. It can be used in that way to profit. I am not trying to condemn it or make it illegal in any way; I am just saying that now, the times demand that these bills of such far-reaching consequences deserve and must have the very best time, the very best effort, the very best skills of all of us who are charged with any responsibility in connection with their enactment.

The people, by and large—the voters, the taxpayers—are entitled to have the very best judgment that we can give these troublesome questions here in searching for a solution and remedy. If we do not follow the general procedure that I have outlined here in what is the law, then we are not really doing our best.

I bring this to the attention of my colleagues in the rush of affairs here. I know what our leaders would like to do. I hope they try even harder and that every Member from both bodies cooperates fully and we find a way that all this major legislation will be given a reasonable time and therefore, our country and our people will have the best chance of getting the benefits of what is really the best we can do.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR LEVIN

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. DENTON). The Senator from Michigan is recognized.

TAX REFORM AND GRAMM-RUDMAN

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I wish to continue my series of remarks on the tax reform conference report today by matching up two statements—one by President Reagan and one by Senator DOMENICI, the chairman of the Senate Budget Committee.

On December 12 of last year, when President Reagan signed the Gramm-Rudman Deficit Reduction Act, he said:

> With the passage of this landmark legislation * * * deficit reduction is no longer simply our hope and our goal—deficit reduction is now the law.

On September 11—just last Thursday—Senator DOMENICI said with respect to the possibility of meeting the Gramm-Rudman targets in 1988, "If we stay with the tax bill as it is * * * I don't think we can do it. It's an absolute impossibility."

Mr. President, the moment of truth will soon be here. Do we stand by our commitment of last year for deficit reduction, or do we pass the conference report on this tax reform bill this month at the risk of rocketing the deficit reduction goals of Gramm-Rudman into irrelevance?

We are forced to choose because the conference report—unlike the bill that passed the Senate—does not include the language of the Domenici-Gramm amendment. This amendment required that the tax reform bill's so-called revenue "windfall" in 1987 not be counted as reducing the deficit in that year, but rather be used as a partial offset to cushion the revenue shortfall which occurs in 1988 and 1989 as a result of this tax reform bill. The goal of the Domenici-Gramm amendment was to prevent Congress and the President from using the bill's temporary surplus in the first year in a way that would increase our deficit problems over the next 4 years. But once the Domenici-Gramm amendment was dropped in conference, it meant, in effect, that every year must stand on its own in the face of the erratic revenue flows which result from this tax reform bill. The consequence in 1988, for example, is that even without deviating $1 from the spending plans envisioned in the budget resolution the Congress adopted less than 3 months ago, we are $17 billion further away from meeting the Gramm-Rudman targets for that year.

The conflict between Gramm-Rudman and the tax reform conference report is unfortunate for two reasons. First, in principle, tax reform and Gramm-Rudman should be allies and not antagonists. Closing tax loopholes and a toughened minimum tax on profitable corporations and wealthy individuals who are not paying anything in taxes could provide the revenue component of a comprehensive and credible deficit reduction package. Instead, the pending tax reform bill soaks up this revenue to fund uneven tax cuts.

Partial reliance on revenues to meet the Gramm-Rudman targets would mean that those targets could be met without the unacceptable large program cuts which would result from relying exclusively on those cuts to achieve the required level of deficit reduction. Using the revenues from loophole closing and a toughened minimum tax would also allow us to avoid resorting to regressive tax increases, such as increases in telephone excise taxes and the like, for the revenue component of a deficit reduction package. And such a package of spending cuts and revenue increases would permit us, as the authors of Gramm-Rudman intended from the beginning, to meet those targets without the ax of across-the-board cuts falling.

The second reason why the conflict between the tax reform conference report and Gramm-Rudman is unfortunate is that it sets the stage for the triumph of a special interest against a public interest. But, it is becoming increasingly apparent that the primary support for this bill is in Washington, the home of the special interests, and not in the heartland.

By the way, I do not know of one interest group that has formally come out opposed to the conference report. As a matter of fact, when the Senate version was on the floor, the chairman of the Finance Committee made a point of how it was formally supported by over 700 organizations.

In a very real way, the many, many months of work put in by some Members of Congress and by the administration in developing this bill have given them an understandable, but, nevertheless, special interest in seeing it enacted into law. This determination is by no means a product of evil intentions but of human nature.

The public's primary interest, however, is not in seeking this particular tax reform bill enacted, even though it is clear that the public would like to see some kind of tax reform. Rather, the public's primary interest is in seeing us take substantial steps to reduce the deficit. We reflected the public's interest when the Senate voted in April by a margin of 72 to 24 in support of a resolution calling for an agreement on deficit reduction before considering tax reform. Over the ensuing few months, however, the order of priorities within the Senate has been reversed. We are now on the verge of passing a tax reform bill while we are still scrambling for ways to meet the Gramm-Rudman deficit targets in 1987 and while many are dreading the budgetary implications for 1988.

Several months ago, when the Secretary of the Treasury James Baker was asked whether the President's pursuit of tax reform legislation meant that deficit reduction was on the back burner, he denied it by saying that every stove has two front burners. But when we look at the conference report on the tax reform bill, it is clear that this stove only has one front burner. And it is not only warming up tax reform—it is also cooking our budgetary goose as well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business, with statements therein limited to 5 minutes each.

HEMOPHILIA CENTERS

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues the success of the Hemophilia Diagnostic and Treatment Centers Program, which provides comprehensive diagnosis and treatment for hemophiliacs in 22 federally funded regional centers throughout the United States. In the first 10 years of the program—1975-85—and as a direct result of its prevention orientation, average hospital admissions for hemophilia patients served by these centers were reduced 88 percent, overall costs of medical care were reduced 74 percent, and unemployment was reduced 74 percent. The National Hemophilia Foundation estimates that $1.9 billion in medical care costs have been saved because of this program.

The two treatment centers in Arizona—the Mountain States Regional Hemophilia Center at the University of Arizona Health Science Center and its affiliate at St. Joseph's Hospital/Medical Center—have treated 236 patients. The Arizona Hemophilia Association, through these two centers, has developed an impressive program of comprehensive care. Its array of services, in addition to physical care, includes psychological assessment, continuing education, and counseling to enhance family support. Taking an interdisciplinary approach, the association has brought the medical, financial, and psycho-social ramifications of this disease into full focus, while underscoring the long-term benefits of early intervention. The association has also served an important function in educating the public about the needs of hemophiliac patients. In short, the Arizona program provides high-quality and comprehensive care in a manner which has resulted in significant cost savings. This program can serve as a model for treatment of other chronic diseases. By focusing Federal funds on comprehensive early intervention with an emphasis on home care, the end result can be both significant cost savings and, more importantly, better care and an enhanced quality of life for patients.

I applaud the program and all the individuals who have worked so diligently to make it a success.

THE DEFICIT DILEMMA

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, we have less than a month before Congress adjourns for the fall elections.

And in that time, we've got to resolve a huge economic problem. Right now the economy is a leaning tower straddling a fault line. Within 1 week's time the stock market dropped 127 points. It dropped over 86 points on September 11 alone.

The markets are worried about the economy. They're worried about the possibility of higher interest rates. They're worried about our ever-growing international trade deficit.

And they have doubts whether the administration and Congress are serious about reducing the deficit.

Well, Mr. President, I'm worried, too. I'm afraid we're in the same situation as the family on a Sunday morning who gets a call that unexpected guests are on their way. They don't have time to clean up the mess, so they sweep it under the rug, stuff it in the closet, put it behind the couch. The mess is still there, but it's been rearranged to make it look like your house is in order.

It seem to me there's a growing temptation in Washington to do the same things now, just before the elections. Hide the problems. Put them aside.

Mr. President, it just won't work. Less than 1 year ago, we enacted the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law. It was a promise that this year, we'd get the deficit down to $144 billion. Next year, we'd get it down to $108 billion. And over the course of the 3 years that follow, we're supposed to get the deficit down to zero.

But last Thursday, Members from the House and Senate met as the Temporary Joint Committee on Deficit Reduction, authorized under the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings law. And the reason we met was to act on the sequester report put together for us by the Congressional Budget Office and the Office of Management and Budget.

The fact that we met at all—the fact that we had to activate this backup procedure—shows we have some serious problems.

We had to report a sequester because our efforts to reach this year's deficit target have already fallen short. We passed a budget resolution in the sping that was supposed to get us down to the target, and we've found out now it wasn't enough. What we're up against is the special provision in the law that says, if we miss the target and if we can't agree on measures to reach our goal, we'll have to vote on a package of legislative changes that will whack away sums of money according to a percentage formula.

Originally, that procedure was to have been automatic but the Supreme Court struck down the automatic procedure, so now we might have to vote on those cuts ourselves. And if we vote not to make those cuts, we go home to this year's election with a deficit of somewhere over $170 billion.

It seems to me what we have to do is take the advise of an old Florida farmer. That farmer used to tell visitors, "if you want anything and can't find it, just come to me and I'll tell you how to get along without it."

I wish that farmer was here right now, because that's a lesson we'll have to master in a hurry. We'll have to get along without a lot of things to avoid a sequester and meet the deficit target.

At our hearing last week, we heard from the Director of the Office of Management and Budget, Jim Miller. And we heard from Rudy Penner, the head of the Congressional Budget Office. The committee membership asked them about their deficit estimates.

Now, keeping in mind that our target for this year is $144 billion, the Office of Management and Budget projected a deficit of $156.2 billion. The Congressional Budget Office put the deficit at $170 billion. That averages out to $163.4 billion.

If OMB turns out to be correct, we'd have to cut a little over $12 billion more to reach the target. If the average projection is correct, we'd have to cut a little over $19 billion. And if CBO is right and the deficit is $170.6 billion, then we've got to cut roughly $27 billion.

Now I know some will ask if the problem's really as bad as that. Some will point to the $10 billion cushion under Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. It provides that if we come within $10 billion of the $144 billion deficit target, that's close enough, and we can avoid a sequester.

Well, for one thing, if we miss by $10 billion this year, and then miss by $10 billion in each of the next 4 years we end up $50 billion short of our goal. It's like spotting the opposition a touchdown and a field goal then multiplying it by a billion and still think you can win.

That's not much of a game plan, Mr. President. But let me remind this body of something else. Let me start with the tax bill.

A lot of people say, well, we're going to get somewhere between $9 and $11 billion in surplus revenues from the tax reform bill this year. That should just about wipe out the deficit excess this year. So let's take that money and we won't have to worry about the deficit target.

Alright. Fine. But if we do that, we exhaust the entire supply of gimmicks. And the reason is that while we get a windfall from the tax bill, this year, we end up with a shortfall next year or about $22 billion. That's a swing of $30 billion that has to be made up from other spending cuts or tax increases. So once you start robbing Peter to pay Paul you end up playing the tax bill against the deficit, and the deficit's going to win.

OK. Now are there any other problems? Yes, there are. The House has passed a drug bill, and that will add more than a billion dollars to the deficit.

We're also removing the Social Security trigger threshold this year, and that's going to add about another billion dollars to the deficit. We'll be spending more for a new space shuttle. And, when you add roughly $2 billion more because of Appropriations Committees actions, the deficit becomes $175 billion.

Could we solve the problem with additional revenues? Yes. In fact, on September 4, Congressman ROSTENKOWSKI spoke of an eventual need to raise the revenues to pay for these programs. But when Budget Director Miller appeared before the temporary Joint Committee on Deficit Reduction last week, Senator DOMENICI asked him if the administration could reach the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings deficit targets in fiscal year 1988, he answered yes. And when Mr. Miller asked whether it could be done without revenues, he said "yes, with difficulty."

Mr. President, I think Mr. Miller is in a distinct minority. But unless we come up with a king's ransom of additional budget cuts, we're going to have a sequester in 1988 because there's no way the administration will approve raising the revenues to pay for the spending it's endorsed.

What happens when you face a sequester? Congressman RUSSO made that point to Mr. Miller. He told Mr. Miller that a sequester would be evenly split between defense and domestic spending.

And what happens if we run into a sequester and Congress won't pass it or the President won't sign it? You get a deficit in excess of $170 billion this year.

So what I'm asking is this. Let's work together to cut the deficit as we promised to do under Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. Let's not use any tricks. Let's not rely on a revenue windfall that becomes a revenue shortfall next year. Let's not overlook the fact that we'll be spending money for the drug war and Social Security that will make the deficit higher.

What I'm asking for here is clear and honest estimates of the problem and tough and quick action on the deficit. The election may be on everyone's mind. But the deficit is on everybody's backs. And the monkey is on ours.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD some excerpts from the hearing of the temporary Joint Committee on Deficit Reduction held September 11, 1986.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

EXCERPTS FROM A HEARING OF THE TEMPORARY JOINT COMMITTEE ON DEFICIT REDUCTION, SEPTEMBER 11, 1986

DR. RUDOLPH PENNER, DIRECTOR, CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE

A large part of the budget is neither exempt from sequestration or is unaffected by it. As a consequence, the reductions are concentrated in about 40 percent of total outlays. To get 19.4 billion in outlay reductions, and even larger amount in new budget authority and other spending authority has to be sequestered. For example, defense spending authority would have to be reduced by 19.1 billion in order to get outlay savings of 9.5 billion. This calculation indicates that a sequestration would reduce spending for a number of years following 1987.

An '87 sequestration of 5.6 percent for defense and 7.6 percent for nondefense programs would be much more severe than these percentages imply. First, these reductions would be on top of the '86 sequestrations. Second, the reduction in real terms would be even greater because of the loss of any adjustment for inflation in 1987. The combined effect suggests reduction from the original '86 appropriation levels of close to 13 percent for defense spending—defense programs in real terms, and 14 percent for nondefense.

EXCHANGE BETWEEN SENATOR PETE DOMENICI, CHAIRMAN OF THE SENATE BUDGET COMMITTEE AND JAMES C. MILLER, III, DIRECTOR, OFFICE OF MANAGEMENT AND BUDGET

Chairman DOMENICI. I will withhold on questions on my side—well, no, I will not.

Let me ask one. Somebody get five minutes up here.

Mr. Miller, with reference to the tax bill that is pending in conference, have you received some preliminary estimates as to the effect of the tax bill on the 1987 revenue base?

Dr. MILLER. Yes, I have.

Chairman DOMENICI. And with reference to the current estimates of that bill, are you aware of the '88 and '89 estimates on the impact revenue?

Dr. MILLER. Yes.

Chairman DOMENICI. Is it fair to say that the current estimate is that there will be an $11 billion revenue add-on or windfall, so to speak, in '87?

Dr. MILLER. Yes.

Chairman DOMENICI. To be followed by an '88 and '89 revenue shortfall that currently is estimated at about $22 billion per year, is that correct?

Dr. MILLER. Yes.

Chairman DOMENICI. Mr. Miller, I assume that at this late date—this early date, you are nonetheless busy at work on the 1988 budget which you will submit on behalf of the President to the Congress and the people of the United States early next year?

Dr. MILLER. Yes.

Chairman DOMENICI. Might I ask if you at any time in working on that budget assumed that you could meet the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings total for 1988 with $22 billion reduction in the tax base of this country off the current baselines?

Dr. MILLER. With difficulty. With difficulty. [Laughter.]

Chairman DOMENICI. I interpret that in preparing the budget to meet the Gramm-Rudman total of 106 billion for 1988, that you have not yet come up with even a preliminary approach which would reach that if we had $22 billion less in revenues than we presently contemplate? Is that a fair statement of your answer "with difficulty"?

Dr. MILLER. Yes.

Chairman DOMENICI. Might I ask one additional question?

Might I ask whether you expect us to reach the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings' targets of 1988 if that tax bill becomes law?

Dr. MILLER. Yes.

Chairman DOMENICI. Might I ask do you intend us to do that without any new revenues?

Dr. MILLER. Yes.

Chairman DOMENICI. Might I ask you how in the world you intend to do that? [Laughter.]

Dr. MILLER. With difficulty. [Laughter.]

BUDGET DIRECTOR JAMES C. MILLER III

I do not think at this time we should depend on an $11 billion bump from tax reform as saving us from a sequester. As I indicated earlier, well, we have got to have the $9.4 billion off the Gradison baseline to get within the $154 billion margin of error. And I think we can accomplish that. But we should not depend. We should do it through a reconcilation process, not depend on the bump.

EXCHANGE BETWEEN SENATOR CHILES AND DR. RUDOLPH PENNER, DIRECTOR OF THE CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE

Senator CHILES. The Blue Chips consensus economic forecast for September has just been released. Based on predictions of 52 private forecasters, I think it is interesting to compare what these forecasters are saying with what CBO and OMB are telling us.

We have gotten used to OMB telling us that things are going to be good, just around the corner. Now they are telling us we can expect 3.7 percent growth in fiscal year 1987. CBO is not that optimistic at 3.2 percent, and GAO, in releasing its review, is telling us that CBO is too optimistic and should expect the economy to grow at only 2.8. Now, we see the Blue Chips consensus is telling us that GAO is too optimistic, that the private consensus sees a 2.7 percent growth. So the consensus is a full percentage point below OMB, and when you look at where the OMB forecast fits in with the private forecasters, we find out of the 52 forecasters only five believe the economy is going to grow as fast as OMB sas.

That means that 90 percent of the forecasters think that OMB is wrong, and even CBO is optimistic with 60 percent of the private forecasters.

So it is important that we understand, that the OMB/CBO average forecast is a far cry from the true average as reflected in the Blue Chip consensus.

The true average would reflect the views of both the optimistic and pessimistic forecasters.

Basically, Dr. Penner, if the consensus is correct and we grow .7 percent slower than CBO says, how much larger would the 1987 deficit be?

Dr. PENNER. Well, first let me make the point, Senator, that while our friends at GAO were quite kind to us in the January report with regard to our forecasting record, which stands up pretty well compared to private forecasters, nevertheless, it is such an uncertain business, that our average forecast error for the summer forecast for the following calendar year, for real growth, during the history of CBO, is slightly more than one percentage point. So neither the OMB nor the GAO forecast, nor the consensus forecast can be said to be really significantly different from ours. But taking you very literally, and assuming that all else, interest rates, and et cetera remain the same, a one percentage point reduction error on our part in the real growth estimate for 1987 would lead to an $8 billion error in the deficit estimate.

A drop of .7 percentage points; therefore it would be about 6 billion. Extrapolating that to 1988, a .7 percent carried through, it would be worth——

Chairman DOMENICI. Could I interrupt?

Dr. PENNER [continuing]. 16 billion.

Senator DANFORTH. I believe that the enactment of the Tax Bill necessarily renders Gramm-Rudman-Hollings as "dead duck" after the 1987 fiscal year.

The reason I believe that is that for 1987, we will not end up with sequestration. We will end up hitting a target not of $144 billion, but, $154 billion, and we will use to meet that enlarged target a projected first-year revenue windfall from the Tax Bill of $11 billion * * *.

So the comment that I would make is this: I believe that between the regular, what we have agreed to, reduction in the deficit between 1987 and 1988, and the fact that we are using, will be using a front-end load from the Tax Bill, whereas, there will be a shortfall in the following years; plus what we know is clear funny money in the Tax Bill; plus the economic consequences of repealing the Investment Tax Credit, taking more money out of depreciation, and other changes, the effect that that will have on economic projects—I think that it is a matter of certainty, that Gramm-Rudman-Hollings is a one-year phenomenon, and that it will be of no value at all.

CHARLES A. BOWSHER, COMPTROLLER GENERAL OF THE UNITED STATES

Mr. BOWSHER. I would like to comment just a little bit on the expenditure side, too, because I share Senator Danforth's concern, and one of the concerns we put in our GAO report was, that as you push these expenditures into the next fiscal year, that might help for it to make this target. But both in the defense area, and the agriculture area, and things like that, what you are doing is, you are building up a bigger and bigger problem for the succeeding years.

JAMES C. MILLER, III, DIRECTOR, OFFICE OF MANAGEMENT AND BUDGET

Dr. MILLER. Let me say of course we have got to get ten—excuse me—$9.4 billion to get within the 154 margin of error. So that is the total that we have to have. Our position is yes, we cannot accept any further reductions in the defense and international affairs budget.

In other words, we have to have what is in the mid session review, is what has come in under the Congressional Budget Resolution, which is a substantial cut, as you know, in defense and international affairs.

The President cannot accept anything less than that, and so we have—and the President has been adamant against any increase in taxes.

SENATOR PETE DOMENICI, CHAIRMAN, SENATE BUDGET COMMITTEE

Yes, we will try to reduce the deficit with the reconciliation bill. I don't believe that there is any way to find what's necessary in the reconciliation bill. I have ten or twelve ideas. I've talked to the administration about theirs; I've searched around with everybody that has them. Let me suggest, I don't think they're there.

And in addition, there too, most of them are one shot events. Everybody is joyous that we're going to sell Conrail, maybe. We don't get any impact in 1988 and 1989 from those kind of events, and we're right back in the muddle.

My prediction is that with the passage of the tax bill as is, with deficit reduction as pushed on us by Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, and the way we will comply, that it will become common, ordinary knowledge by January, February, March of next year that we cannot reach the totals prescribed by Gramm-Rudman-Hollings.

But I think we're getting very close, very close to abandoning a notion of truly ever getting to a balanced budget, and I believe we're going to end up very close to abandoning the notion that we'll be on that path, as prescribed by that law.

Nonetheless, it's serving a good purpose. This year it will force us to do some things that we wouldn't otherwise do—frankly not an awful lot. It's just forced us not to spend some things. But in terms of reductions that are permanent in nature—I mean, what have we done? We have passed nothing. That's why the deficit is lower.

If we do the tax bill as is, if we intend to stay with Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, I just don't believe we can do it. Now, everybody can decide what that means, and you apparently have decided there's another policy that you think is very good, tax reform bill, that it's necessary. No criticism from my side. The time has come when you have to do something. Just don't have any doubt about it—it's not going to make Gramm-Rudman-Hollings miraculously get us down to 108 billion and a balanced budget three years thereafter. I mean, it just can't. It's an absolute impossibility.

SANCTIONS AGAINST SOUTH AFRICA—SENATE BILL DOES NOT PREEMPT STATE AND LOCAL ACTION

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, in recent days, a question has arisen as to whether the Anti-Apartheid Act of 1986 adopted last month by the Senate might have the effect of preempting State and local action against apartheid.

In my view, it would have no such effect, and the lack of any such effect is strengthened by the overwhelming vote in the House of Representatives last Friday in passing the Senate bill while simultaneously adopting House Resolution 549 expressing the explicit intent of the House against preemption.

Indeed, it was with some surprise that the possibility of preemption is being pressed at all, because the case for preemption is so tenuous. True, Senator LUGAR, in opposing the D'Amato amendment, expressed his view that State and local antiapartheid laws would be preempted. But he cited no language in the statute to justify that view, and the view is contrary to the premise of the D'Amato amendment, which was designed to mitigate the effect of State and local antiapartheid laws on contracts involving Federal aid.

The D'Amato amendment was defeated, but a revised fall back amendment was immediately accepted deferring Federal penalties on such contracts for 90 days, so that State and local governments could modify their antiapartheid laws if they chose to do so.

Obviously, if Senator LUGAR's argument were correct that the Senate bill preempted State and local antiapartheid laws, there would have been no need for either the original or the revised D'Amato amendment, since the State and local laws would be invalid anyway.

Further, the preemption issue must, of course, also be analyzed in terms of the Senate debate last year on the Anti-Apartheid Act of 1985. The issue was clearly raised in an amendment—circulated by Senators ROTH but never called up for debate—that would have added specific language requiring preemption to the 1985 Senate bill. In the end, after extensive lobbying against the amendment, the proponents of preemption chose not to raise their amendment in the face of certain defeat; and the legislative history at the time of passage was clear that the bill as adopted by the Senate would not preempt State and local laws.

Four days after Senate passage, Senator LUGAR and McCONNELL engaged in a colloquy attempting to salvage their position by arguing that the bill, even without the Roth amendment, would still preempt State and local laws; but it is unlikely that any court would take this argument seriously in the face of the strong legislative history to the contrary and the decision of the advocates of preemption not to press the Roth amendment.

Curiously, in the 1986 South Africa debate, Senator LUGAR chose not to raise the preemption issue again until the last day of Senate floor debate, at a time when the unanimous-consent agreement governing debate on the bill prevented any further amendments from being raised.

In light of this sudden 11th hour claim of preemption, I asked Prof.

Laurence Tribe of Harvard Law School, one of the most distinguished and respected constitutional scholars in the Nation, to analyze the issue. I have received Professor Tribe's analysis today and his conclusion is clear:

The Anti-Apartheid Act would not preempt state and local measures to divest holdings in South Africa or to limit dealings with companies doing business there. (Emphasis in original)

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a letter from Professor Tribe and his accompanying memorandum may be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SEPTEMBER 15, 1986.

Hon. EDWARD M. KENNEDY,
U.S. Senate, Russell Senate Office Building, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR KENNEDY: As you requested, I have studied the Comprehensive Anti-Apartheid Act of 1986, as first passed by the Senate this August and then by the House this September, to determine whether this federal legislation would preempt state and local efforts to sever economic links to the South Africa regime. Particularly in light of statements favoring preemption by Senator Lugar and a few others, I appreciate the importance of carefully assessing this issue so that the debate on whether to override the anticipated veto of the measure is as fully informed as possible. For the reasons set forth in the accompanying memorandum, I have concluded that the Anti-Apartheid Act would not preempt state and local measures to divest holdings in South Africa or to limit dealings with companies doing business there.

The provisions of the Anti-Apartheid Act bind states and localities every bit as much as they bind private companies; like private companies, state and local governments are forbidden by the 1986 Act to import South African uranium or krugerrands, for example, and are forbidden to make new direct investments in South Africa. But nothing in the Act purports to place a ceiling on the range of further steps private institutions might take to express their disapproval of apartheid or their lack of confidence in the political and economic future of the regime currently in power in South Africa. Thus, even though the Act does not require any private body to divest its portfolio of existing holdings in South Africa, it leaves private bodies—such as colleges and universities, for example—completely free to divest. Public universities and other public entities, whether linked to municipal governments or to state governments, are left equally free, in their proprietary role as market investors and market participants, to reduce their dependence upon, or their complicity with, the apartheid regime.

A decision by Congress to saddle states and localities, acting in such proprietary capacities, with unique limits on their freedom is, of course, conceivable. But such a decision would be most unusual and would pose a host of problems that no court would likely assume Congress was eager to create. Among other things, legislation leaving state and local bodies less free to divest than private bodies are would place courts in an extraordinarily difficult and delicate position, requiring them to discharge a number of tasks hard to square with a suitably limited conception of federal judicial authority.

As the accompanying memorandum explains, only the clearest evidence that Congress in fact intended such unusual results could persuade the courts, under existing preemption standards, that states and cities had lost, by virtue of the recently enacted legislation, a freedom of choice that they had previously enjoyed and that private actors continue to enjoy under the 1986 Act. The text, structure, and legislative history of the Act completely fail to provide such evidence. It follows that state and local laws and policies that complement the anti-apartheid thrust of the new federal law, far from being preempted by it, would be welcomed by courts, and should be welcomed by lawmakers, as helping to carry forward the purposes of this landmark statute.

Sincerely yours,

LAURENCE H. TRIBE,
Tyler Professor of Constitutional Law, Harvard Law School.

MEMORANDUM ON THE NONPREEMPTIVE EFFECT OF THE COMPREHENSIVE ANTI-APARTHEID ACT OF 1986 UPON STATE AND LOCAL MEASURES

From: Laurence H. Tribe.
To: Concerned Members of the House and the Senate.
Date: September 15, 1986.

On September 12, 1986, the House of Representatives passed a measure already approved by the Senate establishing a broad regime of sanctions against South Africa. The question addressed in this memorandum is whether this legislation might to some degree preempt state or local legislation. This memorandum concludes that the federal statute would have no such preemptive effect.

I. THE DIVERSITY OF STATE AND LOCAL ANTI-APARTHEID MEASURES

Spurred by events in South Africa, states and cities have taken a broad range of steps to limit their economic links to that country. These actions take a wide variety of forms; the most common practices are divestment of public ownership of shares in corporations directly operating in South Africa, and "selective purchase ordinances" restricting city contracts with companies operating there. See N.Y. Times, Sept. 9, 1986, at A1, col. 5.

Restrictions on investments may take the form used by Maryland, which imposed a moratorium on investment of state funds in companies that do not receive the highest ratings of the Sullivan Principles. See id. Or these restrictions may go further, and require the sale of state or local investments currently held by state or municipal entities in any such company. See, e.g., Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 3-13(f) (West Supp. 1986).

These restrictions may go further still, and require divestment of all holdings by state or local public universities or other bodies in any company operating in South Africa. See, e.g., D.C. Code Ann. § 47-342 (Supp. 1986). Last month, for example, California passed a measure requiring the sale over the next four years of more than $11 billion in state securities in companies doing business in South Africa. See N.Y. Times, Sept. 9, 1986, at D5, col. 2. New Jersey's decision to sell its holdings of $3.5 billion was the largest previous divestment program undertaken by a state. See N.Y. Times, July 21, 1986, at A5, col. 2.

Restrictions on investments also vary in their generality; most are directed specifically at South Africa, but some bar public investments in any company that "condones through its actions discrimination on the basis of race." E.g., Wisc. Stat. Ann. § 36.29(1) (West Supp. 1985) (regulating investment of university funds).

At least thirty cities, mostly within the last year, have passed laws to curtail the awarding of public contracts to corporations operating in South Africa. These bidding preferences may allow such awards if other bids are at substantially higher prices—e.g., eight percent (as in Chicago), six percent (as in Washington), or five percent (as in New York City). Or they may ban the purchase by city agencies of goods and services from such companies altogether, except where accepting the lowest bid is required (as Los Angeles stipulates), or unless the company can demonstrate that it does not discriminate or that its products are essential or unavailable elsewhere (as Maryland stipulates). See N.Y. Times, Sept. 9, 1986, at D5, col. 5.

Finally, the motivations for such steps are as diverse as the various measures themselves. Some states have promulgated statutes in order to break ties with a regime they detest. Others have passed laws to conform with their overall investment or educational policies. See, e.g., Conn. Gen. Stat. Ann. § 3-13(d)(a) (West Supp. 1986). In some instances, general civil rights statutes have been interpreted to require divestment from South Africa. See Op. Atty. Gen. Wisconsin (Jan. 31, 1978). Of course, even cities and states that pass no formal divestment measures are likely to take account of the situation in South Africa in deciding upon routine issues, including what equipment to purchase or what funds are the most prudent in which to invest. Such decisions are made by a myriad of officials at all levels of government and bureaucracy. And all will share the difficulty of determining the degree to which they were based on a straightforward rationale of economic prudence. For whatever one's moral perspective on the South African regime, no prudent investor could fail to see the economic implications of investing in a country undergoing a profound political and social upheaval.

II. THE RELEVANT CONSTITUTIONAL FRAMEWORK

Although the setting of the foreign policy of the United States is an exclusively federal prerogative under the Constitution and cannot be usurped by state or local bodies with or without the consent of the U.S. Department of State, see Zschernig v. Miller, 389 U.S. 429, 436 (1968), it is equally fundamental that states and their public subdivisions are assigned the responsibility, under our Constitution, of deciding where and how to invest the public resources they collect through taxing and other sovereign measures. The Congress, in which the sovereign interests of states and localities are represented, see Garcia v. San Antonio Metro. Transit Auth., 105 S. Ct. 1005, 1018 (1985), may choose to displace this historically localized responsibility by entrusting some suitable federal authority with control over the economic choices of state or local bodies. But absent such a congressional choice, there is nothing in federal constitutional law that could conceivably support taking from state legislatures and municipal authorities this basic control over their own economic destinies.

It is, of course, true that an Act of Congress dealing with the relations of the United States with a particular nation—in this instance, South Africa—might serve to limit the options open to states or localities.

To the extent that federal legislation has this effect, the Supremacy Clause of Article VI renders contrary state or local choices null and void. But no court could find the requisite preemptive effect in a Congressional measure that is ambiguous on this score. As the Supreme Court has repeatedly held, there must be compelling evidence of preemptive intent by Congress before courts may "infer that Congress has deprived the States of the power to act," see San Diego Bldg. Trades Council v. Garmon, 359 U.S. 236, 244 (1959), in any area that, like local taxing or spending, see San Antonio School Dist. v. Rodriquez, 411 U.S. 1, 40-55, (1973), is infused with "deeply rooted . . . local feeling and responsibility," Garmon, 359 U.S. at 244; see Pacific Gas & Electric Co. v. State Energy Resources Conservation & Dev. Comm'n, 461 U.S. 190, 204 (1983). There is, in other words, a strong presumption against finding federal preemption by mere implication—absent, of course, a direct conflict or contradiction between the federal statutory mandate and a particular state or local measure. See Rice v. Santa Fe Elevator Corp., 331 U.S. 218, 230 (1947).

The presumption against preemption operates fully in the context of state and local divestment decisions, whether those give effect to a polity's sense of how to deploy its public funds most prudently or to its convictions as to the moral obligations that compel it to avoid association with a repugnant regime. Nothing in the legislation passed by the Senate on August 15, 1986, and approved by the House on September 12, 1986, conflicts with the sorts of state and local divestment measures sketched in the introductory portion of this memorandum, and nothing in the recently enacted federal legislation evinces a decision by Congress to oust states and localities altogether from this area.

III. THE TEXT AND HISTORY OF THE FEDERAL STATUTE

State and local divestment measures of the sort thus far enacted would neither interfere with the national conduct of our foreign policy nor conflict with the operation of the recently enacted statute. The federal statute includes an array of complex limitations, and any state or local law that conflicts directly with these limitations of course would be preempted, but nothing in the measures described above in Part I of this memorandum would create such a conflict.

Courts will find preemption premised on "actual conflict" only when it is difficult for a party to comply fully with both local and federal laws. See Pacific Gas & Electric v. Energy Resources Conservation & Development Comm'n, 461 U.S. 190, 204 (1983); Jones v. Roth Packing Co., 430 U.S. 519, 532 (1977). Further, courts will not infer preemption based on speculative conflict; the conflict must be real and actual. See Exxon Corp. v. Governor of Md., 437 U.S. 117, 131 (1978); Huron Cement Co. v. Detroit, 362 U.S. 440, 446 (1960).

The statute at issue here poses no such conflict. The Act lists measures by the United States to undermine apartheid, including numerous specific restrictions that would apply to the actions of private parties. These include prohibitions on the importation of krugerrands, see H.R. 4868, 99th Cong., 2d Sess. § 301 (1986), on the importation of uranium or coal from South Africa, see id § 309, and on new investment in South Africa, see id § 310. But the statute includes no explicit prohibitions that apply to states or local governments as such. If the alleged preemptive effect of the federal statute would reach all state and local actions taken in whole or in part to impose pressure upon, or express disapproval of, South Africa, this effect would have to encompass decisions to accelerate the rate at which they sell interests in assets related to South Africa under a preexisting divestment program, or decisions to purchase goods or services from one company rather than another based partly on each company's ties to South Africa.

Yet the new legislation regulates the states and cities in their capacities as "market participants" only in the same way that private parties are regulated. For example, a state could not invest directly in South Africa or import South African uranium or krugerrands without violating sections 310, 309, or 301, respectively. But as market participants, states and cities are left just as free to disassociate themselves still more from the South Africa regime as private parties are. Compare Reeves, Inc. v. Stake, 447 U.S. 429 (1980) (according greater freedom to states as "market participants" than as regulators of private actors); Hughes v. Alexandria Scrap Corp., 426 U.S. 794 (1976) (same).

The only conceivable argument for preemption would follow if the statute were construed as setting a ceiling on the permissible means of divesting economic assets related to South Africa. But this the statute does not do, not for private parties, nor for state and local governments; the statute draws no distinction between state and local governments as market participants, on the one hand, and private parties on the other. In this regard, it would be highly unusual for Congress to impose greater restrictions on state and local public actors than it imposes on private actors. Particularly in light of the proprietary actions at issue, such a public-private distinction would pose difficult problems for the courts in identifying "state actors." Although courts deal with such questions in constitutional cases, it would be unusual for Congress throw such a question to the courts through statutory preemption.

The federal statute has no provision preempting local legislation. The preamble simply states that the Act's purpose is "to set forth a comprehensive and complete framework to guide the efforts of the United States in helping to bring an end to apartheid in South Africa;" this language merely indicates congressional intent to coordinate foreign policy among the branches and agencies of the federal government. See H.R. 4868, 99th Cong., 2d Sess. § 4 (1986). All of the provisions dealing with government procurement and investment decisions refer specifically to the "United States Government." See id. §§ 314, 316. This silence regarding the states and cities reveals an intent not to preempt state and local action.

The legislative history of anti-apartheid bills before Congress buttresses this inference. Senator Granston explained in 1985 discussing anti-apartheid legislation then pending, "[W]e have no such intention [to preempt local legislation] in this bill otherwise the Senate would have put a preemption provision in the bill." Cong. Rec. S9388 (July 11, 1985). As Senator Moynihan asserted regarding the legislation this year, "States and localities should have the right to make their own decisions regarding their own individual involvement with the South African regime." Cong. Rec. S9306 (July 17, 1986). The House vote of September 12, 1986, expressly endorsed this non-preemption view.

Senator Lugar, to be sure, expressed a different view of the matter. See Cong. Rec. S11,817 (Aug. 15, 1986) (comments of Sen. Lugar). But Senator Lugar, by himself or by citing isolated comments from the floor, should not be able to deter states from deciding how to invest or spend their own funds. If a few legislators could insert calculated snippets of legislative history and thereby instruct the courts to regulate the finances of states and cities, they could circumvent the need to articulate that scheme of regulation through the usual legislative process. Such a result would violate the spirit of Immigration and Naturalization Service v. Chadha, 462 U.S. 919 (1983), which struck down the legislative veto as a circumvention of the bicameralism and presentment requirements. Chadha noted that the Constitution had set forth "a single, finely wrought and exhaustively considered, procedure," id. at 951, to ensure "that legislation should not be enacted unless it has been carefully and fully considered by the Nation's elected officials," id. at 949. The legislative history of the bill at hand reveals nothing resembling full legislative consideration and adoption of a preemptive federal scheme.

The only section of the statute dealing with state and local anti-apartheid laws is section 606 added by Senator D'Amato. See Cong. Rec. S11,818 (Aug. 15, 1986). This section states: "(1) no reduction in the amount of funds for which a State or local government is eligible or entitled under any Federal law may be made, and (2) no other penalty may be imposed by the Federal Government, by reason of the application of any State or local law concerning apartheid to any contract entered into by a State or local government for 90 days after the date of enactment of this Act." H.R. 4868, 99th Cong., 2d Sess. § 606 (1986). This provision implies that after ninety days, states and localities could be prevented from following their anti-apartheid policies in procurements using federal funds if these policies were contrary to federal law. This leaves the negative implication that investment decisions are not preempted, nor are disbursements not using federal funds. Indeed, even if cities were to apply their anti-apartheid laws using federal funds, the laws themselves would not be preempted by the federal statute. For if Congress intended such preemption, this provison would have been entirely superfluous. There would be no need to penalize states and localities for following their own laws if these laws were invalidated by the federal legislation.

In all, the statutory language and legislative history fall far short of the compelling evidence of preemptive congressional intent required for a court to sustain a preemption attack upon state and local laws. See New York Telephone Co. v. New York Dep't of Labor, 440 U.S. 519, 540 (1979). If Congress intended to force states and municipalities to continue doing business with a regime they find morally repugnant or in a nation whose future they deem unstable, this intent has not been expressed in a manner sufficient to preempt local legislation. See Troyer, Slocombe & Boisture, Divestment of South Africa Investments, 74 Geo. L.J. 127, 160 n.135 (1985).

Moreover, a finding of no preemption is wholly consistent with the conceded primacy of the federal government in foreign affairs and international relations. The fact that the federal statute here deals with foreign policy does create a conflict with state and local actions where there would otherwise not be one. Under the supremacy clause of the Constitution, local regulations must give way if they conflict with any federal statute, treaty, or executive agreement. The state and local measures at issue here, however, affect no pact with any foreign nation and are broadly consistent with the federal anti-apartheid act presently under consideration.

In virtually every instance in which the Supreme Court has invalidated an action by a state as unduly impeding the national government's foreign relations authority, it has done so because that action unambiguously clashed with a federal statute, treaty, or agreement. See, e.g., United States v. Pink, 315 U.S. 203 (1942) (invalidating a state policy of refusing to honor the Soviet Union's claim to assets because this policy conflicted with the Litvinov Agreement with that nation); Hines v. Davidowitz, 312 U.S. 52 (1941) (invalidating state alien registration system that conflicted with the federal statutory system). In the absence of such authority, courts have been reluctant to presume a conflict between a state's action and foreign policy. See Pink, 315 U.S. at 231 (observing "the power of a state to refuse enforcement of rights based on foreign law which runs counter to the public policy of the forum" when no federal statute or treaty specifies otherwise).

Thus, in the recent case of Container Corp. v. Franchise Tax Board, 463 U.S. 159 (1983), the Supreme Court upheld a state corporate tax that included foreign subsidiaries in the calculation of income in spite of the fact that this action had "foreign resonances." Id. at 194. The Court found that the tax ran afoul of no act of Congress nor any treaty, and thus did not "seriously threaten" federal foreign policy. Id. at 196. For other examples of state measures upheld in spite of their potential impact upon foreign affairs, see Clark v. Allen, 331 U.S. 503 (1947) (upholding state reciprocal legislation conditioning the right of an alien to inherit property on the grant by the alien's country of similar rights to United States citizens); K.S.B. Technical Sales Corp. v. North Jersey Dist. Water Supply Comm'n, 75 N.J. 272, 381 A.2d 774 (1977) (upholding buy-American statute against commerce clause challenge), cited with approval in Reeves, Inc. v. Stake, 447 U.S. 429, 445 (1980); J. Zeevi & Sons, Ltd. v. Grindlay's Bank, Ltd., 37 N.Y. 2d 220, 371 N.Y.S.2d 892, 333 N.E.2d 168, cert. denied, 423 U.S. 866 (1975) (upholding state court's examination of fairness of judicial process of a foreign country to determine if it will enforce a judgment of that country's courts).

IV. THE UNRESOLVED PUZZLES A PREEMPTION HOLDING WOULD ENTAIL

Indeed, a decision to oust states and localities from this sphere would leave in place an ominous economic and political vacuum that no court could comfortably create. The Supreme Court has often stressed its reluctance to read federal legislation in such a way as to leave a sphere of activity entirely beyond deliberate public control in any suitable forum. See, e.g., Pacific Gas & Electric Co. v. State Energy Resources Conservation & Dev. Comm'n, 461 U.S. 190, 207-08 (1983); Parker v. Brown, 317 U.S. 341, 362-63 (1943). Yet that would be the inevitable result of inferring from the legislation at issue here an intent to occupy the field. For Congress has most assuredly put in place no mechanism of its own to replace, with some appropriate federal authority, the state and local officials and authorities who currently shape the investment decisions of public universities, pension managers, and other bodies.

Construing the federal statute in such a way as to subtract from state and local authorities the power to deflect investments from South Africa—perhaps power to divest prior holdings, or power to decline to expand such holdings, or some combination of these powers—without adding any new body to govern such matters would leave such power with no locus at all other than the federal courts themselves. To those courts would then fall such extraordinarily touchy and complex questions as whether a particular state or city acts improperly when it decides to slow down its rate of investing pension funds in a particular company doing business in South Africa. Is the state or city acting in a preempted manner if it is motivated wholly or partly by moral concerns about apartheid? What if its concerns are purely prudential but are infused, as even prudence must be these days, by recognition that the situation in South Africa is unstable in part because of apartheid and the world's reactions to it? If a decision to slow down the rate of future investments is not preempted, what of a decision to diversify existing investments?

For federal judges to review state and local investment portfolios from this perspective would be difficult at best and incompatible with the Article III judicial power at worst. As the Supreme Court has observed on numerous occasions, such judicial line-drawing is strongly disfavored in the foreign policy realm, an area of particular executive and legislative expertise. See, e.g., Container Corp. v. Franchise Tax Bd., 463 U.S. 159, 194 ("[t]his Court has little competence in determining precisely when foreign nations will be offended by particular acts"). The decision as to what types of anti-apartheid measures should be preempted is a quintessentially legislative one, for as the Court has long noted, the conduct of foreign relations is largely immune from judicial control. See e.g., Regan v. Wald, 104 S. Ct. 3062, 3039 (1984) (noting "classic deference to the political branches in matters of foreign policy"); Fiallo v. Bell, 430 U.S. 787, 792-93 (1977); Shaughnessy v. Mezei, 345 U.S. 206, 210 (1953); Harisiades v. Shaughnessy 342 U.S. 580, 588-89 (1952), Goldwater v. Carter, 444 U.S. 996, 1002-04 (1979) (Rehnquist, J., concurring); Banco Nacional de Cuba v. Sabbatino, 376 U.S. 398, 423-28 (1964). Until or unless Congress explicitly demarcates which of the broad array of state and local measures affecting South Africa it intends to preempt, the judiciary should not be forced to pick and choose without more guidance.

To infer preemption in such circumstances would entail a delegation of extraordinary power to the courts. Such an interpretation would force courts to employ their own notions of state sovereignty in delineating the boundaries of the preemption by the federal government. This role would be at odds with the view of federalism espoused by the Supreme Court in Garcia v. San Antonio Metropolitan Transit Authority, 105 S. Ct. 1005 (1985), which envisioned a scheme that relies upon the political branches of the federal judiciary to protect state sovereignty. See id. at 1017-19.

Whether or not Congress could constitutionally entrust such a role to federal judges, it is plain that it has not done so. And no amount of language, either in a statute's preamble or in the Congressional Record, referring to the virtues of having the nation speak with a single voice on this complex subject could possibly substitute for a decision by Congress to supplant local authorities with federal authorities, judicial or otherwise, in carrying out these delicate decisions.

TRIBUTE TO THE MINORITY LEADER

Mr. GORE. Mr. President, one Senator in particular deserves credit for opening the Senate's doors to television—Minority Leader ROBERT BYRD.

No Member of this body has a better understanding of Senate rules or a deeper respect for the Senate institution than the distinguished minority leader. When Senator BYRD began the long, uphill battle to bring TV to the Senate, we all knew that he had carefully weighed the consequences, with the institution's best interests foremost in his mind. Perhaps no other Member could have coaxed the Senate forward with such success.

It was an honor and a pleasure to work with the minority leader in launching a new era in representative democracy. The experiment is already a success. As the Senate approaches its 200th birthday, it remains as fresh and vital as our forefathers imagined, and more responsive than they could ever dream.

Last month, the Radio and Television News Directors of America recognized the minority leader for his contribution to open government. He received the organization's Distinguished Service Award at the RTNDA International Conference in Salt Lake City on August 27, 1986.

I ask unanimous consent that the minority leader's address to that conference be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AWARD INTERNATIONAL CONFERENCE OF THE RADIO AND TELEVISION NEWS DIRECTORS OF AMERICA

(By Senator Robert C. Byrd)

I am honored that you have singled me out to receive your Distinguished Service Award. In all sincerity, I thank you for this signal recognition.

In fact, however, I want to share the distinction of this award with you—the Radio and Television News Directors of America.

Bringing about regular live and recorded coverage of the day-to-day proceedings of the U.S. Senate was not an easy task. Over many long months, and in many hours of debate with our colleagues, I and other Senators had to labor long and hard to make the case for regular television and radio coverage of the Senate.

But in that effort, you were among our best allies. You, as individual broadcasters, and as an organization, also helped to bring about electronic media coverage of the Senate. Your persuasiveness, your earnestness, and your professional integrity as journalists and reporters helped to assuage the anxieties of many Senators, and to melt much of the opposition toward daily Senate broadcasts. For myself and for the American people, I thank you for helping to make a major contribution to our democratic way of life.

I an confident that history will applaud our success in this effort. From its inception, the U.S. Senate was meant to be a reflective and unhurried assembly—as George Washington put it ". . . the place where legislation was sent to cool down.

But the Senate was never intended to be invisible. In this era, for many people, if something does not appear on a television screen, or come to them over their radio, it has no reality. In recent years, again and again, the American people have had opportunities to see and hear their Presidents. And the advent of broadcasts from the House of Representatives made the continued blackout and silence of the Senate even more puzzling.

Innumerable Americans have sat in the Senate gallery during Senate deliberations and have ever after counted that experience one of the highlights of their lives. Outside that on-site event, however, until now, the American people had to depend largely on secondhand reports to let them know what their Senators were doing.

Now, millions of Americans can sit at home, or in their offices, and witness for themselves by eye and by ear the proceedings of the U.S. Senate.

As of now, such Senate coverage is still somewhat of a novelty. But in time, we and you will mature in handling this new procedure. I predict that that maturing will add appreciably to our Nation's strength and to the endurance of our free democratic institutions. Our political system depends on an informed electorate. Woodrow Wilson said, ". . . the informing function of Congress should be preferred to its legislative function," In that regard, perhaps nothing that has been done in my many years as a Senator has a greater potential for helping the Senate to fulfill that function as will the electronic coverage of the Senate, and I am proud to have been, in some fashion, pivotal in bringing about such an important innovation.

Again, thank you for honoring me with your Distinguished Service Award, and thank you for helping to give the American people a clearer view of their elected representatives at work, as together we continue the paramount task of hammering out our destiny as a Nation.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorom.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

□ 1240

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CONCLUSION OF MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Morning business is closed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now go into executive session to consider the Rehnquist nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

NOMINATION OF WILLIAM H. REHNQUIST TO BE CHIEF JUSTICE OF THE UNITED STATES

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report the nomination.

The assistant legislative clerk read the nomination of William H. Rehnquist, of Virginia, to be Chief Justice of the United States.

The Senate resumed consideration of the nomination.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, there is no more important duty for the Senate than the exercise of its advice and consent power for the appointment of Federal judges, and particularly the appointment of Supreme Court Justices. It is no exaggeration to say that the judicial candidates to whom we give our consent will make decisions that directly affect the lives of millions of Americans. A judge confirmed in the last two decades of the 20th century is likely to serve well into the 21st century and shape the destiny of our children and our children's children.

Two critical points must be stressed about the Senate's role in the appointment process. First, the framers of the Constitution intended the Senate to be an equal partner to the President in the process. Second, there is nothing in the language of the Constitution or in the subsequent history of Senate consideration of judicial nominees restricting the scope of the Senate's inquiry into the nominee's qualifications.

THE SENATE'S ROLE IN THE APPOINTMENT PROCESS

The language of the Constitution leaves open the question of the extent of the Senate's role in judicial appointments. Article II, section 2 provides that:

(The President) * * * shall nominate, and by and with the Advice and Consent of the Senate shall appoint * * * Judges of the Supreme Court, and all other Officers of the United States, whose appointment are not otherwise provided for, and which shall be established by law.

However, the process by which the authors of the Constitution arrived at this construction indicates that they meant the Senate to have at least an equal role to that of the President. Walter Dellinger, professor of law at Duke University, summarized the events leading to adoption of the final language as follows:

The original Virginia Plan, introduced at the Convention on May 29, 1787, provided that all judges would be appointed by the national legislature. By June 19, the Convention had decided that the whole legislature was too numerous for the appointment of judges, and lodged that power in the Senate acting alone. Attempts to confer the power on the President to the exclusion of the Senate were solidly defeated. George Mason stated that he "considered the appointment by the Executive as a dangerous prerogative. It might even give him an influence over the Judiciary Department itself." Only near the end of the Convention was it agreed to give the President any role in the selection of judges; even then the President's power to nominate was carefully balanced by requiring the concurrence of the Senate. That final language was not seen to dislodge the Senate from a critical role in the process. Gouverneur Morris paraphrased the final provision as one leaving to the Senate the power "to appoint judges nominated to them by the President."

Morris' words make clear that the proponents of appointment by Congress or the Senate alone did not feel they had lost. As Prof. Charles Black of Yale writes (79 Yale Law Journal, p. 661), they:

Were satisfied that a compromise had been reached, and did not think the legislative art in the process had been reduced to the minimum. The whole process suggests the very reverse of the idea that the Senate is to have a confined role.

In Federalist Paper No. 76, Alexander Hamilton, the main proponent of giving the President the power of appointment, argued against giving the President absolute power because it would:

Enable him much more effectually to establish a dangerous empire over that body (the Senate) than a mere power of nomination subject to their control.

He confirms that dividing the appointment responsibility between the President and the Senate was deliberate and would have a positive effect on the quality of appointments:

(E)very advantage to be expected from such an arrangement would, in substance, be derived from the power of nomination, which is proposed to be conferred on him; while several disadvantages which might attend the absolute power of appointment in the hands of that officer would be avoided.

Jefferson would have preferred to give the people the power to elect judges, and viewed "judicial independence from popular control" as incongruous with democracy. Although his viewpoint did not prevail in the end, he wrote, after the current construction was adopted, that the Senate's advice and consent power was intended "to prevent bias and favoritism in the President * * * and perhaps to keep very obnoxious people out of office of the first grade." (The Writings of Thomas Jefferson, vol. 8, p. 210.)

This brief look at what might be called the "legislative history" of the advice and consent clause makes clear that the Senate's role in judicial appointments is supposed to be an active one. The Senate is not a rubber stamp. The Senate ought not simply defer to the wishes of the President, even if the President is a popular one.

The popularity of a President does not diminish our duty under the constitution. It does not diminish the Senate's duty as a body, and it does not diminish the duty of individual Senators.

The delicate system of checks and balances upon which our democracy depends will only work if each branch of the Government is willing to assert its role by fulfilling its constitutional duties.

THE SCOPE OF THE SENATE'S INQUIRY

What factors can the Senate appropriately consider while it is carrying out its advice and consent duties?

The language of the Constitution itself provides no guidance in this area. We can get some guidance by examining the intent of the framers of the Constitution and by looking at Senate precedent. Ultimately, however, we have to determine what qualities we think a good judge should have, and what scope of inquiry is necessary to determine if the prospective judge has these qualities.

Professor Lively of the University of Toledo argued in a recent law review article that:

> Any reservations concerning the propriety of the Senate's focus upon a candidate's policy values should abate upon realization that many of the framers of the Constitution conducted precisely such as inquiry.

He we referring to the Senate's rejection, in 1795, of President Washington's nomination of John Rutledge to be Chief Justice. The rejection was based purely on Rutledge's opposition to the Jay Treaty, a treaty previously approved by the Senate. And, of course, a number of the Senators who voted to reject Rutledge had participated in writing the Constitution. (Southern California Law Review, v. 59, p. 551.)

An examination of the subsequent history of Senate advice and consent shows that the judicial nominee's policy values have consistently been considered. This has been particularly true of Supreme Court nominations. The Senate has rejected 25 out of 138 Supreme Court nominations. Out of these 25 rejections, 22 had policy reasons behind them.

To the extent that precedent is important them, there are sufficient examples in the Senate's history to justify looking beyond a nominee's general competence and integrity. But how far beyond should we go? What is it about the role of the judge—and particularly the Supreme Court Justice, and most particularly, the Chief Justice of the United States—that makes consideration of his or her policy values necessary?

A young Arizona lawyer explored these questions in an article he wrote for the Harvard Law Record in 1959. He lamented, with regard to the then recent confirmation of Charles Evans Whittaker to the Supreme Court, the "startling dearth of inquiry or even concern over the views of the new Justice on constitutional interpretation." Pointing out that individual Justices of the Supreme Court "are not accountable in any formal sense to even the strongest current of public opinion," the author argued that the Senate ought to restore "its practice of thoroughly informing itself on the judicial philosophy of a Supreme Court nominee before voting to confirm him."

By way of example, the author described in some detail the battle over the nomination of John J. Parker to the Supreme Court nearly 30 years before. He quoted approvingly from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD several statements made by Senator William Borah of Idaho, leader of the forces opposing Parker's confirmation. "(The Supreme Court) passes upon what we do," Senator Borah said at one point. "Therefore, it is exceedingly important that we pass upon them before they decide upon these matters. I say this in great sincerity. We declare a national policy. They reject it. I feel I am well justified in inquiring of men on their way to the Supreme Court something of their views on these questions."

The author concluded by noting that Supreme Court justices have great latitude in interpreting vague Constitutional clauses like "due process of law" and "equal protection of the laws." Given this state of affairs, he asks rhetorically, "what could have been more important to the Senate than Mr. Justice Whittaker's views on equal protection and due process?"

The young attorney who wrote this article was none other than William H. Rehnquist. While it was a well-reasoned argument for a broader Senate role in the appointment process, I think it actually went too far, and I think Justice Rehnquist, 30 years after writing it, would agree with me.

The young Mr. Rehnquist listed a series of cases then recently decided or before the Supreme Court—having to do with segregation and the rights of witnesses who invoke the fifth amendment—and regretted that the Senate hadn't shown any interest in Justice Whittaker's views on these cases. The implication was that it was acceptable and indeed desirable to ask a nominee's views of a particular case or opinion.

I do not agree. Justice O'Connor accurately, I think, pointed out the problem with this approach during her confirmation hearing. She said:

> I do not believe that as a nominee I can tell you how I might vote on a particular issue which may come before the Court, or endorse or criticize specific Supreme Court decisions presenting issues which may well come before the Court again. To do so would mean that I have prejudged the matter, or have morally committed myself to a certain position.

Indeed, I would say that if a nominee did answer questions asking about their views on specific issues likely to be central in decisions before the Court, I would be inclined to vote against them on that basis alone. A response would indicate to me that he or she did not understand that decisions should be guided by specific facts and arguments before the Court. A response would also indicate that the nominee is so driven by ideology or ambition that he or she was willing to prejudge matters to be presented to them.

However, there are two instances where I believe a nominee's policy values are relevant to his or her qualifications. The first instance is when the nominee's policy values are inconsistent with a fundamental principle on principles of American law. The second instance is when the nominee is so controlled by ideology that the ideology distorts their judgment and brings into question their fairness and openmindedness.

I am sorry to say that the nominee being considered by the Senate today, Justice William H. Rehnquist, is disqualified by both these standards.

I watched most of Justice Rehnquist's confirmation hearings on television, and reread portions of the transcript afterwards. I have read the speeches and articles he has written over the years. I have read some of his judicial decisions. And I also submitted two sets of questions directly to Justice Rehnquist, one before and one after the Judiciary Committee hearings, and received responses to these questions from him. My conclusions about this nominee are based on a careful study of the nominee's answers, the nominee's statements, and the nominee's actions.

JUSTICE REHNQUIST'S VIEWS ON INDIVIDUAL RIGHTS

In looking at Justice Rehnquist's "policy values," I am deeply troubled by his view that constitutional rights are based on support by the majority.

The Constitution, interpreted and applied by the Supreme Court, is the individual's best guarantee against the untrammelled exercise of Government power, and the minority's best protection against unjust treatment by the majority. If the rights of the minority are in principle less important, less worthy of protection than the "will of the majority" as expressed through duly enacted laws, then the Bill of Rights becomes essentially meaningless.

I was first struck by Justice Rehnquist's tendency to put the rights of the individual in the hands of the majority when I read the line in the famous "segregation memo" he wrote for Justice Robert Jackson which reads:

To the argument * * * that a majority may not deprive a minority of its constitutional right, the answer must be made that while this is sound in theory, in the long run it is the majority who will determine what the constitutional rights of the minority are.

Mr. President, I will show later why it is clear that the views in this memo were not Justice Jackson's views, as the nominee claims, but his own.

Since Justice Rehnquist was a young law clerk when he wrote these words, I would not necessarily have assumed that he still held this view. But this is a thread that runs through Justice Rehnquist's thought.

In a speech given on May 1, 1969 as part of a celebration of "Law Day," then Assistant Attorney General Rehnquist spoke about protesters whom he called over and over again the new barbarians, and expounded at some length on civil disobedience and the legitimacy of resistance to law in a democratic society. In the course of this discussion, Mr. Rehnquist made an implied threat against the protesters:

* * * Just as the minority has it within its power to frustrate the governance of the majority, so a large majority by process of constitutional amendment has it within its power to deny the right of free speech and free discussion to the minority. ("Law Day" speech, reprinted in Cong. Rec., November 18, 1971, 42133.)

In other words: "if we the majority decide we don't like your protest, we can force you to shut up." This type of argument is directly contrary to the spirit of our Constitution.

Remember that this was not a young clerk fresh out of law school speaking—this was an Assistant Attorney General of the United States, the head of the Office of Legal Counsel, who less than 3 years later was sitting on the Supreme Court.

The American Civil Liberties Union concluded in a report on Justice Rehnquist's record on the Court:

In his Supreme Court opinions and his extra-judicial writings, Justice Rehnquist rejects the notion that the Supreme Court has a special responsibility to protect civil liberties, to protect the individual against the excesses of the majority. Rather, he maintains that the Court's obligation is to protect the primary political structures of the government, which include the independence of the States and majority rule. (ACLU report, reprinted in Cong. Rec., September 11, 1986, S 12399.)

David Shapiro concluded in a Harvard Law Review article summing up Justice Rehnquist's first 4 years on the Court that his votes on cases were guided by three basic propositions, one of which was:

Conflicts between an individual and the government should, whenever possible, be resolved against the individual. (Harvard Law Review, vol. 90:293, p. 294.)

Justice Rehnquist himself provided an explanation for his strong tendency to favor "will of the majority" as expressed in duly enacted laws over the rights of the individual as protected by our Constitution. In a dissenting opinion he wrote for a 1972 death penalty case:

An error in mistakenly sustaining the constitutionality of a particular enactment, while wrongfully depriving the individual of a right secured to him by the Constitution, nonetheless does so by simply letting stand a duly enacted law of a democratically chosen legislative body. The error resulting from a mistaken upholding of an individual's constitutional claim against the validity of a legislative enactment is a good deal more serious. For the result in such a case is not to leave standing a law duly enacted by a representative assembly, but to impose upon the Nation the judicial fiat of a majority of a court of judges whose connection with the popular will is remote at best. (Furman v. Georgia, 408 U.S. 238, 468, 1972.)

I find Justice Rehnquist's approach to individual rights in our Constitution distressing. I see practically no recognition of the importance of the Court's role in protecting individual rights, and far too much recognition of the right or the power of the majority to impose its will on the minority or the individual.

In fact, it is more than distressing—it is flat out wrong to say, as Justice Rehnquist said and quite clearly believes, that the majority will determine what the constitutional rights of the minority are.

Justice Rehnquist has it exactly backward.

In this country, individual constitutional rights are beyond the reach of the majority. The Constitution's protections of individual rights are historic and fundamental, and the Supreme Court is their guardian. Justice Rehnquist does not accept that guardianship—and he is, thereby, an unacceptable chief trustee of individual rights.

JUDGMENT DISTORTED BY IDEOLOGY

There is another situation in which a nominee's "policy values" are grounds for rejecting that nominee. That situation arises when a nominee's personal views control their public judgments.

I believe it is inherent in the fact that judges are human that their judicial decisions will reflect their personal philosophies. But there is, I would submit, a difference between decisions which are controlled by ideology and those which are merely influenced by it.

Some individuals display an ideological fervor which distorts judicial temperament. That kind of fervor can result in actions and judgments which either violate or ignore constitutional principles. It can result in a situation in which judges are so controlled by ideology that they are unable or unwilling to look at all the facts, listen fairly to all arguments, evaluate critically all the legal precedents, and finally, decide cases judicially.

The Senate should not give its consent to nominees who come before us more as captives of ideology than creatures of reason.

LAIRD VERSUS TATUM

A good illustration of how Justice Rehnquist seems to let ideology overcome judgment is the case of Laird versus Tatum.

Justice Rehnquist's refusal to disqualify himself in the case of Laird versus Tatum was a breach of judicial ethics. His subsequent explanations of why he participated in the judgment ring hollow, and obscure more than they illuminate.

Briefly, here are the facts of the case: The Army was conducting a surveillance program aimed at Vietnam war protesters. A group of protesters brought suit in the District of Columbia to enjoin the Government from continuing the surveillance program. The plaintiffs claimed that they had standing to bring this action on the grounds of interference with their constitutional right to free speech. The Court of Appeals in the D.C. Circuit held that their lawsuit was maintainable. However, by a vote of 5 to 4, with Justice Rehnquist casting the deciding vote, the Supreme Court reversed this decision, ruling that the plaintiffs lacked standing and therefore the suit should be dismissed without going into the merits of the case.

The plaintiffs filed a motion to disqualify Justice Rehnquist. They argued that he was disqualified from hearing the case on the basis that he had expressed opinions on issues in the case and that he had presented the Justice Department's position before a Senate subcommittee hearing. In a memorandum, Justice Rehnquist responded to this motion with an explanation of the reasons for his decision not to disqualify himself.

Less than a year after Laird versus Tatum was decided, an article in the Columbia Law Review—January 1973—argued forcefully that Justice Rehnquist had erred in his decision not to disqualify himself. More recently, we have had several detailed analyses of the recusal issue by some of the foremost authorities on legal ethics in the country. I would particularly commend to my colleagues the analysis requested by Senator MATHIAS that was done by Prof. Geoffrey C. Hazard of Yale Law School. Professor Hazard was instrumental in drafting the American Bar Association's Code of Judicial Conduct. He is perhaps the Nation's preeminent expert on judicial ethics. And he has concluded, in his letter to Senator MATHIAS, that Justice Rehnquist not only should have disqualified himself from Laird versus Tatum under the statute then in force, but that he misrepresented the facts to the parties involved and to his colleagues on the Supreme Court. He also suggests that Justice Rehnquist was less than candid to the Senate in answering questions concerning Laird versus Tatum.

I believe Justice Rehnquist prejudged the facts at issue, and should not have participated. Rather than discussing the error of his initial decision not to recuse himself—since this has already been done by the experts—I would like to focus on Justice Rehnquist's subsequent explanations of his decision. For I think that Justice Rehnquist's responses and justifications are revealing—and, in my opinion, extremely troubling.

The entire controversy over Laird versus Tatum—not only Justice Rehnquist's initial refusal to disqualify himself but his subsequent commentary on that decision—gives disturbing evidence that the nominee's ideology is so deeply imbedded that it tends to overcome good judgment and objectivity.

Let me give three examples of what I am talking about.

First, Justice Rehnquist failed to discuss a significant fact in his memorandum responding to the motion to recuse him. Referring to his appearance before a Senate subcommittee in 1971 where he testified on behalf of the Justice Department regarding the Army's military surveillance program, he stated that:

> There is one reference to the case of Tatum v. Laird in my prepared statement to the Subcommittee, and one reference to it in my subsequent appearance during a colloquy with Senator Ervin.

He went on to quote the first reference, which was as follows:

> However, in connection with the case of Tatum v. Laird, now pending in the U.S. Court of Appeals for the D.C. Circuit, one print-out from the Army computer has been retained for the inspection of the court. It will thereafter be destroyed.

He then dismissed the second comment by simply stating that it was "a discussion of the applicable law with Senator Ervin, the chairman of the subcommittee, during my second appearance." He did not quote the second comment, and indeed there is no further reference to it in the rest of the memorandum.

His explanation of why the first comment did not constitute grounds for disqualification was that he was merely the keeper of the computer printout, that he had never "seen or been apprised of" its contents, and that the first time he learned of the existence of the case of Laird versus Tatum was while he was preparing to testify before the Ervin subcommittee. (93 SCR, 409 U.S. 827, p. 10.)

As for the second comment, the reader is left to wonder what it was. We have to look at the plaintiffs' motion or the subcommittee hearing record to find out.

In response to a question by Senator Ervin about the Government's right to put under surveillance people who are exercising their first amendment rights, Assistant Attorney General Rehnquist responded in part:

> My only point of disagreement with you is to say whether as in the case of Tatum v. Laird that has been pending in the Court of Appeals . . . that an action will lie by private citizens to enjoin the gathering of information by the executive branch where there has been no threat of compulsory process and no pending action against any of those individuals on the part of the Government. (Ervin hearings, vol. 1, pp. 864–865.)

Justice Rehnquist was expressing the view here that Laird versus Tatum was not justiciable. For those who find the meaning of his statement a bit unclear, I would point to the operative words "My only point of disagreement with you." He was disagreeing with Senator Ervin's contention that there was a first amendment issue here, that these protesters' rights were being violated when the Army put them under surveillance. And this was precisely the controversy in Laird versus Tatum when it came before the Supreme Court. The conclusion is inescapable: Assistant Attorney General Rehnquist expressed the view before a Senate subcommittee that the case was nonjusticiable; Supreme Court Justice Rehnquist failed to disqualify himself from deciding whether the case was justiciable.

In light of the content of this second statement and its specific reference to Laird versus Tatum, I find Justice Rehnquist's failure to quote or explain it highly disturbing. Maybe he could have found a way to explain that he was not really saying what he appeared to be saying in this statement, that it really was simply a "discussion of applicable law." The fact that he avoided quoting or explaining it leads me to conclude that he was aware that it would severely weaken his case for not disqualifying himself.

I also have serious questions about the nominee's description of the extent of his involvement in formulating the Nixon administration's policy on domestic surveillance by the Army. Evidence which has come to light since 1972 indicates that he was far more involved in developing this policy than he revealed when Laird versus Tatum was decided. In particular, a draft memorandum he prepared for submission to the White House discussed the legal implications of allowing the Army to participate in surveillance activities. This memo was first made public in a little noticed appendix to the Ervin subcommittee's hearings. It resurfaced as one of the documents that the Reagan administration initially refused to provide to the Judiciary Committee but later supplied.

In this memo, Assistant Attorney General Rehnquist wrote that the U.S. Army Intelligence Command "may assist" in the collecting of raw intelligence on civilian political activity, but that "in order to preserve the salutary tradition of avoiding military intelligence activities in predominantly civilian matters," the Army "should not ordinarily be used to collect" such data.

I assume that as the head of the Office of Legal Counsel, Assistant Attorney General Rehnquist did not write this memo off the top of his head. He must have done legal research himself, or at the very least, discussed the issue with his subordinates.

If my assumption is a fair one—which I think it is—then Justice Rehnquist's subsequent statements about his involvement in the surveillance policy have been less than candid.

The plaintiffs who filed the motion to recuse Justice Rehnquist from the case did not know about this memo. They based their objection to Rehnquist's participation in the case on his public statements made during the Ervin hearings. But as Professor Hazard points out in his analysis of the case:

> • • • it was Justice Rehnquist's responsibility to address and resolve all issues concerning his disqualification. It was not the parties' responsibility to raise such matters, although they had a right to do so if they had access to the necessary facts.

But they did not have access to these facts, and Justice Rehnquist did not volunteer them. Professor Hazard continues:

> Justice Rehnquist addressed only his publicly known involvements and omitted any reference to an involvement as counsel in the transaction, that was at least as significant but which was not publicly known. It was his duty to resolve both the publicly known possible bases of disqualification and those arising from an involvement that was confidential. Indeed, it is even more vital to fairness in adjudication that a judge resolve grounds of recusal which arise from confidential facts, for the parties ordinarily are helpless to raise such grounds.

Justice Rehnquist was not forthcoming in 1972—and in 1986, he claimed memory failure. He told Senator MATHIAS in response to a written question subsequent to the hearing:

> I have no recollection of any participation in the formulation of policy on use of the military to conduct surveillance or collect intelligence concerning domestic civilian activities.

Note that the nominee said he did not recall any participation. Considering the great significance and controversy surrounding this policy at the time and the continuing discussion in the years since, it is simply inconceivable to me that the nominee would have "no recollection." I can understand his not recalling a particular memorandum, but I again am sorry to say I have trouble accepting his statement that he draws a complete blank on his participation in formulation of the policy.

The final area of my inquiry into Justice Rehnquist's conduct in the Laird versus Tatum controversy concerned another aspect of his 1972 memorandum which denied the motion for recusal. From the outset, he limited the standards by which he would judge whether his nonrecusal had been the correct decision. He cited the statute then in effect, title 28, section 455 of the United States Code as the applicable standard:

Any justice or judge of the United States shall disqualify himself in any case in which he has a substantial interest, has been of counsel, is or has been a material witness, or is so related to or connected with any party or his attorney as to render it improper, in his opinion, for him to sit on the trial, appeal, or other proceeding therein.

He went on to note that the plaintiffs had also referred in their motion to provisions of the ABA's Code of Judicial Conduct. A revised version of the code had existed in draft form at the time Laird versus Tatum was decided by the Supreme Court, having been approved by a special committee on standards of judicial conduct but not by the full ABA. However, when Justice Rehnquist wrote this memorandum of explanation, the revised code had been adopted by the ABA's House of Delegates, and had therefore become the official standards of judicial conduct for members of the ABA.

The statute was binding on Justice Rehnquist while the ABA's Code was not. But he himself did not dispute that the ABA Code provisions were relevant to his decision. Here is his explanation of those provisions:

Since I do not read these particular provisions as being materially different from the standards enunciated in the congressional statute, there is no occasion for me to give them separate consideration.

His decision not to give the ABA Code separate consideration was based solely on his contention that they were not "materially different" from the statute.

What are these standards that, in Justice Rehnquist's view, did not "materially differ" from the statute quoted above?

The ABA Code reads in part as follows:

(1) A judge should disqualify himself in a proceeding in which his impartiality might reasonably be questioned, including but not limited to instances where:

(a) he has a personal bias or prejudice concerning a party, or personal knowledge of disputed evidentiary facts concerning the proceeding;

(b) he served as a lawyer in the matter in controversy, or a lawyer with whom he previously practiced law served during such association as a lawyer concerning the matter, or the judge or such lawyer has been a material witness concerning it.

The ABA also added a commentary at the end of this section dealing specifically with the standards of disqualification for former government officials. This commentary is intended as an explication of the meaning of the standards: "* * * a judge, formerly employed by a governmental agency * * * should disqualify himself in a proceeding if his impartiality might reasonably be questioned because of such association."

It is evident that the ABA Code imposes a more stringent standard of disqualification than the statute as it existed in 1972, and the drafters of the revised code certainly intended it to do so. According to the Columbia Law Review in 1973:

Their recent revision of the Canons was prompted by dissatisfaction with standards such as those prescribed by section 455 and the old Canons. (Columbia Law Review, v. 73:106, p. 119.

The most obvious way in which the revised ABA Code required a more rigorous standard of disqualification lay in the phrase "a proceeding in which his impartiality might reasonably be questioned," clearly a broader standard than anything in Section 455 of the statute.

Justice Rehnquist was asked about his failure to consider the ABA standards during the 1986 Judiciary Committee hearings. He responded to a question from Senator Leahy as follows:

Justice REHNQUIST. Justice Stewart, who was a good friend of mine, I remember, after I wrote this opinion—you know it may have been months afterwards—he had been on the drafting committee of the ABA standards, and he told me that in some respects he thought my comparison of the ABA standards and the statutory standards was incorrect and that the ABA standards had intended to be more stringent."

Senator LEAHY. Looking at the ABA standards, if that was what you had used as your guide, would you have recused yourself?

Justice REHNQUIST. I just can't put myself back in that position, Senator, not having the ABA standards in front of me. I really just can't answer. (transcript, July 30, 1986, p. 196.)

□ 1310

I was not satisfied with this unresponsive response. It was so clear to me that the ABA standards were "materially different" from the statute, that I submitted to Justice Rehnquist a followup to Senator LEAHY's question:

Having heard Justice Stewart's comments and having now had a chance to reread the ABA standards in effect in 1972, do you still believe that the 1972 ABA standards were not "materially different from the standards enunciated in the congressional statute" in effect at that time?

The nominee's answer provides another example of his tendency to make obfuscating distinctions when it suits his purpose. His response to my question was:

I think that the 1972 ABA standards were materially different from the provisions of 28 U.S.C. 455, as it stood in 1972, on the question of disqualification for financial interest. I believe it was this point to which Justice Stewart's comments to me were addressed. In so far as disqualification for bias is concerned, the language of the canons is phrased differently from the relevant language of section 455, and could require a result different from that required under section 455 in a particular case.

Here the nominee makes a distinction between the disqualification for financial interest and the disqualification for bias, a distinction he failed to make either in his 1972 memorandum or in his responses to Senator LEAHY. The financial interest section of the canons is, he admits "materially different" from the statute; the personal bias section, on the other hand, "is phrased differently from" the statute, "and could require a result different from" the statute "in a particular case." Presumably he is saying that the personal bias section of the ABA Code is not "materially different" from the statute. It's just "phrased differently" and "could require a different result in a particular case." Not, I assume, in the case of Laird versus Tatum.

Justice Rehnquist's supporters might point to this response as an example of his brilliant legal mind. I see it as an example of cleverness, of obfuscation, and disingenuousness. The nominee's ability to avoid the simple and straightforward, to obfuscate and play with words in order to evade their plain meanings—these are not admirable qualities. It may require a highly developed intellect to do these things as smoothly as Justice Rehnquist does them. But this is not the type of intellectual quality we should look for in a Chief Justice.

Madam President, Justice Rehnquist's use of words to distort and obfuscate and his lack of directness were analyzed in detail in an extraordinary and chilling Law Review article in the New York University Law Review, April 1982, which compared his craftiness in wordsmithing to that of Captain Vere in Melville's "Billy Budd," which was a classic American Novel. This article was written by Prof. Richard Weisberg. It is entitled "How Judges Speak: Some Lessons on Adjudication in Billy Budd, Sailor With an Application to Justice Rehnquist."

Billy Budd who was an innocent sailor admired by all for his simple directness. He was brought to trial and executed as a result of the masterful rhetorical wiles of Captain Vere.

The New York University Law Review article compares the openness of Billy Budd with the ingratiating indirectness and covertness of Captain Vere. Vere's clever use of language overcomes the fact that the trial was illegal and improper.

The article analyzes in detail his opinion in the case of Paul versus Davis.

The author shows, at great length, how Captain Vere and Justice Rehnquist by dint of being "verbally and hierarchically superior adjudicators can give the force of seeming legality to drastic decisions the law does not support" and how "an adjudicator can win over an audience by considerately providing it with the story it needs to hear, thereby assuaging its doubts and dampening its spirit for further rational inquiry."

DISTORTED MEMORY, LACK OF CREDIBILITY

During the Judiciary Committee hearings, I was interested to see how Justice Rehnquist responded to questions about his past actions. Several controversial issues which had come up during his initial confirmation in 1971, but had never been satisfactorily resolved, came up again. In each case there was some new information regarding these issues that had been unavailable in 1971. Regarding the charges of voter harassment in Arizona, there were a number of new witnesses coming forward to claim that they had seen Mr. Rehnquist personally challenging voters in the late 1950's and early 1960's. On the issue of memos written while Mr. Rehnquist was a law clerk for Justice Robert Jackson, there had been only one memo publicly available at the time of the 1971 hearings; now there were a number of others.

These controversies raised questions about the nominee's sensitivity to individual rights throughout his career. The hearing gave him an opportunity to clear up doubts about his sensitivity, by clearing up the unresolved questions about these controversies.

After watching the hearings, reviewing the transcript, and closely analyzing Justice Rehnquist's answers to my additional written questions, I do not believe that either of these controversies have been satisfactorily resolved.

I was troubled by Justice Rehnquist's lack of candor in the hearings. His answers to what were, in my view, legitimate and relevant questions, have convinced me that he tends to distort memory and bend facts. His explanations were simply not credible—they did not clear up anything.

THE JACKSON MEMO

Justice Rehnquist served as a law clerk for the late Associate Justice Robert H. Jackson in 1952 and 1953. In that capacity, he did research for the Justice's opinions and wrote what are called cert memos—summaries of cases for which certiorari or Supreme Court review was being sought.

After Justice Rehnquist's 1971 confirmation hearings were over, Newsweek magazine published the text of one of the memos he had written while a law clerk. This memo, entitled "A Random Thought on the Segregation Cases," caused quite a stir, and became one of the focal points of the floor debate on the Rehnquist nomination. Opponents of Mr. Rehnquist's nomination took the memo at face value and assumed it to be a statement of Mr. Rehnquist's own views—not an unreasonable conclusion to draw considering that it was written in the first person, bore his initials at the bottom, and had a very informal and personal sounding title. They presented it in 1971 as evidence of his unsuitability to serve on the Supreme Court because in it he apparently argued that the Court should uphold segregation laws. Specifically, the memo contained the statement that Plessy versus Ferguson—the 1896 case supporting the constitutionality of "separate but equal" education laws—"was right and should be reaffirmed."

In an effort to set the record straight and head off growing opposition to his nomination, Mr. Rehnquist wrote a letter to Senator Eastland, Chairman of the Judiciary Committee, in which he explained that, to the best of his recollection:

> The memorandum was prepared by me at Justice Jackson's request; it was intended as a rough draft of a statement of his views at the conference of the Justices rather than as a statement of my views.

The nominee, in a further effort to dispel the doubts some Senators might have about his views on segregated education, added at the end of his letter:

> In view of some of the recent Senate floor debate, I wish to state unequivocally that I fully support the legal reasoning and the rightness from the standpoint of fundamental fairness of the Brown decision.

This letter to Senator Eastland arrived in the middle of the Senate floor debate, on December 8, 1971. Mr. Rehnquist was confirmed by the Senate on December 10, 1971, by a vote of 68-26. But no one had an opportunity to ask Mr. Rehnquist questions about the memo while he was under oath, nor was anyone able to challenge this explanation of its contents in 1971.

Now, it has been said by Justice Rehnquist's supporters that we shouldn't harp on things written over 30 years ago, and that there is no reason to doubt the nominee's 1971 statement that he fully supported "the legal reasoning and rightness * * * of the Brown decision." I submit that the question is not what Justice Rehnquist believed 30 years ago and whether he still holds those beliefs today—it is how he represented to the Senate—in 1971 and in 1986—what he believed, what Justice Jackson believed, and for what this memo was intended.

We now have a better opportunity to examine the evidence relating to this memo than the Senate had in 1971. This evidence was brought together in a very comprehensive way by Richard Kluger in a section of his book "Simple Justice," an account of the school desegregation cases of the 1950's. After reading Mr. Kluger's account, it is very difficult to conclude anything other than that the memo does not contain Justice Jackson's views, and must therefore have been either an expression of law clerk Rehnquist's views or an attempt on the part of law clerk Rehnquist to provide Jackson with the pro-Plessy point of view. In either case, the evidence casts serious doubt on Justice Rehnquist's account of the nature of his memorandum.

Mr. LEVIN. Madam President, for now, let me add one or two of my own observations based on the evidence I have seen and some of the questions I asked Justice Rehnquist in my two letters to him.

In my first letter to Justice Rehnquist, I asked him on what basis he stated that the views expressed in the memo were those of Justice Jackson. I wondered whether he could recall anything specific Justice Jackson had told him to indicate his views on the "separate but equal" doctrine. I wondered this because I have always been a great admirer of Justice Jackson, I am familiar with his writings, and I find it difficult to believe that he would ever have expressed the view that "Plessy versus Ferguson was right and should be reaffirmed."

Justice Rehnquist reiterated what he had said in his 1971 letter to Senator Eastland: That he recalled considerable oral discussion with Justice Jackson before the Court conference on the school segregation cases; that although he did not recall the specific content of these discussions he did recall "Justice Jackson's concern that the conference have the benefit of all of the arguments in support of the constitutionality of the "separate but equal" doctrine, as well as those against its constitutionality"; and that he still adhered to the statement in his 1971 letter that the memo was intended to reflect views Justice Jackson had expressed in those discussions.

Frankly, I was not satisfied by this response. It still seemed to me, looking at the language of this memo, that it was a young law clerk talking in this memo, not a distinguished Supreme Court Justice. I centered in on one sentence in particular:

> I realize that it is an unpopular and unhumanitarian position, for which I have been excoriated by "liberal" colleagues, but I think Plessy versus Ferguson was right and should be reaffirmed.

What "liberal colleagues" had Justice Jackson been excoriated by and when? Why would he have been excoriated by his colleagues for views he was about to express at an upcoming Court conference?

In a followup letter, I asked Justice Rehnquist this precise question:

Did Justice Jackson tell you during these oral discussions that he had been excoriated by liberal colleagues for his views on Plessy? If he didn't tell you, then on what basis did you include this line in the momo?

Justice Rehnquist's answer was: "As I indicated in my answer to your quesiton of July 23, 1986, I have no recollection today of the specific content of my oral discussions with Justice Jackson relating to the points that he tentatively intended to make at the Court's Conference on the Brown case. I do not recall Justice Jackson telling me in those discussions that he had been excoriated by liberal colleagues for his views on the Brown case. It is my strong sense, however, that Justice Jackson acknowledged during our discussions that he fully expected to be criticized sharply by some of his colleagues if he took the position that Plessy versus Ferguson should be reaffirmed."

This last sentence is, to my knowledge, the first time that Justice Rehnquist has publicly attempted to provide an explanation for the phrase "excoriated by my 'liberal' colleagues." And if we look at it in light of what the memo actually says, we realize that it is no explanation at all. Justice Rehnquist has a "strong sense" that Justice Jackson "fully expected to be criticized sharply" by his fellow Justices "if he took the position that Plessy * * * should be reaffirmed." But the memo clearly says "I have been excoriated." It doesn't say "I will be excoriated" or even "I might be excoriated if I take this position." It says "I have been excoriated," and the question remains, "by whom?"

I should like to quote briefly from Richard Kluger's discussion of this sentence.

Is it possible that so confident and civilized a man as Robert Jackson would have told his brother Justices anything remotely approaching what Rehnquist writes at the end of his memo purportedly reflecting Jackson's views * * * The "I" in that passage, according to Rehnquist, was supposed to be Jackson, not his clerk, but when and where might Jackson have been excoriated by his "liberal" colleagues? And what colleagues might those be? Surely not his fellow Justices, who would hardly have spoken ill of him for expressing genuine convictions. A far more plausible explanation might be that the "I" of the memo is Rehnquist himself, referring to the obloquy to which he may have been subjected by his fellow clerks, who discussed the segregation question over lunch quite regularly, who were almost unanimous in their belief that Plessy ought to be reversed, and who were, for the most part, "liberal" * * * That Rehnquist was ideologically a pole apart from his fellow clerks that year is suggested by the comment of Harvard law professor Donald Trautman, who clerked for Justice Frankfurther that term. "As I knew him, he was a reactionary," Trautman told the Harvard Law Record of October 24, 1971 * * *." ("Simple Justice", p. 608.)

It should also be pointed out that the statements of the only two living people who might have some firsthand knowledge of the memo itself or Justice Jackson's expectations from his law clerks do not corroborate Justice Rehnquist's account of the memo's content and purpose.

Donald Cronson, Justice Jackson's other law clerk at the time the memo was written, cabled a message to Justice Rehnquist during the Senate debate in 1971. In this message, he recalled that after he had written one memo contending that Plessy had been wrongly decided but that the Court should leave it to Congress to change the practice of segregation, Justice Jackson requested a second memo "supporting the proposition that Plessy was correctly decided." He further told Justice Rehnquist that he remembered the second memo as a collaborative effort, in fact going so far as to say that this second memo was probably "more mine than yours."

Mr. Cronson's account raises more questions than it answers, and it certainly does not correspond to what Justice Rehnquist recalls. Justice Rehnquist has never mentioned the first memo, nor has he indicated that the memo he supposedly authored (and which bore his initials) was a collaboration between himself and Mr. Cronson. Finally, there is certainly nothing in Mr. Cronson's account to indicate that Justice Jackson wanted a second memo to "reflect his views," only that he wanted a second memo reaching the opposite conclusion about Plessy.

Another person who might have confirmed Justice Rehnquist's account is Mrs. Elsie Douglas, Justice Jackson's secretary and confidante for his last 9 years on the Court. But Mrs. Douglas, in interviews she gave in 1971 and in a recent letter to Senator KENNEDY, expressly denies that the views expressed in the memo were those of Justice Jackson rather than his clerk's. In her August 8, 1986 letter to Senator KENNEDY, she says: "Justice Jackson did not ask law clerks to express his views. He expressed his own and they expressed theirs."

So we are left with no credible support for Justice Rehnquist's explanation of the memo. And as I have already described, the internal evidence, the wording of the memo itself, strongly indicates that these could not have been Justice Jackson's views.

One other piece of evidence has been brought into the public realm since the 1971 debate. This is the collection of memos written by law clerk Rehnquist for Justice Jackson which are among Justice Jackson's papers at the Library of Congress. A reading of these memos should enable us to test the nominee's contention in his 1971 letter to Senator Eastland that "while (Justice Jackson) did expect his clerks to make recommendations based on their memoranda as to whether certiorari should be granted or denied, he very definitely did not either expect or welcome the incorporation by a clerk of his own philosophical view of how a case should be decided." In other words, the nominee was suggesting that the segregation memo could not have contained his own views because it was not normal practice to put his own views into memos since Jackson frowned on that sort of thing.

If one looks at the "cert" memos Rehnquist wrote for Justice Jackson, however, one finds numerous instances of personal opinion and informal observation being injected into a review of the facts of the case. Let me give just a few examples.

In a memo discussing the Rosenberg case, he wrote the following:

In my opinion, if they are going to have a death sentence for any crime, the acts of these ptrs (petitioners) in giving A-bomb secrets to Russia years before it would otherwise have had them are fitting candidates for that punishment. It is too bad that drawing and quartering has been abolished.

In a memo commenting on three lawsuits by baseball players against the major leagues for alleged violations of the Sherman Act, he wrote:

Before making any recommendation, I feel it is only fair to lay bare my strong personal animus in these cases * * * I feel instinctively that baseball, like other sports, is sui generis, and not suitably regulated either by a bunch of lawyers in the Justice Department or by a bunch of shyster lawyers stirring up triple damage suits.

And in a case involving Jehovah's Witnessess who were convicted for insisting on making speeches in city parks in violation of local ordinances, he wrote:

I personally don't see why a city can't set aside a park for ball games, picinics or other group activities without having some outlandish group like Jehovah's Witnesses commander the space and force their message on everyone.

Clearly, whether or not Justice Jackson welcomed the personal views of his law clerks in the memos they submitted to him, law clerk Rehnquist often included his views in the memos he submitted to Justice Jackson.

Regardless of what his views on segregated education were at the time of his clerkship, Justice Rehnquist's account of the memo on the segregation cases is contradicted by external accounts and by the wording of the memo iself. His explanations of these contradictions in 1971 and again within the past month do not stand up to careful scrutiny.

It will be argued that it was a long time ago, and we shouldn't necessarily expect Justice Rehnquist to remember the details of one memo out of the dozens he must have written. However, let me point out what Justice Rehnquist did not say. He did not say:

To the best of my recollection, this was intended to the Justice Jackson's views; however, I might be wrong—it was a long time ago, my memory is fuzzy—it may have actually been my own views—even though those are no longer my views. It may have even been just an effort to provide Justice Jackson with the arguments in favor of sustaining Plessy.

But this is not what Justice Rehnquist has said. He has said repeatedly—and has stood by his statement under repeated questioning—that these were intended to be Jackson's views, and he has gone to great lengths to prove this, even attempting an explanation for the "excoriated by liberal colleagues" line in his response to my question.

I am saddened to say I do not believe Justice Rehnquist's account of the Jackson memo.

VOTER CHALLENGING IN PHOENIX

Another controversial issue that did not arise until after the 1971 Judiciary Committee hearings had ended was the charge that Mr. Rehnquist participated in challenging of voters in Phoenix area elections during the late 1950's and early 1960's. Affidavits from six individuals were submitted to the committee alleging that Mr. Rehnquist had challenged minority voters as part of a "ballot security" program organized by the Arizona Republican Party and aimed at precincts with a large percentage of Black and Hispanic voters. The committee declined to reopen the hearings. However, Senators Bayh, Hart, and KENNEDY submitted additional written questions to the nominee, and one of the things they asked him to respond to were these charges of voter challenges.

In his response to the Senators, and also in an earlier affidavit submitted to the chairman of the committee, Mr. Rehnquist flatly denied all the specific allegations of those who had come forward to charge him with voter challenging activities. These charges all involved alleged incidents in the elections of 1958, 1960, 1962, 1964, 1966, and 1968.

The nominee in his letter to the Senators also made more general statements of denial. He quoted from his affidavit to Chairman Eastland, which read in part: "I have not, either in the general election of 1964 or in any other election, at Bethune precinct or in any other precinct, either myself harassed or intimidated voters, or encouraged or approved the harassment of voters by other persons." Then he added the following critical line: "In none of these years (1958-68) did I personally engage in challenging the qualifications of any voters." (CONG. RECORD, November 24, 1971, p. 43086)

In the course of the 1986 Judiciary Committee hearings, five new witnesses came forward to testify, under oath, that the nominee had engaged in voter challenging activities. After the hearings were over, three other individuals submitted affidavits swearing that the nominee had challenged voters.

Six other witnesses testified, under oath, that they had not seen Justice Rehnquist challenging voters in the years in which he was allenged to have done so. However, none of these witnesses was with Mr. Rehnquist during the entire time of any of the elections in question.

Finally, the nominee himself testified, under oath, that he had not committed any of the alleged acts. He repeatedly and specifically denied having done what the five witnesses claimed he had done.

So, we have a situation where it is one person's word against another's. Everyone cannot be telling the truth. Either the five witnesses (nd the nine who submitted affidavits after the hearings in 1971 and 1986 are wrong or the nominee is wrong.

What I focussed on relative to the issue of voter challenges, as I did with the segregation memo, was the way Justice Rehnquist responded to questions on the issue. And I have to say again that I was struck by his lack of candor. His painstakingly constructed, hedging responses to straightforward questions did nothing, in my opinion, to clear the air. He had the opportunity to dispel the doubts of many Senators about his credibility. He did not take this opportunity.

I would like to quote briefly from two exchanges between Justice Rehnquist and members of the Judiciary Committee on July 30, 1986, which I think are revealing:

Senator KENNEDY. I gather from your response to my questions that you deny categorically that you were engaged in any of these activities that are identified by any of these individuals in any of the polling places that were mentioned.

Justice REHNQUIST. When you refer to these activities, Senator, that may cover a lot.

KENNEDY. Just the ones I read about.

REHNQUIST. Would you read them to me again?

(Kennedy goes through each charge again, and Justice Rehnquist denies each one)

KENNEDY. Well, the activity described basically is personally challenging voters. That is the activity alleged, and you categorically deny ever having done that in any precincts in the Maricopa County in the Phoenix area in any election, is that correct?

REHNQUIST. I think that is correct.

KENNEDY. Well, what is "I think" * * * If you are talking about harassing or intimidating voters is not something you are going to forget very much about.

REHNQUIST. I thought your qestion was challenging. Now you say harassing or intimidating. As to harassing or intimidating, I certainly do categorically deny that, anytime, anyplace.

If you are talking about challenging, I have reviewed my testimony, and I think I said I did not challenge during particular years. I think it is conceivable that in 1954 I might have been a poll watcher at a westside precinct.

KENNEDY. Well, did you challenge individuals then?

REHNQUIST. I think I was simply watching the vote being counted.

* * * * *

KENNEDY. Well, you would remember whether you challenged them now, Mr. Justice, would you not? Did you at any time challenge any individual?

REHNQUIST. A challenger, Senator, was someone who was authorized by law to go to the to the polling place and frequently the function was not to challenge, but simply watch the poll, watch the vote being counted.

KENNEDY. Well, have you ever personally challenged any individual in any precinct?

REHNQUIST. I do not think so * * * I am not entirely sure * * * I have responded in each case that you said to say that I did not agree with it, but if you are asking me whether over a period from 1953 to 1969 I ever challenged a voter at any precinct in any election, I am just not sure my memory is that good.

(Transcript, July 30, pp. 110-112)

* * * * *

SENATOR METZENBAUM. Did you ever personally confront voters at Bethune precinct?

Justice REHNQUIST. Confront them in the sense of harassing or intimidating?

METZENBAUM. No, in the sense of questioning them, asking them about their right to vote, asking them about the Constitution, asking them to read something, asking them questions having to do with their voter eligibility?

REHNQUIST. And does this cover Bethune precinct for all years?

METZENBAUM. Yes, yes. Did you ever personally confront. * * *?

REHNQUIST. I do not believe that I did.

METZENBAUM. Would you categorically say you did not?

REHNQUIST. If it covers 1953 to 1969, I do not think I could really categorically say about anything.

METZENBAUM. Do you think at some time, some point, you did personally confront voters at bethune precinct?

REHNQUIST. No, no I do not.

METZENBAUM. Well, then, what do you mean when you qualify your answer?

REHNQUIST. Well, to the best of my recollection. You are talking about something in 1953; it would have been 33 years ago.

METZENBAUM. Mr. Justice, I am not talking about your being able to remember where you were on the 3rd day of June 1952. I am talking about whether you ever confronted people and said to them: 'Can you read this Constitution?' 'What educational background do you have?' Challenge them in their right to vote. And you are saying that you do not remember. And I am saying to you, is it possible that a man as brilliant as you could not remember if you had done that?

REHNQUIST. Senator, challenging was a perfectly legitimate thing.

METZENBAUM. But you told the Senate that you never challenged anybody.

REHNQUIST. I believe I told the Senate, Senator, in 1971, over a given period of years, I did not think I had challenged some, and I stand by that testimony. I think you are broadening it to go way back into the early 1950's.

METZENBAUM. You said in none of these years—that being 1958 to 1968—did I personally engage in challenging the qualifications of any voters. Did you do it before that? Did you challenge voters before that?

REHNQUIST. I do not believe I did, no. Again, I point out that that is thirty years ago. (Transcript, July 30, pp. 133-134)

□ 1350

Well, Madam President, what astonishes me about these exchanges is that they could have been considerably shortened or avoided altogether if Justice Rehniquist had shown a little bit of candor. He was not forthcoming—he adopted a policy of avoiding fuller explanations. He could have said: "Senator, I don't recall any of the alleged incidents taking place. I am certain I never harassed or intimidated anyone. I might have challenged some voters at some precinct in some election—that was part of my job as a pollwatcher—but I never did anything that was illegal." He could have done that.

But, rather than offering a candid statement, he offered only qualifications, split hairs, and fine distinctions—avoiding the basic questions being raised about his sensitivity to the rights of citizens. He could have convinced me that he sincerely believed in the importance of those rights by giving straightforward, candid answers. He did not. I am afraid I do not believe his denial of voter challenging.

INSENSITIVITY TO THE RIGHTS OF CITIZENS

Because I found Justice Rehnquist's explanations of the segregation memo and the charges of voter challenging unbelievable, my doubts about his sensitivity to individual rights grew. And when I examined some of the nominee's past writings and speeches, my doubts were further confirmed.

There has been a discernible pattern to Justice Rehnquist's words and actions. It is a pattern of insensitivity to the rights of U.S. citizens. I am talking about fundamental rights, such as the right to vote, the right to peaceful and nonviolent protest and the exercise of first amendment rights, the right to own property, and the right to an equal educational opportunity. And when it comes to matters as significant as the individual's exercise of these rights, Justice Rehnquist appears to me to display a basic insensitivity.

THE RESTRICTIVE CONVENANT IN THE VERMONT DEED

A new finding at the 1986 hearings was the existence of a restrictive convenant in the deed on some Vermont property Justice Rehnquist purchased in 1974. The convenant reads: "no feet of the herein conveyed property shall be leased or sold to any member of the Hebrew Race."

During the hearing, Senator LEAHY questioned the nominee about this provision of the deed:

Senator LEAHY. Are you aware of that covenant in your deed?

Justice REHNQUIST: Not at the time, Senator. I was advised of it a couple of days ago.

LEAHY. Did you read the deed that you got on your property?

REHNQUIST. I certainly thought I did, but I'm quite sure I didn't note that.

* * * * *

LEAHY. What was your reaction when you heard about it?

REHNQUIST. I was amazed.

LEAHY. As a lawyer, how do you feel about that language?

REHNQUIST. Well, I think it's unfortunate to have it there, but it is meaningless in today's world, I think.

(Transcript, July 30, pp. 186-187)

Several days later, Justice Rehnquist wrote to Chairman THURMOND, explaining that "review" of his file on the purchase of the Vermont property had turned up a letter from his attorney dated July 2, 1974. There is a clear reference to the restrictive convenant in the third sentence of this letter: "The property is also subject to restrictions relative to * * * ownership by members of the Hebrew Race."

Justice Rehnquist said in his letter to Senator THURMOND: "While I do not doubt that I read the letter when I received it, I did not recall the letter or its contents before I testified last week." He also said that he had asked his attorney to take the legal measures necessary to remove the restrictive covenant.

The nominee "thought" he had read the deed, but he is "quite sure" he "didn't note" the restrictive covenant. He "do(es) not doubt" that he read the letter from his attorney, but he "did not recall the letter or its contents" before his recent testimony.

I wouldn't expect anyone, even a brilliant man like Justice Rehnquist, to remember everything they read 12 years ago. But I would expect someone who is sensitive to the rights of citizens, someone who recognizes that covenants restricting property ownership on the basis of religion or race are not only "obnoxious" and "unenforceable," as the nominee has said, but completely contrary to the basic values of our society—I would expect someone sensitive to individual rights to recall seeing such an obnoxious provision in a deed on his own property, if, in fact, he saw it.

So I believe that Justice Rehnquist really might not recall the obnoxious covenant, even though he was informed about it. And that is exactly what troubles me.

Justice Rehnquist's failure to remember being informed about this covenant is part of a pattern. If this were an isolated incident, if the only negative thing anyone could say about Justice Rehnquist was that he had an unenforceable discriminatory provision in a deed on some property he owned, I would not give it a great deal of attention. I would accept the nominee's explanation that he did not remember seeing it and his offer to have it removed. But Justice Rehnquist has displayed such a consistent record of insensitivity to discriminatory practices against our citizens that I cannot ignore the fact that he totally forgot being informed about this obnoxious deed provision.

What troubles me is not that it was there. What troubles me is that he forgets being informed about it being there, although he now acknowledges that he was so informed.

How many of us in this Chamber, if we were informed of a provision in our deed similar to that one, would forget about it? We might not take any action to remove it because it is unenforceable. It may not be worth 200 bucks in a lawyer's fee to remove it because it is unenforceable.

But how many of us in this Chamber, if we were told that there was a provision in our deed as obnoxious as that one, would forget that we were told? We would be troubled. Again, we might not act to remove it, but we would be troubled.

JEHOVAH'S WITNESSES

Yes, it's all part of a pattern of insensitivity, I'm afraid.

As a clerk for Justice Jackson, he wrote a memo in which he referred to the Jehovah's Witnesses as an "outlandish group." The case involved groups of Jehovah's Witnesses in New Hampshire and Rhode Island who were convicted for making speeches in city parks in violation of local ordinances.

There were probably arguments to be made in this case on the side of the locality's right to limit certain activities in city parks, just as there were arguments in favor of the Jehovah's Witnesses' first amendment right to free speech.

I am sure, in other words, there were arguments on both sides of this case, but law clerk Rehnquist chose to characterize the appellants as an "outlandish group" whom the city had every right to prevent from "commandeer(ing) the space" and "forc(ing) their message on everyone."

Mr. Rehnquist failed to recogize that his or anyone else's opinion of whether or not the Jehovah's Witnesses are in the mainstream of American religions is irrelevant to the question of whether their right to express their views in public should be protected. As Senator SIMON said to the nominee during the recent committee hearings:

Now I recognize that neither Buddhists nor Jehovah's Witnesses are particularly popular groups in our country, but I think it is important that we defend the liberties of the most isolated, unpopular groups. (Transcript, p. 239.)

At the hearing, Justice Rehnquist said he agreed with this statement. I would find his agreement more credible if the Jehovah's Witnesses memo were an isolated incident. But again, it is part of a pattern, a common current running through his statements and writings.

Justice Rehnquist himself recognizes this common current. In an interview with the New York Times magazine which appeared on March 3, 1985, he stated:

I can remember arguments we would get in as law clerks in the early '50's. And I don't know that my views have changed much from that time.

THE "NEW BARBARIANS" SPEECH

On May 1, 1969, Mr. Rehnquist delivered a speech in honor of "Law Day" entitled "The Law: Under Attack From the New Barbarians." The "new barbarians" referred to in the title—and described that way repeatedly throughout the speech—were members of various protest movements. Mr. Rehnquist did not identify which specific protest groups he meant. Although it appears from the content of the speech that he was thinking primarily of Vietnam war protesters, he refers generically to "protest movements," so we must assume that he includes the civil rights movement, the women's movement, and any other protest movements active in 1969.

Mr. Rehnquist said at the outset that those he referred to as the "new barbarians," "represent only a small minority of the numbers participating in these movements." But he proceeded to expound on the theory of civil disobedience in general, and made a number of sweeping statements applying to all protesters or practitioners of civil disobedience. His discussion of civil disobedience was at best tendentious and incomplete. At worst, it was a gross distortion, and yet another example of his tendency to subordinate individual rights to the "rule of the majority."

To get some perspective on what we mean when we talk about "civil disobedience," let me quote briefly from the "Dictionary of the History of Ideas."

The concept of civil disobedience * * * has a long and notable history, appearing already as the Antigone theme in Greek drama and in the anti-war motif of Lysistrata, where the women, in addition to deserting their men, seize the Acropolis and the Treasury of Athens. The conflict between civil law and conscience was sharply featured when the Jews passively resisted the introduction of icons into Jerusalem by Pilate, procurator of Judea, and by Jesus in his dramatic purification of the temple, when he overturned the tables of the money changers and the seats of those who legally sold pigeons. The conflict has been highlighted in the history of English-speaking countries many times, though rarely more forcefully than when Milton refused to obey the licensing and censorship laws of seventeenth-century England and when the Abolitionists attacked the institution of slavery in nineteenth-century America. The most widely known cases of the conflict in the twentieth century are Gandhi's campaigns against colonial rule in South Africa and India, passive resistance campaigns against Nazi occupation governments during World War II, and the civil rights campaign against segregation in the United States starting in 1954. Civil disobedience attitudes and techniques also spread into attacks against the Vietnam War, draft laws, poverty, and the authoritarian structure of colleges and universities in the 1960's. (Dictionary of the History of Ideas, vol. 1, pp. 434-435).

Justice Rehnquist's analysis of civil disobedience in his speech completely lacked this balanced historical perspective. After identifying the danger from the "barbarians of the New Left," who "have taken full advantage of their minority right" to advocate their views, he went on to the more general question of "what obligation is owed by the minority to obey a duly enacted law which it has opposed."

This is what he wrote:

From the point of view of the majority, and of the nation as a whole, the answer is a simple one: the minority, no matter how disaffected or disenchanted, owes an unqualified obligation to obey a duly enacted law.

This was only the beginning of Mr. Rehnquist's harsh attack on civil disobedience. A sampling of some of his other comments follow:

The deliberate law breaker does not fully atone for his disobedience when he serves his sentence, for he has by example undermined respect for the legal system itself.

* * * there is a certain amount of arrogance in insisting that one's own personal predilections will not permit him to obey a law which has been duly passed by the legislative authority having jurisdiction over him * * * it is, by implication, a privilege reserved to those with articulate and hyperactive consciences. The claim for conscientious disobedience is at war with the basic premise of majority rule.

* * * disobedience cannot be tolerated, whether it be violent or nonviolent disobedience.

There are many problems with Mr. Rehnquist's analysis. First, it failed to recognize any justification for even nonviolent civil disobedience. This is incredible in light of the success of the civil rights movement's nonviolent civil disobedience tactics only a few years prior to this speech. The only historical example of "disobedience to law" he gives is the Southern States' secession in 1861 which precipitated the Civil War. It is stretching the meaning of the phrase pretty far to describe the act of secession from the Union as "civil disobedience," and it is the height of irony—and inappropriateness—that Mr. Rehnquist put into the same category the civil rights protesters of the 1960's and the slaveholding States of the 1860's.

Second, he lumped together violent and nonviolent protesters as equally reprehensible. "To deplore only violence," he said, "obscures the fact that the law must be enforced against all those who disobey it, regardless of the means by which such disobedience is accomplished." A vastly different view of nonviolent protest can be found in the writings of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., who wrote:

The principle of nonviolent resistance seeks to reconcile the truths of two opposites—acquiescence and violence—while avoiding the extremes and immoralities of both. The nonviolent resister agrees with the person who acquiesces that one should not be physically aggressive toward his opponent; but he balances the equation by agreeing with the person of violence that evil must be resisted. He avoids the nonresistance of the former and violent resistance of the latter. With nonviolent resistance, no individual or group need submit to any wrong, nor need anyone resort to violence in order to right a wrong.

On the other hand, Mr. Rehnquist presented the view that disobedience, whatever its nature "cannot be tolerated." It cannot be tolerated, according to him, because it violates a law duly enacted by the majority of citizens. And remember that, according to him, "the minority * * * owes an unqualified obligation to obey a duly enacted law."

Third, he fails to make any distinction between violating the law as a form of protest against some other law or policy, and violating a law to test that law. In other words, he does not make a distinction between lying down in front of buses to protect the foreign military involvement of the U.S. Government, and refusing to sit in the back of a bus to protest the law that unjustly discriminates against black people by requiring them to sit in the back of the bus. I find his failure to make this distinction extremely troubling. Because it is precisely this second kind of civil disobedience that often results in Supreme Court or Federal appeals court cases.

A black family in Topeka, KS sends their daughter to an all-white, segregated school, insisting on her right to an equal educational opportunity. The case reaches the Supreme Court and results in the landmark Brown decision that "separate but equal" education is not constitutional. The Browns violated a law in order to test that law's constitutionality. That law had been duly enacted by representatives elected by the majority of citizens. Yet by Mr. Rehnquist's standards, the Browns had "an unqualified obligation to obey" the law, no matter how unjust they might have thought it to be.

Justice Abe Fortas saw it differently. In 1968, he wrote, referring to the civil rights movement:

This is civil disobedience in a great tradition. It is peaceful, nonviolent disobedience of laws which are themselves unjust and which the protecter challenges as invalid and unconstitutional * * * the experience of these past few years shows, more vividly than any other episode in our history, how effective these alternatives are. ("Concerning Dissent and Civil Disobedience," pp. 34 and 64.)

The "Law Day" speech is disturbing in both its spirit and its content. Barely 1 year after Martin Luther King was assassinated for his nonviolent resistance to obnoxious laws, Mr. Rehnquist described those who choose civil disobedience as "arrogant" and having "hyperactive consciences." I find it hard to conceive that he would not have understood the implications of his words.

And, as I have already shown, he failed to distinguish between violent and nonviolent resistance to law or between violating a particular law to test that law and violating the law as a more general form of protest.

The content of this speech is further evidence of a thread running through the nominee's thought: That the rights of the minority are ultimately dependent on what the majority decides. The spirit of this speech is further evidence of another pattern—the pattern of insensitivity.

CONCLUSION

In conclusion, Mr. President, in a celebration of "I Am an American Day" in Central Park on May 21, 1944, Judge Learned Hand expounded on the meaning of "the spirit of liberty":

I cannot define it, I can only tell you my own faith. The spirit of liberty is the spirit which is not too sure that it is right; the spirit of liberty is the spirit which seeks to understand the minds of other men and women; the spirit of liberty is the spirit which weighs their interests alongside its own without bias * * *.

The single judge in the United States with the most power over the lives of individuals is the Chief Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court. The protection of the constitutional rights and liberties of individual American citizens lies in his or her hands, more than any earthly judge.

I am sorry to say that I don't think his nominee "seeks to understand the minds of other men and women."

I have studied Justice Rehnquist's qualifications carefully. I have looked long and hard at his past statements and actions. I have found that at times his ideological fervor has distorted his judgment and objectivity.

Where I had hoped to find candor, I too often found evasion.

Where I had hoped to find wisdom, I too often found word games and hairsplitting.

Where I had hoped to find growth, I too often found unceasing rigidity.

And where I had hoped to find compassion, I too often found intolerance and insensitivity.

I will vote against his confirmation as Chief Justice, hoping, nevertheless, that if he is confirmed, history proves me wrong, and that the term of Chief Justice Rehnquist is one where the justice promised all our people in the Constitution comes ever closer to fruition.

(Mr. CHAFEE assumed the chair.)

Mr. President, I note the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HART. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HART. Mr. President, for just the 16th time in history, we will most likely confirm a nominee to serve as the Chief Justice of the United States. The leader of the Nation's highest court. The head of the third branch of Government. The symbol in principle and the guardian in practice of the American system of equal justice for all.

Our decision is much like weighing right and wrong on the scales of justice. We must ask how much deference is to be paid the President's choice, how much weight we accord Justice Rehnquist's legal acumen. But the answers must be counter-balanced against the nominee's record, his testimony, his candor and, yes, his philosophy.

By this measure, the scales of justice are tipped sharply out of balance.

The relevant record includes the Judiciary Committee record—his memoranda to Justice Jackson endorsing the Plessy decision, his writings against the public accomodations and desegregation ordinances in Phoenix; his polemic against equal rights for women, and his ceaseless search for precedent, however vague, to marshall the power of government against the rights of the individual.

This is the record, the record in its entirety, by which we must judge this nomination. We cannot, as some have suggested, cramp the position to fit the individual. We have to see whether the nominee fits the position.

And on this basis, what do we see?

We see a man who not only did not join the civil rights movement, but, further a man whose soul was immobilized when the walls of segregation were being shaken. We see a private citizen and public servant who actively and aggressively opposed progress toward civil rights and equal justice under the law.

It was not simply that he opposed the rights of black men and women to exercise their franchise, although that in itself is wrong. Associate Justice Rehnquist opposed the rights of blacks to eat a hamburger at an integrated lunch counter. He opposed the rights of black children to get a decent education in an integrated school. He opposed the rights of defendants to have their trials heard by integrated juries.

It is a continuing record that suggests an incapacity to oppose a single barrier to racial justice; to find it indecent, incompatible with our Constitution, or inconsistent with the rights of man.

It is a record that bespeaks a nostalgia for the times when defendants could be coerced into participating in their own prosecution. A nostalgia for the time women were left subservient in the home and left out at the workplace. Nostalgia for a time when black, Hispanic, and Asian Americans were expected not to assert their rights but to avert their eyes and humble themselves before the majority.

In sum, we see a picture of a man unable to accept the progressive tides in our society to break down the walls of injustice. Not only has his thinking stood still, but he seems caught up in bitter reflections—some call them brilliant—undiminished even as tolerance and justice have grown in our society.

I would like to focus on Justice Rehnquist's involvement as Mr. Rehnquist in forming the policy of military surveillance of Vietnam war protesters and civil rights activists. This was an episode that the Church committee, on which I served, examined in 1975 and 1976. I am sure that the other two remaining veterans of the committee, Senator MATHIAS and Senator GOLDWATER, remember this inquiry as well. I was saddened, I guess that is the proper word, that Justice Rehnquist stated during the recent hearings—and stated repeatedly—that he could not recall his role as a public servant at that time.

This is far too important an issue for any "I don't recall" defense. At issue is Justice Rehnquist's candor, his decision to evade in the face of real conflicts of interest, and his role in disposing of a serious constitutional question in a case where his involvement was a salient factual question. Let me detail the facts.

When the Nixon administration came to power, the Office of Legal Counsel structured a concordant between the Departments of Justice and Defense on domestic surveillance. Justice Rehnquist ran the office at the time. Representing the Army was then General Counsel Robert Jordan. His files contain strong evidence of Mr. Rehnquist's role in formulating this policy of spying on American dissenters.

There was a time when Mr. Rehnquist remembered all this as well. He testified before Senator Ervin, in 1971, that the Army had ceased its domestic intelligence program. He testified that the computerized listing of dissenters was defunct. He said that information gathered by the Army had not been transferred to the Justice Department. And he told Senator Ervin that the one printout from the Army's computers was soon to be destroyed.

But he was not only familiar with the facts. He had reached an opinion about whether this program conformed to the Constitution.

An exchange between Justice Rehnquist and Senator Ervin is particularly telling in this regard:

Senator ERVIN. Don't you think a serious constitutional question arises where any government agency undertakes to place people under surveillance for exercising their First Amendment rights?

Mr. REHNQUIST. I am inclined to think not, as I said last week. This practice is undesirable and should be condemned vigorously, but I do not believe it violated the particular constitutional rights of the individuals who are surveyed.

Senator ERVIN. Do you not concede that government could very effectively stifle the exercise of first amendment freedoms by placing people who exercise those freedoms under surveillance?

Mr. REHNQUIST. No, I don't think so, Senator * * *

Senator ERVIN. Well there is also evidence here of photographers having been present at many rallies. Army intelligence agents pretending to be photographers were present at many rallies, took pictures of people, and then made inquiries to identify these people and made dossiers of them. Do you think that is an interference with constitutional rights?

Mr. Rehnquist. I do not, Senator * * * I don't think the gathering but itself, so long as it is a public activity, is one of constitutional statute.

And Justice Rehnquist conclusion:

My point of disagreement with you is to say whether in the case of Tatum vs. Laird that has been pending in the Court of Appeals here in the District of Columbia that an action will lie by private citizens to enjoin the gathering of information by the executive branch where there has been no threat of compulsory process and no pending action against any of those individuals on the part of the government.

This episode might be ancient history but for a couple of relevant facts. The military surveillance program was being challenged in court. In a few short months, Mr. Rehnquist was to be nominated to the Supreme Court. He testified months before the Court of Appeals ruled the plaintiffs in the case and standing to sue. Yet, Justice Rehnquist did not recuse himself—he cast the tie-breaking vote.

One witness before the Judiciary Committee likened the Rehnquist role as follows. It was as if Billy Martin had managed the Yankees into the sixth game of the World Series and then got himself appointed umpire. In sports, that would be considered highly questionable, to say the least. In constitutional law, that's an outrage.

The Supreme Court held the claim of Tatum et al. of a subjective "chill" of their exercise of constitutionally protected rights could not "substitute for a claim of specific present objective harm or a threat of specific future harm." [408 U.S. at 13-14.]

Chief Justice Burger wrote the majority opinion. Justice Rehnquist and three other justices joined to form the majority. The case was thus decided 5 to 4. The plaintiffs asked that Rehnquist recuse himself from voting. He chose not to do so. Had Justice Rehnquist recused himself, the 2-1 decision of the U.S. Court of Appeals would have been affirmed by a 4-to-4 vote.

Justice Rehnquist wrote a memo defending his participation in the case which was subsequently published in the Supreme Court Reporter. He claimed that his Ervin testimony did not get to the merits of the particular case; that the existing canons did not require his recusal; and that he should have participated to avoid a 4-4 result.

In his book, Appearance of Justice, John MacKenzie states that Justice Rehnquist should have disqualified himself in Laird versus Tatum and commented on his characterization of his testimony before the Ervin committee as follows:

Justice Rehnquist called this exchange "a discussion of the applicable law." But this, as all lawyers will recognize and most lawyers will freely state, is not a mere discussion of the "applicable law." It is a statement of how the law should be applied to a particular case.

□ 1420

Had Laird been affirmed, the case would have proceeded to discovery. Rehnquist's involvement in the Army surveillance plan would have been revealed, as it was not at that time. Mr. Rehnquist would likely have been deposed by plaintiff's counsel. Depending upon what the facts were, Rehnquist could actually have been a defendant and been sued for damages.

As NYU Law Professor Stephen Gillers wrote in a letter to Senator METZENBAUM:

By assuring with his swing vote that the case would go no further, Justice Rehnquist also assured that his participation in the creation of the challenged would go undiscovered and that he would avoid exposure to civil liability. [Gillers at p. 4.]

The Senate Judiciary members who voted against the Rehnquist nomination, and other outside experts, concluded, in the words of Senator KENNEDY's dissenting views: "In Laird versus Tatum, Rehnquist was a committed advocate, not an impartial judge." As such, Mr. Rehnquist's—Mr. Justice Rehnquist's—participation in this decision violated this ethical responsibility to recuse himself from this case.

At the time the case was decided, the canons of the American Bar Association stated:

A judge should disqualify himself in a proceeding in which his impartiality might be reasonably questioned, including but not limited to instances where: (a) he has a personal bias or prejudice concerning a party or personal knowledge of disputed evidentiary facts concerning the proceeding . . .

A note in the Columbia Law Review [Volume 73:106, January 1973] concludes that Mr. Justice Rehnquist's participation in the case may have violated Canons 2 and 3 of the ABA Code. His participation was also contrary to a holding by the Supreme Court in Commonwealth Coatings Corp. (1968) which stated "any tribunal permitted by law to hear cases and controversies not only must be unbiased but also must avoid even the appearance of bias."

But Mr. Rehnquist—Mr. Justice Rehnquist—failed to meet that standard. And justice faltered at a time when justice was sorely needed.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, perhaps some of my colleagues have grown weary of the succession of nomination battles. Perhaps the passage of time and a significant measure of racial progress make the civil rights battles seem like old battles long since won. And I know that the votes are already counted, and that a number of my colleagues would be just as happy to move on to issues where the odds of prevailing are better.

But this is not a debate about calculating odds, it is a debate about simple justice.

When I came to this city fresh from law school, it was my honor to be employed at the Department of Justice. Each day on the way to work, I walked beneath a portal on which the words were etched: "The place of justice is a hallowed place." I believed that then; I believed it even more today.

As I read the Constitution, I do not believe that when the Founders penned the words "Advice and Consent," Senators were meant to foreclose dissent. As de Tocqueville wrote, "The Supreme Court is placed higher than any known tribunal." And I do not believe the nominee, Mr. Justice Rehnquist, meets the standard for leading this preeminent institution that guards the liberty of our people.

Mr. Justice Rehnquist should not be confirmed as the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States, the symbol of justice in our Nation.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The bill clerk proceeded to call the roll.

□ 1430

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I suggest further proceedings under the quorum be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, there has been some question raised concerning the Cornell family trust, and I thought I might go into that a little bit.

It has been said that Justice Rehnquist acted unethically in setting up a trust account in 1961 for his brother-in-law Harold Dickerson Cornell, who had been diagnosed as having multiple sclerosis. The trust account was established by Harold Cornell's father, Dr. Harold Davis Cornell, for the express purpose of providing for Harold Cornell, when his disease made it impossible for him to provide for himself. A trust fund in the amount of $25,000 was established for Harold Cornell and was to be administered by his brother, George Cornell.

It should be noted that at no time does Harold Cornell assert that Justice Rehnquist or anyone else took any money from the trust fund. Although George Cornell never disclosed the existence of the trust to his brother, Harold Cornell, he did provide money from his own personal funds for Harold's use. The trust fund was never utilized for this purpose and remained totally intact.

The FBI was requested to thoroughly investigate this matter, and submit a report to the committee. This report was available to members of the committee for review prior to the committee vote on the nomination. The claim by Mr. Harold Cornell of unethical behavior on the part of Justice Rehnquist apparently involves nothing more than a longstanding family dispute by an alienated family member.

Dr. Cornell insisted that Justice Rehnquist prepare the trust in order to save money and maintain confidentiality by keeping the matter in the family. Justice Rehnquist finally acquiesced only as a favor to Dr. Cornell. It is important to note here that it was the express wish of Dr. Cornell that the trust be kept secret from his son, Harold Cornell, in an effort to keep him from invading the trust and spending all the funds therein.

The code of professional responsibility makes clear that, where the testator or settlor initiates the request and is aware of a potential interest by an attorney, there is no ethical problem with the attorney assisting in preparation of the trust or will. Indeed, Justice Rehnquist's conduct was consistent even with the nonbinding ethical considerations in the code. Harold Cornell complains that Justice Rehnquist did not tell him of the trust. But his siblings unanimously make it clear that this is exactly the way Dr. Cornell wanted it in order to protect his son, Harold Cornell. It was Dr. Cornell's well-founded fear that if Harold Cornell knew of the trust he would spend the money before it was needed for his final medical care. Finally, it was not the responsibility of Justice Rehnquist to administer the trust and provide for its beneficiaries. In this case, Dr. Cornell's son, George, was the trustee and therefore responsible. Justice Rehnquist had nothing to do with its administration.

So I hope this clears up the matter about the Cornell trust.

Mr. President, another allegation brought up was that Justice Rehnquist is a lone dissenter.

There has been a generalized allegation that Justice Rehnquist is out of the mainstream of constitutional thought. A qualitative and analytical review of his record on the Court will demonstrate that this indeed is not the case.

Justice Stevens remains by far the greatest lone dissenter on the current Court with 27 solo dissents over the last four terms of the Court.

To claim that Justice Rehnquist is too far out of the mainstream, is a striking misperception of the thinking of the present Court. Justice Rehnquist has proven himself a leader of majorities, one who believes in equal justice for all, and there is no reason to think he will not continue to do so as Chief Justice.

Another question has been raised about restrictive covenants.

Issue has been taken with the fact that properties, formerly and currently owned by Justice Rehnquist, had covenants which prohibited the sale or transfer of these properties to individuals of certain racial, ethnic or religious origin. The pertinence of raising this issue is negligible at best; however, Justice Rehnquist's opponents were attempting to demonstrate his lack of sensitivity to these individuals. This is not a valid issue, since such covenants in the early part of this century were a common occurrence. It is also important to note that under current law there is no requirement to have these covenants removed, since they are unenforceable and meaningless on their face. The covenants on Justice Rehnquist's former property in Arizona and his current summer residence in Vermont date back to the 1920's. The restrictive covenant which appeared on Justice Rehnquist's Arizona property deed was known by the Judiciary Committee prior to the hearing in 1971 on his nomination to be Associate Justice. At that time it appropriately was not made an issue.

Another matter has come up concerning Justice Jackson's memorandum.

There has also been an allegation that Justice Rehnquist was not candid with the Judiciary Committee in 1971 concerning a memorandum he wrote as a law clerk for Justice Robert H. Jackson in 1952. The memorandum was entitled: "A Random Thought on the Segregation Cases," and was written at the time the Supreme Court was considering Brown versus Board of Education.

Mr. KENNEDY. Will the Senator from South Carolina yield for a point of information?

Mr. THURMOND. I will when I finish my statement.

Mr. KENNEDY. It was just one specific comment.

Mr. THURMOND. I will be glad to as soon as I finish this point.

His critics contend that the memorandum was actually a statement of his views and not the views of Justice Jackson. However, in a December 8, 1971, letter to Senator Eastland, Justice Rehnquist stated in part:

As best I can reconstruct the circumstances after some nineteen years, the memorandum was prepared by me at Justice Jackson's request; it was intended as a rough draft of a statement of his views at the conference of the justices, rather than as a statement of my views.

At some time during the October term, 1952, when the school desegregation cases were pending before the supreme court, I recall Justice Jackson asking me to assist him in developing arguments which he might use in conference when the cases were discussed. He expressed concern that the conference should have the benefit of all of the arguments in support of the constitutionality of the "separate but equal" doctrine, as well as those against its constitutionality. In carrying out this assignment, I recall assembling historical material and submitting it to the justice, and I recall considerable oral discussion with him as to what type of presentation he would make when the cases came before the court conference . . .

Because of these facts, I am satisfied that the memorandum was not designed to be a statement of my views on these cases. Justice Jackson not only would not have welcomed such a submission in this form, but he would have quite emphatically rejected it and, I believe, admonished the clerk who had submitted it . . .

It is absolutely inconceivable to me that I would have prepared such a document without previous oral discussion with him and specific instructions to do so.

In closing, I would like to point out that during the hearings on my confirmation, I mentioned the supreme court's decision in Brown versus Board of Education in the context of an answer to a question concerning the binding effect of precedent. I was not asked my views on the substantive issues in the Brown case. In view of some of the recent Senate floor debate, I wish to state unequivocally that I fully support the legal reasoning and the rightness from the standpoint of fundamental fairness of the Brown decision.

Those were the words of Justice Rehnquist.

There is nothing in my opinion to indicate that the views on this memorandum were Justice Rehnquist's own views. On the contrary, all available evidence, including the recollection of his coclerk Donald Cronson, indicate that Justice Rehnquist was not writing his own views. To emphasize this, the Judiciary Committee on December 9, 1971, received a telegram from Donald Cronson. This telegram was put into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD during Senate debate on the nomination of William Rehnquist to be an Associate Justice. The telegram reads in part as follows:

* * * It is my recollection that the memorandum in question is my work at least as much as it is yours and that it was prepared in response to a request from Justice Jackson to prepare such a memorandum * * *

Justice Jackson requested that a memorandum be prepared supporting the proposition that Plessy was correctly decided. The memorandum supporting Plessy was typed by you, but a great deal of its content was the result of my suggestions. A number of phrases quoted in Newsweek I can recognize as having been composed by me, and it is probable that the memorandum is more mine than yours.

Memories of events that were 19 years old in 1971, and are now 34 years old today, cannot be held to be without some divergence. However, two substantive issues concerning the memorandum are acknowledged. First, that Justice Rehnquist thought that Plessy versus Ferguson was wrong in 1952, and still does, and second, that Cronson's explanation that Justice Rehnquist was assigned to write one side of the issue makes it convincingly clear that he was not expressing his own views in this 34-year-old memorandum.

At this time, the matter appears to be irrelevant and without merit. Justice Rehnquist has served on the Supreme Court for 15 years. He has reviewed countless segregation and civil rights cases. In none of those cases has he questioned Brown versus Board of Education or suggested a return to Plessy versus Ferguson. In light of his performance as a Justice, it is hard to ascribe significance to a 34-year-old memorandum written at the request of his superior.

□ 1440

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a list of 34 cases in which Justice Rehnquist cited Brown versus Board of Education.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CASES WHERE JUSTICE REHNQUIST HAS CITED BROWN V. BOARD OF EDUCATION IN SUPPORT OF A PROPOSITION

1. Thornburgh Governor of Pennylvania, et al. v. American College of Obstetricians and Gynecologists, et al., No. 84-495, Supreme Court of the United States, 106 S. Ct. 2169, June 11, 1986.

34. Wright, et al. v. Council of the City of Emporia, et al., No. 70-188, Supreme Court of the United States, 407 U.S. 451; 33 L. Ed. 2d 51; 92 S Ct. 2196, June 22, 1972, Decided.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, this list shows not only that he favored Brown versus Board of Education but also that he cited it in 34 different decisions he wrote.

I also ask unanimous consent to have a list of cases printed in the RECORD. A question was asked: "Have you ever voted for the interests of minorities or women?" There were 27 different cases in which Justice Rehnquist voted for minorities or women.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Question: Have you ever voted for the interests of minorities or women?

McDonnell Douglas Corp. v. Green, 411 U.S. 792 (1973) (Employee had made out prima facie case of racially motivated discrimination of employer).

International Brotherhood of Teamsters v. United States, 437 U.S. 324 (1977) (Teamsters had discriminated against minorities in line driver positions).

Alexander v. Gardner-Denver, 415 U.S. 36 (1974) (Racial discrimination suit is not bound by prior arbitral decision).

Roberts v. United States Jaycees, 104 S. Ct. (1984) (State can apply Human Rights Act to compel all male organization to accept women).

Ham v. South Carolina, 409 U.S. 524 (1973) (Questioning of juror's racial attitudes required when racial issues inextricably bound up in the case).

Lau v. Nichols, 414 U.S. 56 3 (1974) (Discriminatory impact suffices to establish liability under Title VI) (Bakke and Guardians modified Lau).

Bazemore v. Friday, Nos. 85-93 and 85-428 (1986) (Extension service had a duty to eradicate salary disparities between white and black workers caused by pre-Act violations).

Palmore v. Sidoti, 466 U.S. 429 (1984) (State cannot remove child from mother who is married to a black man).

Hishon v. King & Spaulding, 467 U.S. 69 (1984) (Discrimination against women employees in admission to law firm partnerships states a claim under Title VII).

Meritor Savings Bank v. Vinson, No. 84-1979 (1986) (Hostile work environment can constitute sex discrimination in violation of Title VII).

Burlington School Committee v. Miss., 53 U.S.L.W. 4509 (1985) (Allowed parents to be reimbursed for private school expenses of their handicapped child).

Irving Independent School District v. Tatro, 468 U.S. 883 (1984) (Construed Education of Handicap Act to include certain forms of medical treatment as being covered under the Act).

White v. Regester, 412 U.S. 755 (1973) (Struck down Texas at-large voting plan as unconstitutional because it would have diluted minority strength).

Albermarle Paper Co. v. Moody, 422 U.S. 405 (1975) (Invalidating employment test having disproportionate impact on minorities) as insufficiently job-related).

Dothard v. Rawlinson, 433 U.S. 321 (1977) (Invalidating a weight and height requirement that adversely affected women) (concurrence).

Havens Realty Corp. v. Coleman, 455 U.S. 363 (1982) (Plaintiffs had standing to sue owner of apartment complex, alleging that racial steering practices violated the Fair Housing Act).

United Jewish Organizations of Williamsburg v. Carey, 430 U.S. 144 (1977) (Constitution permits the State to draw lines deliberately in such a way that the percentage of districts with a nonwhite majority roughly approximates the percentage of nonwhites in the county).

Hunter v. Underwood, 105 S. Ct. 1916 (1985) (Held that provision in Alabama Constitution disenfranchising persons convicted of crimes involving moral turpitude violated equal protection where, even though on its face it was racially neutral, original enactment was motiviated by desire to discriminate against blacks on account of race and provision had had racially discriminatory impact since its adoption).

Cannon v. University of Chicago, 441 U.S. 677 (1979) (concurrence) (Female plaintiff who was denied admission to University had private cause of action under Title IX). (J. Rehnquist concurs emphasizing that the question of the existence of a private right of action is basically one of statutory construction and Congress must make plain its intent to create such a right).

Chapman v. Meier, 420 U.S. 1 (1975) (Reapportionment plan for voting district was constitutionally impermissible because it diluted minority voting strength).

Gilmore v. City of Montgomery, 417 U.S. 556 (1974) (federal court may enjoin a municipality from permitting the use of formerly segregated public park recreational facilities by private segregated school groups and by other nonschool groups that allegedly discriminate in their membership on the basis of race).

Chandler v. Roudebush, 425 U.S. 840 (1976) (Federal employee had same right to a trial de novo on discrimination as private employee).

Sumitomo Shoji America v. Avagliano, 457 U.S. 176 (1982) (Female secretaries of New York corporation of Japanese subsidiary could sue under Title VII).

Hills v. Gautreaux, 425 U.S. 284 (1976) (The Milliken decision, which rejected a metropolitan area school desegregation order because there was no interdistrict violation or any significant interdistrict segregative effect, imposes no per se rule that federal courts lack authority to order corrective action beyond a district boundary where the violations occurred.

United States v. Scotland Neck Board of Education, 407 U.S. 484 (1972) (The district court in this litigation instituted by the United States enjoined implementation of a statute as creating a refuge for white students and promoting school segregation in the county). (Burger along with Blackmun, Powell and Rehnquist concur in order to distinguish Wright v. Council City of Emporia from Scotland Neck.

Tillman v. Wheaton, 410 U.S. 431 (1973) (Wheaton-Haven swimming pool operates as a community pool and thus could not deny membership for racial reasons).

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The distinguished majority leader.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I thank the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee for his untiring efforts on this nomination.

I still hope that we can vote on this nomination and the Scalia nomination and dispose of both before 4 o'clock tomorrow.

I know that this is a matter of controversy to some, but I do believe that we should bring it to a conclusion and get on with other business before the Senate, and I hope that tomorrow we can do that.

Mr. President, I support the nomination of William Hubbs Rehnquist to be Chief Justice of the United States.

This is the third occasion in which the Senate has been asked to confirm this nominee. The first occasion was in 1969, when he was nominated and confirmed to be an Assistant Attorney General of the United States. He was also confirmed to be an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court in 1971.

The nominee has emerged from more than 4 days of thorough hearings in the Committee on the Judiciary. This involved 40 hours of testimony from 40 witnesses. By now the Senate should be well acquainted with Justice Rehnquist and his background, qualifications, and experience.

Associate Justice Rehnquist brings to the position of Chief Justice a unique set of credentials. He has unequaled experience and he has the temperament and collegiality necessary to provide effective leadership on the Court.

His academic credentials are simply the best. He was first in his class at Stanford Law School. He has a masters degree in history from Harvard and an undergraduate degree from Stanford with highest honors.

He had a distinguished private practice in Phoenix for 16 years afer being a clerk to a Supreme Court justice upon graduation from law school. He served as the top lawyer in the Government for 3 years as an Assistant Attorney General and legal counsel to the Attorney General. Then he was elevated to the Supreme Court in 1971, where he has served with distinction. It is difficult to imagine anyone with a better set of credentials to be Chief Justice.

Mr. Justice Rehnquist has been one of the most productive and prolific members of the Supreme Court. He has been assigned to write more majority opinions—over 230—than any of his colleagues during his service on the High Court. He has also been one of the most frequent dissenters—oftentimes alone—having authored more than 80 dissents. Quite frequently, he spoke for others. Some have attempted to characterize these opinions as extremism. However, I cannot find fault with one who does not hesitate to express his views, even if they might be unpopular or in the minority at the time.

AMERICAN BAR ASSOCIATION ENDORSEMENT

As might be expected when a nominee has been identified for the highest judicial position in the Nation, the American Bar Association's standing committee on the Federal judiciary conducted an exhaustive examination of Justice Rehnquist.

The committee interviewed all members of the Supreme Court and found unanimous, enthusiastic support among his colleagues. The committee interviewed judges from across the Nation, almost 200 of them. Sixty-five respected leaders of the bar were also interviewed. In addition the faculty and students of Michigan Law School conducted an indepth review of Justice Rehnquist's contributions as a Justice of the High Court. The committee also interviewed more than 50 deans and faculty members from law schools across the country.

□ 1450

The committee concluded unanimously that, based on its findings, Justice Rehnquist was "well qualified" to be Chief Justice. This is the highest rating the committee can bestow on a candidate. It speaks for itself. William Rehnquist has been found by his peers to be uniquely qualified to assume the role of the Chief Justice.

Despite this highest rating and despite a unique set of credentials, this nomination has been controversial.

VOTER INTIMIDATION

Mr. President, one of the charges against Justice Rehnquist that received much attention alleged that he engaged in voter intimidation tactics during local Phoenix elections in the early 1960's Testimony was taken from two panels of witnesses. One panel, consisting of partisan Democrats, alleged that Mr. Rehnquist engaged in various voter intimidation tactics at certain polls with heavy minority voter registration.

A second panel, consisting of former local Republican officials as well as certain Democrats heatedly denied that Mr. Rehnquist engaged in these tactics. Rather, they stated that he was chairman of a lawyer's group that was set up to train and advise Republican watchers and challengers. In that capacity he sometimes traveled to certain polls to act as a troubleshooter.

The hearing record in 1971 and again this year reveals that events occurred, probably in 1962, although one witness suggested that the most controversial event occurred in 1964 at a Hispanic precinct. Indeed, there was an incident at a predominately black precinct, Bethune School, in 1962. Police and FBI reports as well as newspaper accounts the next morning confirmed that a Republican challenger was arrested after engaging in harassing tactics against minority voters. This individual was not Mr. Rehnquist, but a person who resembled him in height and weight.

No criminal charges were brought. Yet this event was referred to by opponents of the nomination as evidence of behavior not worthy of a Supreme Court Justice. On the other hand, supporters, including former Democratic local chairmen, vigorously contended that Mr. Rehnquist did not engage in illegal or harassing tactics.

It is undeniable that the passage of years have blurred the memories and recall of those who were involved at the time. It seems to me that it is now not humanly or objectively possible to reconstruct the events as they occurred at that time.

We have Justice Rehnquist's flat denial of improper conduct. We also have the fact, as recounted by Congressman RUDD in his testimony, that Mr. Rehnquist was selected by the Democratic House of Representatives in Arizona to defend two Democrats in an impeachment proceeding in the legislature during this period. To me, this speaks eloquently for the general high regard for and reputation of Mr. Rehnquist. It is inconceivable that Mr. Rehnquist would have been chosen by the leadership of that body if he had engaged in the conduct which was alleged in this instance.

Motives that smack of partisanship and lack of objective evidence lead me to the conclusion that the nominee did not engage in unlawful or unethical conduct in the Phoenix precincts in the early sixties.

THE RESTRICTIVE CONVENANTS

Much of the controversy relating to this nomination centers around certain racially restrictive covenants found by the FBI in the deeds of two properties acquired by Justice Rehnquist many years ago. One of these properties, which was formerly the Rehnquist family home in Phoenix, was sold in 1969. The other is currently his vacation home in Vermont.

The Supreme Court in the case of Shelley v. Kramer, 334 U.S. 1 (1948), found that these totally repugnant and obnoxious provisions were unconstitutional and utterly unenforcable in any court of law in the United States. But the matter was still bandied about in the national media as somehow evidence that Justice Rehnquist was a racist or bigot and therefore unworthy to be elevated to be Chief Justice.

Mr. President, this charge is so far fetched and irresponsible that it is a great pity that we must waste the time of the Senate in response. The Supreme Court has spoken definitively—decades ago. Any real estate lawyer knows that these convenants are not worth the paper they are written on. Yet it is undoubtedly true that millions of these relics are still buried in land records in every county courthouse in the country.

When brought to his attention, Justice Rehnquist immediately expressed his shock and dismay at their existence and pledged to the Committee on the Judiciary that they would be removed promptly. However, opponents are still trying to read some kind of bias into the character of the nominee. I simply find these charges as repugnant as the racially restrictive covenants upon which they are based. I reject them out of hand and submit that the Senate and the American people will do the same.

THE JACKSON MEMORANDUM

Another charge against Mr. Justice Rehnquist relates to a memorandum he prepared while serving as a law ckerk to Justice Jackson on the Supreme Court in 1952, about 34 years ago. At the time the Court was beginning the review of the separate but equal doctrine in Plessy versus Ferguson. This review 2 years later became the unanimous opinion of the Court in the historic case of Brown versus the Board of Education.

If I correctly heard, I heard the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee refer to the Brown case in fact cited by Justice Rehnquist in as many as 30-some cases.

It is clear to this Senator that clerk Rehnquist—this was back in 1952—was playing a "devil's advocate" role on that occasion. He has stated in 1971 that that memo did not then reflect his view on the matter. He has restated that same view this time around. First, some 20 years after the fact and now almost 35 years after the fact we are engaged in an exercise trying to reconstruct the mind set of those involved at the time 1952.

The issue involved is important. It seems to me that the best evidence of the nominee's view and record in segregation in the schools can be found in the 34 opinions the Court handed down since William Rehnquist has been a member of the Supreme Court. In all these cases the Brown case was upheld. In all the cases Justice Rehnquist either wrote the majority opinion or concurred in the majority opinion. These are not clerk's memos of 34 years ago. These are 34 opinions of the High Court with Justice Rehnquist leading or joining with others on the Court to reaffirm the Brown case. Is not this the best evidence of the state of mind of Mr. Justice Rehnquist as to his views on segregation in the schools? Mr. President, I submit that it is.

THE JUSTICE DEPARTMENT MEMOS

The Judiciary hearings on the Rehnquist nomination focused substantially on several memoranda written while he served as assistant attorney general. Two of these memoranda surfaced in the past few days, one on school busing and one on the ERA amendment.

Ten pages of the Judiciary Committee report are devoted to this matter and the related issue of Justice Rehnquist's participation in the subsequent case of Laird versus Tatum. The report sets forth the issues involved adequately. It also contains a memo written by Justice Rehnquist which sets forth his reasons for not recusing himself from participation in the Court's deliberations on the case.

The majority of the committee felt that this memo was the best reply to the charges on the recusal question. The committee also concluded that "in no way should Justice Rehnquist's actions be construed as being improper." A great deal of time was spent in the hearings pursuing this question. I respect the committee's conclusion; however, it must be recognized that there is merit to the opposing view. It was a close call, as Justice Rehnquist conceded.

With respect to the busing and ERA memos, it seems to me that these were internal memos in which the Chief Legal Advisor was asked by senior White House staff for candid opinions which presented alternative options on two of the most highly controversial issues of the time—busing and ERA. I note that the Nixon administration did not offer a constitutional amendment on busing, but it did support the ERA amendment. Whatever views might have been contained in the memos, the fact of the matter is that Mr. Rehnquist did testify on behalf of the administration on the ERA amendment. Again, I note that his record on the Court must be the best evidence of his position on these matters.

Upon analysis of the busing memo, it is clear that it was simply a legal analysis of the proposed constitutional amendment. The White House had sole responsibility for all policy decisions on the amendment.

Any suggestion that this memo endorsed deliberate racial segregation is a gross and irresponsible misrepresentation. The legal analysis in the memo presents the view that the Constitution prohibits intentional racial discrimination, not racial imbalance resulting from the actions of private actors. Accordingly, local jurisdictions would be free to engage in race-neutral student assignment plans even if the schools are racially identifiable due to factors beyond the school board's control. This is what the Supreme Court held in three subsequent cases: Swann, Pasadena and, most recently, Bazemore (outside the public school context).

This memo was written at a time when both the executive branches were examining alternatives to forced busing to achieve racial balance in school desegregation.

The Committee on the Judiciary examined these issues quite carefully, although not specifically the memos themselves. The majority was satisfied that Justice Rehnquist has had a satisfactory record in his Court opinions on these matters. The Justice himself cited a case decided just last June when he wrote the majority opinion for the Court on women's rights.

Although not as expansive in his views over the years as some others on the Court have been on these issues, it can hardly be said that here is a bigot or a racist or a person who is insensitive and inconsiderate. The nomination should not fall on these issues.

THE CORNELL FAMILY TRUST

In recent days attempts have been made to discredit Justice Rehnquist through the criticism of his brother-in-law, Harold D. "Dick" Cornell. The charges were first aired in an article appearing in the Los Angeles Times on August 2, 1986. Chairman Thurmond asked the FBI to investigate the matter. This report was made available to members of the committee 2 days before the vote. Subsequently four Senators, including three who are members of the committee and who voted against the nomination asked Chairman Thurmond to investigate the matter further.

My staff and I have also reviewed the matter. We have reviewed the press accounts and the FBI report. It should be said that Mr. Cornell has been alienated from the rest of his brothers and sisters for sometime. The other members of the Cornell family have unanimously repudiated Mr. Cornell's allegations.

According to members of the Cornell family, they believe that his attacks on Justice Rehnquist are motivated by his intense professional jealousy of Justice Rehnquist, and not as a result of his current physical or mental illness. Mr. Cornell previously practiced law in California and described himself as a "liberal attorney."

Mr. President, the focus on this matter has simply given a public forum to a man who seems to be personally jealous and politically motivated. Whatever are the legitimate concerns with this nomination, this is not one of them. I deeply regret that members of this body have sought to legitimize them and to build opposition based on these spurious charges.

In conclusion, Mr. President, this Senator will support the nomination of William Hubbs Rehnquist to be Chief Justice of the United States. I am confident he will be a pillar of strength in his new role. I am confident he will have the capacity and compassion to lead the Court and the Federal Judiciary in the coming years. The hearing record disclosed nothing this time or previously to bar Justice Rehnquist from assuming this position of highest trust for which the President has nominated him. The Committee on the Judiciary has found that he does possess the qualities required of a Chief Justice: Unquestioned integrity, incorruptibility, fairness and courage. I agree. I shall vote for confirmation.

It seems to me that we are reaching a point that we need to make a decision. I understand the fall session of the Court is not long off, and he will be needed to guide the Court.

In my view, I think he has the sensitivity and the compassion and certainly the integrity and the intellect to be Chief Justice of the United States. I submit there is nothing in the hearing record, and there have been no bombshells over the weekend, do not anticipate any, do not know of any, and I would urge my colleagues to let us proceed with this nomination early tomorrow afternoon.

As I have indicated this morning, we have a mountain of work—a mountain of work—and we have this week and the two following weeks if we intend to leave here on October 3. We have spent about 5 days on this nomination. For the most part, we have used the time appropriately. There has been discussion, there has been a dialog, there has been a debate. But there also has been a lot of repetition.

I know some oppose the nomination; I know some will vote no. But I just suggest I hope that vote will come tomorrow, and I am willing to predict that it will be somewhere in the neighborhood of 75 to 25, 72 to 28, or somewhere in that neighborhood. And nothing has changed in the past 4 or 5 days.

So I thank the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee again for his untiring efforts on behalf of the nominee and on behalf of the President. Again, I would say the President won a fairly clear mandate in 1980, which was reaffirmed in 1984. I believe the American people would expect the President, whoever he might be—Democrat of Republican, liberal or conservative—to appoint people who might reflect his philosophy, particularly in the case of an overwhelming mandate, carrying 49 States. I must believe that the President probably had that in mind. He was not elected in 49 States to pick out the most liberal member he could find to be Chief Justice. And there are a lot of very able liberal jurists in the country. There are also very many conservative jurists. Justice Rehnquist certainly is an outstanding one and I think the President made exactly the right choice.

Mr. METZENBAUM addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GRAMM). The Senator from Ohio.

Mr. METZENBAUM. Mr. President, you can say something once and you can say it twice and you can say it five times and some people do not hear you.

But I want my distinguished colleague, the distinguished majority leader, to understand that we agree. The President won the election. He won the election and he has appointed 275 judges and we have only raised a question with respect to 5 of them—5 out of 275.

I want to further point out that there are other conservatives in this country besides Justice Rehnquist. When Sandra Day O'Connor came up for confirmation—a very, very conservative women, fine legal background, probably every bit as conservative as Justice Rehnquist—the Senate confirmed her 99 to 0. And when Judge Scalia was up for confirmation—and some say his conservative philosophy is even more conservative than Justice Rehnquist—I might say, parenthetically, if that is possible—but be that as it may, the Senate Judiciary Committee unanimously reported out and recommended for passage Judge Scalia to become a Justice of the Supreme Court.

I have no doubt in my mind that when Judge Scalia is brought to the floor of the Senate after we dispose of the confirmation process concerning Justice Rehnquist, I have no doubt in my mind that Judge Scalia will become Justice Scalia with a near unanimous vote.

He is a conservative. Sandra Day O'Connor is a conservative. Most of those 275 judges are conservatives. We have made an issue with respect to five of the lower court judges and one Supreme Court Justice appointee.

Now, why? Because the issue here is an issue having to do with credibility, an issue having to do with integrity.

Mr. DOLE. Will the Senator from Ohio yield?

Mr. METZENBAUM. For a question, yes.

Mr. DOLE. I do not quarrel with the statistics, but I wanted to just make the record complete and indicate that in the 4 years President Carter was President, I think this body confirmed 264 Federal judges. It has taken Ronald Reagan 6 years to catch up with the 4-year term of President Carter. And I would guess in most of those cases those were more liberal jurists.

I did vote against one, Judge Abner Mikva.

Mr. METZENBAUM. You have made my point, and that is that the U.S. Senate, whether it is dealing with liberals or conservatives or moderates, or Democrats or Republicans, has not voted on the basis of whether the appointee was a liberal or conservative.

I do not know about President Carter's appointees, whether they were liberals. But let us accept the fact that in the main they were Democrats and let us also accept the fact that most of them were confirmed without controversy.

Let me also make the point that the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee led the opposition to the confirmation of Abe Fortas on the basis of his political philosophy—led the opposition on that basis and spoke to the issue for hours on end to the point where the appointment had to be taken down. There were not enough votes in order to invoke cloture.

But none of us, there is not a single person that I know who stood on the floor of the U.S. Senate and said, "We oppose Justice Rehnquist to become Chief Justice of the Supreme Court because he is too conservative."

Judge Scalia is every bit as conservative. We had testimony saying he is far more conservative than Justice Rehnquist. That is not the issue.

And when you talk about five witnesses saying one thing and seven witnesses saying another thing, that is not the issue either. We are not dealing with numbers. We are dealing with what people were saying. The seven witnesses were testifying concerning the fact that they did not know whether or not Mr. Rehnquist was involved in voter challenges and intimidating of voters; they did not know. They said it was not possible for them to know with certainty; they were not with him all day. The five witnesses said they saw, they identified him.

Again, I want to report that which I said the other day: That is not the issue—whether he did or did not. The issue is what did he say to the U.S. Senate in his confirmation process. We know what he said. He denied harassing. He denied intimidating. The issue has to do with his candor, with his integrity, with his truthfulness in 1971 and again in 1986. If there had been only one question concerning his credibility or his integrity, I know I would not be on the floor speaking for the second time in connection with this appointment. But no. When you look at the facts with respect to the Justice Jackson memo, it is not what he said. He had a right to have his opinion. It is what he said to the U.S. Senate in his confirmation process.

The evidence indicates clearly that he wrote the memo. He can say anything he wants. But any single human being who understands the English language can read that memo. It is in the Record. If it is not here in the Record I will now check that fact and be certain to put it in the Record before we go to a vote.

There is no argument. It is his memo. It is signed W.H.R., William H. Rehnquist. Right above his name, right above his signature, his initials, is the indication with respect to his position concerning Plessy against Ferguson indicating that case made good law. He had a right to say that.

When he spoke to the U.S. Senate in 1971 by affidavit, he told them that was not his position. He did a 100 percent reversal. That is bad enough. But when one of the members of our Judiciary Committee asked him what his position was he said, "I did not have a position"—did not have a position. Come now, does anybody really believe that?

The distinguished floor leader spoke a few minutes ago about the restrictive covenant. The issue there again is not the matter of the restrictive convenant and whether or not he bought a piece of property with a restrictive convenant in it—as a matter of fact, two pieces of property with restrictive convenants. That is not the issue.

The issue is that he told the U.S. Senate he did not know about it. He said he just learned about it a few days earlier when he read the FBI report.

What are the facts? The facts are that he was advised by two lawyers to take a look at the restrictive convenant. He did not tell us about that at the hearing. The only time he told the Judiciary Committee about that was after the Washington Legal Times spoke with the two attorneys, and they said, "Yes, indeed, we did advise them about the restrictive convenant."

What an unbelievable coincidence. The very day that the Legal Times publishes that information as to the lawyers having advised him on the facts, what then happens? It is on that day—not a day before, not a week after—that very day that it is published here in Washington, Justice Rehnquist writes a letter to the chairman of the committee and says, "In rummaging through my papers, I found that I did have letters from my legal counsel on that subject."

Then if that were not enough, this whole question of integrity, we have the ethical question, where the chairman of the American Bar Association Committee on Legal Ethics concludes that the conduct of the Justice of the Supreme Court who is to become the Chief Justice was unethical.

Other professors, 90 of them to be exact, conclude that the conduct of his was not ethical in the Laird against Tatum case. There has been much talk about the Laird against Tatum case. That is the case you will recollect where during the Nixon administration the military was involved in surveillance of civilians in this country to find out what they were doing in connection with their protests, much of which evolved around the Vietnam war. Justice Rehnquist tells the committee, no, he did very little on that. He responds to Senator LEAHY and then on another occasion to Senator MATHIAS that he knew very little about that subject. He had written one little memo or something, he said in answer to Senator LEAHY. Then more information comes out about his actual involvement and what he really did. Senator MATHIAS asks him a series of questions. What does he say? "I can't recollect."

"I do not recollect."

We are not talking about a situation where somebody is asking what did you do on October 20, 1946, at 8 p.m. Of course that is not the kind of thing we are talking about. We are talking about one of the most important issues that has occurred in this century concerning our Government's conduct, use of the military in order to spy upon civilians conducting themselves in peaceful activities and indicating their protests. This Government was founded on the basis that people had a right to speak out, and people had a right to have different opinions, and people had a right to express those opinions. Yes, people had a right to do those things without being spied upon.

Judge William Rehnquist, as a lawyer in the Department of Justice was totally involved, tells Senator MA-

THIAS he cannot remember. "I do not recollect." "I do not recollect." "I do not recollect." "I do not recollect."

Any of us who have practiced law know that lawyers oftentimes speak with those who are about to be witnesses in cases, and make it very clear to them that when you are on the witness stand, if you are in a sticky wicket, and the problem is great, that nobody, nobody can say to you, or tell you what is in your own head, and what your memory is. And "I cannot recollect" is the standard and traditional out that is used by so many witnesses.

It is not an appropriate procedure for lawyers, and certainly not an appropriate procedure for a Supreme Court Justice about to become a Chief Justice of the United States.

What does it say to the American people if we are going to confirm a man solely on a partisan basis because the President of the United States wants it? I say to my colleagues on the other side, I am waiting for one of you who is staunch enough, strong enough, and courageous enough to say to your President, enough is enough, Mr. President. Enough is enough. We will vote for your Manions, your Fitzwaters, and your Sessions and some of the others that you have sent us. That is bad enough. And we will support you, Mr. President, when you send us decent conservatives who have impeccable records. But that does not mean, Mr. President, that we have to stand in line and salute every time you ask us to do so. We will not go along with the Rehnquist nomination.

What brave soul is going to stand up and speak out on that subject? Is it possible that the Democrats on this side of the aisle are split on the issue and some think Rehnquist should be confirmed and some think he should not? That is probably as it should be. At least it indicates an independent judgment.

It certainly does not indicate a political posture.

On that side of the aisle I have yet to hear one courageous soul say, Mr. President, I have had enough. I cannot stomach the Rehnquist nomination.

No. Instead, I am willing to appoint someone to be Chief Justice of the United States notwithstanding I know that he will only serve to polarize that Court. He will only serve to bring to it a contentiousness that has not existed under the previous Chief Justice.

We are talking about a man who has an open and understood opposition and hostility to a basic constitutional value.

I would like to talk about some of those constitutional values because to me what is this Constitution all about if we are not prepared to stand up, defend it, and defend it at times when it is not easy to do so?

I remember so well when the Kefauver committee was conducting its hearings having to do with the gangs of this country. I remember so many persons who appeared before that committee, and said "I like the fifth amendment." I remember so many in this country wanted to change the Constitution, eliminate the fifth amendment because too many were hiding behind that cloak.

□ 1520

But the strength of this Nation relates to that Constitution and the fact that it is a strong Constitution, a Constitution for all the people of this country no matter what the circumstances are, a Constitution behind which, on some occasions, people can hide, but those constitutional values are more important than invading the Constitution itself.

I am not at all certain that this new Chief Justice if and when he is confirmed will have that same approach to defending the Constitution. The fact is that of all the persons qualified for the Supreme Court, the President has chosen one of those most hostile to basic individual rights.

When Justice Rehnquist was an Assistant Attorney General in the Justice Department, he drafted a constitutional amendment which would have immunized all but the most blatant racial school segregation.

This constitutional amendment if adopted would have nullified the Supreme Court decision in Brown against Board of Education. The amendment would have overruled Supreme Court decisions which required full desegregation. These Supreme Court decisions rejected desegregation plans which were adopted to avoid desegregation, and plans which had the effect of thwarting desegregation.

But the Rehnquist amendment was written to give both the North and the South the opportunity to maintain segregated schools.

According to the Rehnquist memo, a school board could set up an attendance plan that would keep its schools segregated even if the plan had been adopted to maintain segregation. The memo states:

> If the zoning plan adopted bears a reasonable relationship to education needs—if fair-minded school board members could have selected it for nonracial reasons—it is valid regardless of the intent with which a particular school board may have chosen it.

Let me repeat that. This is from Justice Rehnquist when he was in the Department of Justice. His memo would provide:

> If fair-minded school board members could have selected it for nonracial reasons, it is valid regardless of the intent with which a particular school board may have chosen it.

The Rehnquist amendment would have permitted a school board to zone its schools with the intent to keep them segregated. As long as the court could imagine a nonracial reason for the zoning plan, there would be no constitutional violation under the Rehnquist amendment. And the amendment would have permitted school boards to let students choose their schools. Assistant Attorney General Rehnquist would have let them choose even when the freedom-of-choice plan was adopted to thwart desegregation efforts.

Assistant Attorney General Rehnquist would let them choose even when the evidence showed that blacks had no choices because of violence and threats of violence. In other words, such a plan would be great, according to Justice Rehnquist, even if it were a sham.

The 14th amendment has long been controversial, but at the time Assistant Attorney General Rehnquist wrote his memo some things were very clear. It was clear then that the 14th amendment outlawed new and more sophisticated forms of discrimination. It was clear then that school boards would not be able to evade the mandate of Brown through blatant or disingenuous subterfuge. It was clear that after a history of deliberate segregation, the mere adoption of a paper policy of equality would not satisfy the 14th amendment.

It was clear then that only meaningful desegregation would satisfy the Constitution.

Our Justice Rehnquist then was working in the Department of Justice. That William Rehnquist wanted to undo these principles. Is that the kind of man that the people of this country can have confidence in that he would be fair to all people regardless of their color, their ethnic or national origin?

William Rehnquist as a lawyer wanted to turn back the hands of time to the era of Jim Crow and he wanted to do that in 1970.

But in all candor, while I am outraged by this memorandum, I do not think anyone is surprised at all.

A few days ago a spokesperson for the Justice Department was asked about the memo. He said, "I do not see much that is new in this."

Well, I must say that I agree with the Justice Department this time. There really is not much that is new in this. After all, it was law clerk Rehnquist who supported Plessy versus Ferguson when he wrote the Brown versus Board memo for Justice Jackson. And, after all, it was Phoenix lawyer Rehnquist who opposed the desegregation of the Phoenix schools, and, after all, it is Justice Rehnquist who dissents from every major decision which would make the Brown desegregation requirement a meaningful one.

How can we possibly, I say to my colleagues who are prepared to vote for this nomination, confirm someone to this post who has so consistently opposed equality under the Constitution?

This proposed constitutional amendment is just one more reason why Justice Rehnquist should not be confirmed as Chief Justice.

Now we have also learned that Justice Rehnquist authored in 1970 a memorandum on the equal rights amendment when he was an Assistant Attorney General. He did it for the Office of Legal Counsel. He was asked to summarize the objections to the adoption of the ERA. He responded in memorandums which show he had a very firm view that women should not be accorded equality under the Constitution.

I am not talking about this memo because he opposed the ERA. The issue is not whether he favored or opposed the ERA.

The issue is his views about basic protection women should have under the Constitution.

This memo shows that the Assistant Attorney General did not think the Constitution should accord males and females equal treatment. That was his view in 1970. It has been his view on the Court ever since.

What did Mr. Rehnquist object to? I will tell you. He was concerned that the age to marry might be equalized. He was worried that the age when men and women can begin work might be equalized. He was concerned that the entitlement of male and female children to parental support might be equalized. He was concerned that husbands and wives might have equal power to decide where the family would live.

He felt certain that the 14th amendment would not require this kind of equality, but he said that ERA might be interpreted to require it.

What kind of approach is this for the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court to somehow think that women are second-class citizens, young and old?

Assistant Attorney General Rehnquist said the majority of women did not want these kinds of changes, that those supporting ERA were equality fanatics.

Let me quote Mr. Justice Rehnquist at that time:

> . . . But I cannot help thinking that there is also present somewhere within this movement a virtually fanatical desire to obscure not only legal differentiation between men and women, but insofar as possible, physical distinctions between the sexes. I think there are overtones of dislike and distaste for the traditional difference between men and women in the family unit, and in some cases very probably a complete rejection of the women's traditionally different role in this regard.

What bothers me, what concerns me about this man, Mr. President, for whom so many are going to vote to become Chief Justice, is his outlook that constitutional equality is fanatical, that seeking legal equality means eliminating physical distinctions. That is an absurd way to characterize women's search for equal protection under the law.

How can the women of this country feel comfortable in knowing that the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court thinks that their desire for full equality is fanatical, thinks that there is something improper, inappropriate, in their seeking that kind of full equality?

I do not care whether he is for the ERA or against the ERA. That is not the issue. The issue is his attitude toward women in this country. He looks upon them as second-class citizens.

I frankly thought we had passed that point in our history a long time ago. But putting Justice Rehnquist on the Supreme Court as Chief Justice will be a throwback, will be a turning back of the clock to a time when some in this country were more superior than others; when those of certain races were more superior than those of other races; when men were more superior than women. Justice Rehnquist was pretty sure the equal protection clause did not require changes in this traditional role for women and he did not want an equal rights amendment which would change this tradition.

I respect his right to be opposed to the equal rights amendment. Every person has that right. I do not respect his right to think that women are inferior to men and, on that basis, to become the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Justice Rehnquist wanted to be sure that women kept their place. He did not believe in the equality of women under the Constitution then, and his overwhelming rejection of constitutional equality claims shows he does not believe in it now as a Justice of the Supreme Court.

The fact is, this view is totally reflected in his approach to the Constitution. Women do not get a fair shake under Justice Rehnquist.

Virtually every claim of discrimination is rejected.

Under Justice Rehnquist's view of our Constitution, women are second-class citizens and there is nothing they can do about it.

Then, when you look at Justice Rehnquist's attitude toward individual rights, you arrive at the same conclusion that leads you to say, "Why are we confirming him to become Chief Justice of the United States? Do those who intend to vote for him really understand all the facts? Have they studied the record? Have they studied his positions?"

Let us face it, Mr. President. In 1971, Justice Rehnquist was appointed. Many feared that he would be insensitive and actually hostile to individual rights claims. Those worst fears have been realized. More than insensitive, his record shows a consistent indifference to the rights of the disadvantaged minorities and women. He has just been insensitive to the problems and the cases that have been brought by the disadvantaged, by minorities, by women.

Time and time again, he is on that side and in many instances, he is on that side as the sole dissenter.

Ten years ago, a Harvard professor summed up Justice Rehnquist's individual rights record. He stated that in a case involving a claim by an individual against the Government, Justice Rehnquist almost always sided with the Government.

Is that not odd, when you stop to think about it? Is it not odd that this great conservative would always be for that big government against the individual? But that is his record on the Court.

You have to arrive at the same conclusion that that distinguished Harvard professor arrived at 10 years ago when you look at the record today. The record shows that he gives the Constitution very limited application when it comes to the individual's rights. He gives the individual very little constitutional protection. In Justice Rehnquist's view, the Constitution does not protect the individual from big government.

When you look at his record in race discrimination cases, he rejects almost all claims. I can understand somebody coming down with a conclusion that way maybe 60-40, 55-45, even 70-30. But in Justice Rehnquist's case, any member of the minority in this case who looks at that record and has a case before the Supreme Court has to be very concerned as to whether he or she is going to get equal justice, because in race discrimination cases, Justice Rehnquist rejects almost all claims.

He dissents from major school desegregation decisions. There are few decisions where he finds race discrimination and when he does, it is in cases where the Court is unanimous.

You never find him standing up for the rights of the minority, the rights of the individual, the rights of the disadvantaged in one of his well-known dissents. In the few cases where he is on the side of those against whom there has been racial discrimination, those are cases where the decision has been unanimous.

In sex discrimination cases, you find the same pattern. He rejects almost all constitutional sex discrimination cases. As a matter of fact, talking about civil rights cases, race discrimination, the NAACP Legal Defense Fund and the American Civil Liberties Union did an analysis of his decisions. When you read that analysis, there is only one conclusion: Justice Rehnquist is not fair. His justice is unbalanced when it comes to sex and racial discrimination cases.

When it comes to sex discrimination cases, the Federation of Women Lawyers and the National Organization for Women detail that record. I believe both of those analyses of the NAACP Legal Defense Fund and the ACLU, as well as the statement of the Federation of Women Lawyers and the National Organization for Women, have already been submitted for the RECORD and I shall not do so at this time.

Justice Rehnquist rejects all constitutional claims of prisoners and parolees. Neither the context nor the claim seems to matter. The prisoner or the parolee is guilty without coming before the Court.

He rejects almost all claims that the Government has violated the separation of church and state provisions of the Constitution. He takes extreme positions, too, on issues of individual rights.

He is the only Justice to say that the Government does not have to be neutral on religious issues. That decision was decided on a 6-3 basis, but he had a separate dissent in which he pointed out his view that the Government does not have to be neutral on religious issues.

Let me read what he said:

The Framers intended the Establishment Clause to prohibit the designation of any church as a "national" one. The Clause was also designed to stop the Federal Government from asserting a preference for one religious denomination or sect over others. Given the "incorporation" of the Establishment Clause as against the States via the Fourteenth Amendment in Everson, States are prohibited as well from establishing a religion or discriminating between sects. As its history abundantly shows, however, nothing in the Establishment Clause requires government to be strictly neutral between religion and irreligion, nor does that Clause prohibit Congress or the States from pursuing legitimate secular ends through nondiscriminatory sectarian means. . . .

That is the case of Wallace. Jaffree, 105 S. Ct. at page 2520, decided rather recently in 1985, with Justice Rehnquist dissenting.

Justice Rehnquist is the only Justice to say that the church can be given governmental power. That had to do with the right of a church to veto the issuance of liquor licenses, the right of a church to veto the issuance of a liquor license, but Justice Rehnquist felt that the church can be given governmental power.

He is the only Justice to say States can deny nonresident indigents medical care, in the case of Maricopa Hospital versus Maricopa County.

He is the only Justice to say that the free exercise clause does not apply to prisoners, in the case of Cruz versus Beto.

He is the only Justice to say that legal aliens can be barred from all civil service positions, in the case of Sugarman versus Dougall.

He is the only Justice to say that legal aliens can be barred from the professional engineering and notary public positions, in the case of Examining Board versus Flores De Otero and Bernal versus Fainter.

He is the only Justice to say that criminal trials can be closed to the public, in the case of Carter versus Kentucky.

He is the only Justice to say that permanent civil service workers may be terminated without notice or a hearing in the case of Cleveland versus Loudermill.

He is the only Justice to say that an ACLU Lawyer could be disciplined for telling a poor person that the ACLU gives free legal services, in the case of In Re Primus.

He is the only Justice to say that the IRS could give tax-exempt status to racially discriminatory private schools, in the case of Bob Jones University versus the United States.

We are talking about the record of a man whom we are asked to confirm as Chief Justice of the United States. It is a record of indifference to important individual rights. It is a record of indifference to the role of courts in the protection of individual rights.

Confirmation power must be used to uphold and strengthen our basic constitutional values. That is our obligation. That is the reason we are given the right to confirm members of the judiciary.

We undermine the importance of the individual and our constitutional system if we now confirm Justice Rehnquist to become Chief Justice of the United States.

We must consider the effect the person who holds this office will have on fundamental values. The selection of a Chief Justice is far too important to permit us to rubberstamp the President's choice. We must make our own judgment.

Justice Rehnquist is simply not the appropriate person to lead the Court. If we care at all about the importance of individual rights in this country, it is our duty, it is our obligation, it is our responsibility to oppose this nomination.

Mr. President: I ask unanimous consent that the following materials be made part of the RECORD:

First. A memorandum from Assistant Attorney General Rehnquist regarding the equal rights amendment.

Second. A letter of September 13, 1986, from the Society of American Law Teachers opposing the nomination of Justice Rehnquist.

Third. An updated list of 165 law professors who have signed a letter dated September 5, 1986, raising concerns about the nomination of Justice Rehnquist.

Fourth. A letter dated September 11, 1963, signed by 63 law professors, raising concerns about the participation of Justice Rehnquist in Laird versus Tatum.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MAY 4, 1970.

MEMORANDUM FOR THE HONORABLE LEONARD GARMENT, SPECIAL CONSULTANT TO THE PRESIDENT

Re: Proposed Equal Rights Amendment to the Constitution: Brief in Opposition

Brad Patterson advises me that you have already reviewed the memorandum for the Citizens Advisory Council on the Status of Women, prepared by Miss Mary Eastwood of my office, dealing with the proposed equal rights amendment.* I consider this memorandum an excellent brief in support of the adoption of the amendment. He suggested that I summarize objections to the adoption of the amendment, in order that both sides might be available to you. This I now do.

Summary

Under existing constitutional restrictions contained in the Fourteenth Amendment, women are presently in a position to successfully challenge any distinction in treatment between themselves and men which has no rational basis. Recent decisions of lower federal courts have included exclusion of women from juries and exclusion of them from public institutions of higher learning as falling within this catgegory. The proposed "equal rights amendment" is intended to virtually abolish all legal distinctions between men and women, leaving intact only laws punishing rape, laws providing maternity benefits, and separate rest rooms in public facilities.

I believe the basic policy objection that may be urged against the amendment is that its designed effect will not be to confer any benefits or privileges upon women, but instead to invalidate existing laws enacted on the theory that in some areas women were entitled to privileged and favorable treatment. It is highly dubious, in my mind, whether a great majority of American women, to say nothing of American men, if they knew that this were the main thrust of the "equal rights amendment", would support it. The consequences of a doctrinaire insistence upon rigid equality between men and women cannot be determined with certainty, but the results appear almost certain to have an adverse effect on the family unit as we have known it.

A second argument which may be urged against the amendment is that its language is so vague as to make it impossible to predict how the courts will apply it. Since its supporters rely for its content not upon the language itself, but upon a Senate report filed at one of the times it earlier passed the

*I have relied on Miss Eastwood's memorandum as a source of decided cases on the subject.

Senate, the question arises as to whether it might not be wiser to employ greater detail in drafting the amendment itself.

Existing state of law

Women received the right to vote on the same terms as men do by virtue of the Nineteenth Amendment to the Constitution. The equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment has also led some courts recently to invalidate, las violative of that provision of the Fourteenth Amendment, laws which either permitted or required women to be treated differently than men. For example, a three-judge federal court in Alabama held that that state's law excluding women for jury service violated the Fourteenth Amendment. Whits v. Crook, 251 F. Supp. 401 (M.D. Ala. 1966). A similar result, where a state trial court had excluded women jurors from the panel because testimony relating to cancer of male genital organs would be involved, was reached by the Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit in Abbot v. Mines. 411 F. 2d 353. Whereas only ten years ago the Supreme Court declined to hear a case in which a Texas state court had upheld the exclusion of women for Texas A & M, Allred v. Heaton, 364 U.S. 517 (1960), more recently lower federal courts in Connecticut and Virginia have indicated that female applicants to state institutions of higher learning must be treated on the same basis as male applicants are treated. A like result has been reached by the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania in Commonwealth v. Daniel, 430 Pennsylvania 642 (643 Atlantic 2d 400 (1968).

On the other hand, recent decisions of the federal courts indicate that favorable treatment for women, as opposed to men, in areas such as social security regulations relating to benefits, ineligibility for the draft, and restrictions on the hours of work for women, do not violate any constitutional provision. Gruenwald v. Gardner, 2d Cir., 591 (1968) (social security benefits); United States v. St. Clair, S.D. N.Y., 291 F. Supp. (1968) (draft eligibility; Mengelkoch v. Industrial Welfare Commission, C.D. Calif., 284 F. Supp. 950 (1968) (special restrictions on hours at work).

In other areas where differences of treatment accorded to women than to men are traditional, it seems doubtful whether under existing interpretation of the Constitution that these differences would be invalid. In many states, women may marry without parental consent at an earlier age than men; men may commence working at an earlier age than women without violation of the child labor statute; the parental obligation of support may be cut off with respect to daughters at an earlier age than it is to sons; the maximum age for juvenile court jurisdiction, as opposed to adult court jurisdiction, is frequently higher in the case of girls than of boys. The basis for sustaining such legal differentiation under the equal protection clause, of course, is that there is thought to be a rational basis in each case for treating women or girls differently than men or boys are treated.

The proposed equal rights amendment

The amendment contains the following language:

"Equality of rights under the law shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any state on account of sex.", and would contain further language authorizing Congress and the states to enforce the amendment by appropriate legislation.

Substantive effect of proposed amendment

The intended effect of the amendment, as gleaned from Miss Eastwood's memorandum, would be to prohibit virtually all distinctions between men and women presently embodied in the law. It is undoubtedly intended to have a broader sweep than the provisions of the Nineteenth Amendment and the Fourteenth Amendment as presently interpreted, and is apparently intended to wipe out virtually all distinctions which have previously been thought to accord women a preferred status under the law. The only two distinctions recognized in the Senate report, to which the women's rights advocates turn to explain the meaning of the generalized language of the amendment itself, would be laws which by their terms could only apply to one sex (maternity benefits, prohibition of rape), and regulations based on the right of privacy "in our present culture" (separate rest room facilities in public buildings).

Assuming that the intent of the amendment were clear, and that it accomplished pretty much what the Senate report said it would accomplish, there is in my mind a rather serious policy question as to whether most people, or indeed most women, would desire to have these results accomplished. Do a majority of women wish to be deprived of special protection in hazardous occupations? Do a majority of women wish to see their preferential treatment under the Social Security Act taken away? Do a majority of women wish to be eligible for the military draft? Put in broader terms, do a majority of women really wish to have the only distinction between themselves and men be the preservation of separate rest rooms in public buildings?

Undoubtedly many of the supporters of the equal rights for women amendment have rationally and carefully considered these questions, and have answered them in the affirmative. But I cannot help thinking that there is also present somewhere within this movement a virtually fanatical desire to obscure not only legal differentiation between men and women, but insofar as possible, physical distinctions between the sexes. I think there are overtones of dislike and distaste for the traditional differences between men and women in the family unit, and in some cases very probably a complete rejection of the woman's traditionally different role in this regard.

One practical effect of the amendment deserves attention, as an example of the sort of unsettling effect that the rigid doctrine of equality might have in many fields. [Traditionally, the domicile of a married woman has been that of her husband, and if the husband decides to move from Boston to Chicago in order to take a different job, the wife is legally obligated to accompany him (as well as being obligated by virtue of traditionaly marriage vows and most religious teaching).] The law makes an exception in the case where at the time the husband moves, the wife has grounds for separation or divorce. [The reason for the rule which the courts have traditionally given is that someone in the family must be vested with the power of decision as to where the family will locate, and that by custom and tradition the husband is invested with this authority.] While it is quite true that any family reduced to putting things in terms of the legal rights of its members may be in bad shape, a change in the law will undoubtedly have an effect on custom and practice. If there is to be change, a rule which would at least be workable would be one which placed the power of decision in the wife, rather than the husband. [But the equal rights amendment apparently would leave both parties with the power to decide this question—with a result which could indeed, to paraphrase a famous English author, turn "holy wedlock" into "holy deadlock".]

While each individual is (or she) certainly free to choose whichever view of this subject he prefers, there is to me a rather serious question as to whether the administration ought to support a constitutional change which appears to be aimed primarily not at granting to women any tangible improvement in their situation—indeed, its result might be quite the opposite—but instead to the granting to women of a rigid, doctrinaire equality in all respects with men.

Legal effect of proposed amendment

Just what the amendment would accomplish is not at all clear. This is not necessarily a criticism of it, for the Constitution has previously been amended in language of broad generality, the precise meaning of which was probably known to few of those who drafted it or concurred in its adoption. Obvious examples are the various general clauses of the Fourteenth Amendment. However, conceding that a certain amount of vagueness may be required in enunciating broad constitutional principles, the language of the equal rights amendment, taken in the context in which it is presented, is cause for concern.

The language itself admits of any number of interpretations. A court would not be irrational, taking only the operative language, in saying that it was intended to do no more than restate the requirement of the equal protection clause of the Fourteenth Amendment in the special context of women's rights. This construction would mean that no distinction between men and women is lawful unless it has a rational basis in fact. While such language would result in invalidating some existing legal distinctions between men and women (primarily those referred to in the earlier part of this memorandum) as having already been struck down by lower federal courts, such a constuction would have the serious drawback of accomplishing nothing that the existing Fourteenth Amendment did not already accomplish. In addition, the Senate report suggests that a much broader sweep is intended. These two arguments make it reasonably certain that the courts would reject such a construction as being too narrow.

At the other extreme, it is possible that a court could conclude as a result of the enactment of this amendment that no legal distinction between men and women was permissible, regardless of circumstances. Such a construction would, of course, run squarely into the rather obvious fact that women are physically different from men; that women bear children, and men do not; and also into the language of the proposed Senate report which itself concedes that at least separate rest rooms would remain constitutionally valid. For these reasons, I think the courts would reject so sweeping a construction of the proposed amendment as this.

The virtue of both of the foregoing constructions of the amendment—the one narrow, requiring only a rational basis in fact to sustain a classification, and the other broad, permitting no classification whatsoever, is that either of them would be relatively easy to apply. Rejection of both of them for the reasons above stated leaves one in a kind of murky middle ground, perhaps more sensible in many respects but nonetheless bringing with it great difficulties in knowing with any certainty what the amendment means.

One possible guide through the murk is the Senate report, containing the interpretation apparently desired by the proponents of the amendment. Summarizing the Senate report, difference in treatment between men's and women's property rights (dower, separate property in community property states, and the like), non-mandatory jury service, military service for women distinctions between the sexes as to domicile, alimony, child custody, and laws limiting employment of women in unusually strenuous or extra hazardous occupations would be unconstitutional. Absolute equality of access to educational facilities—presumably including West Point and Annapolis—would be required. Statutes punishing rape and prostitution would remain valid, and separate rest rooms in public facilities of course would be constitutionally permissible.

While it is not unusual to resort to legislative history in interpreting ambiguities of meaning in a statute, such resort is far less common in the case of constitutional amendments. The question that first arises is whether or not the courts would in fact do as the proponents seem to intend—treat the Senate report as a catalog of the changes which the amendment was designed to produce. The second question which arises is why, if this is the case, should not the amendment be revised to be made a good deal more specific, along the lines of the Senate report, in order to say that its supporters stated it is intended to say.

Federalism

Since the proposal is a constitutional amendment, there is no doubt that it may, consistent with the Constitution, accomplish the purpose for which it is designed, assuming that such purpose is clear from the language chosen. But I think that considerations of federalism to which the President and the Republican Party have been traditionally devoted may call for a somewhat less superficial inquiry than that. Since the states would play a part in the adoption of the proposed amendment, it would not be a case of the national government imposing its will on the state government. But the adoption of the amendment would nonetheless sharply restrict the power of the states, as well as of the national government, to engage in legislative adjustment and accommodation in what must surely be described as an area which does not lend itself to doctrinaire prescription. I believe one could feel that changes are desirable in the legal relationships between men and women and nonetheless feel that a rigid constitutional amendment such as this is not the way to seek those changes. If one were to feel that way, he would obviously also feel that the administration should not propose the amendment.

Conclusion

Justice Holmes once made the comment that it would take more than the Nineteenth Amendment to convince him that there was no difference between men and women. [I have the impression that a large number of the country's women, as well as almost all of the country's men, would like to see some of the laws based on physical differences constitutionally permissible, even though they share the desire of many women to do away with laws which irrationally differentiate in their treatment of men and women.] All of this can be accomplished under the existing language of the Fourteenth Amendment. The effort to go further and strike down all legal differentiation, rational or irrational, as a matter of constitutional law is one which should give serious pause. [The overall implication of the equal rights amendment is nothing less than the sharp reduction in importance of the family unit, which the eventual elimination of that unit by no means improbable.] It may be that the country is heading in this direction anyway, and that there is very little that the administration can do to stop it. But this surely does not mean that the administration ought to support a change which will in fact hasten the dissolution of the family.

WILLIAM H. REHNQUIST,
Assistant Attorney General,
Office of Legal Counsel.

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN LAW TEACHERS, UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA SCHOOL OF LAW, Davis, CA, September 13, 1986.

MEMBERS OF THE U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC.

I write on behalf of the Society of American Law Teachers (SALT) to oppose the nomination of William H. Rehnquist to become Chief Justice of the United States. The Society of American Law Teachers is a membership organization of individual law professors. We are unique among organizations in legal education because we represent the views of individual teachers, rather than those of our affiliated institutions. Our opposition reflects the unanimous opinion of the members of the Board of Governors at the end of an extensive internal debate.

We fully recognize the President's power to select a Chief Justice who shares his own political views. Our objection to this nomination does not stem from political opposition. Our views rest instead on two grounds. First, we have concluded that the serious questions of ethical impropriety arising from Justice Rehnquist's participation in Laird v. Tatum simply cannot be resolved in his favor. Secondly, we have grave reservations about his record of demonstrated hostility to the constitutional ideals of equality and individual rights.

We turn first to the question of integrity and ethics. We have found it difficult, to overlook the serious questions of credibility arising from the nominee's disturbing memory lapses concerning controverted matters of the gravest national importance. Our concern here rests not on a single occurrence, but rather on a cumulation. We find it difficult to avoid the conclusion that Justice Rehnquist has failed to meet the test of Canon 2 of the Code of Judicial Conduct which requires that he conduct "himself at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary." We have read the opinion letter of September 8, 1986 from Professor Geoffrey Hazard to Senator Charles Mathias, and the comprehensive analysis of Professor Floyd Feeney and Mr. Barry Mahoney. Professor Hazard notes that Justice Rehnquist "had a duty of order to the Senate in answering questions concerning Laird v. Tatum . . . (he) complied with (that) duty only if his statement is accepted that he had 'no recollection of any participation in the formulation of policy on the use of military to conduct surveillance.'" Professor Hazard observed that "whether that statement should be accepted is a matter of judgment." It is the judgment of the Society of American Law Teachers that this lapse cannot be accepted.

We are guided by our roles as teachers of the future lawyers who will serve the citizens of this country. We are concerned that the message we will send to the next generation of lawyers is one of cynicism for law. Our concern in this regard extends as well to members of the general public. Today the honesty and integrity of every lawyer is subject to doubt in the minds of many members of the public. We fear irreversible damage to public confidence in the integrity of the judicial branch if Justice Rehnquist is confirmed. The office of Chief Justice is unique in our constitutional government. Only 15 citizens have served this country in that capacity. The Chief Justice must embody the spirit of our highest aspirations for honest, impartial judicial conduct. Both our students and the general public will find much to confirm the cynicism about which we are concerned. We have come slowly, and painfully to the conclusion that the honesty and integrity of this high office will be seriously degraded if this nominee, is confirmed.

A second, and equally critical factor in our decision to recommend that you withhold your consent from this nomination, is our concern that the candidate has a consistent, demonstrated hostility to the constitutional values of equality. We base our view in this regard upon our assessment of his non-judicial conduct. The confirmation hearings revealed many things about the Justice's conduct before he joined the Court. We are disturbed by the contradictions of eyewitnesses concerning Justice Rehnquist's involvement in partisan challenges to minority voters. We are disturbed by the reports of memoranda prepared by the Justice while he was a law clerk and in a second instance, while he was an Assistant Attorney General in the Justice Department. In the first instance, he is reported to have stated the view that Brown v. Board of Education was wrongly decided. In the second instance, he is reported to have expressed views concerning the role of women in the family that are so extreme as to under cut our confidence in his fidelity to the constitutional ideal of equality.

For all of the reasons stated above, we urge you to withhold your consent, or in the alternative to return this nomination to the Judiciary Committee.

Sincerely,

ERMA COLEMAN JORDAN,
President.

TO THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES,
SEPTEMBER 5, 1986

We the undersigned members of the law teaching profession ask that the Senate of the United States weigh with especially solemn deliberation the nomination of Justice William Rehnquist as Chief Justice. We ask this for two reasons.

First, it will take a conscious effort to resist the tendency to accept as determinative the 13-5 vote of the Judiciary Committee. The unanimous vote of the same Committee in favor of Judge Scalia proves that the opposition to Justice Rehnquist was not, as has been asserted, based solely on politically or ideologically motivated grounds. Five votes against a sitting Justice is really reason for pause. The conscience-searching questions that Senator Leahy wrestled with are matters that every Senator must, in fidelity, decide upon alone in a quiet place and time, away from the political arena. We ask therefore that each of you resist the political push and decide this most important appointment of all as a matter of individual conscience.

The second reason that we ask for this extraordinary personal effort from every single Senator, even those who voted favorably in Committee, is related to the first. As teachers we are troubled by a growing cynicism among our students, particularly with respect to ethics in government. Paradoxically, in the post-Watergate period, proof of statutory crime is becoming the standard by which we measure the highest officials of the land. This perception must be changed. If history and tradition are guides, the Senate and the Judiciary are the institutions that can best signal that change. In many respects then this very significant confirmation hearing has become a testing ground for the ethical standards of this nation.

The questions that have been raised about Chief Justice designate William Rehnquist are varied. Nevertheless there is a common and disturbing thread that runs through all of the matters that have been raised at the hearings. That common thread pertains to the integrity and ethical standards of the nominee. And taking the character measure of judicial candidates is the primary duty of the Senate under the Advice and Consent clause.

The doubts that have been expressed about Justice Rehnquist's fitness arise not only from the particular charges of improper behavior but also from the responses in each instance the nominee has made to the charges. These charges and the responses are summarized below.

(1) First there is the response to the charges of voter harassment in the Arizona elections. In his testimony at the recent hearings and after the first confirmation hearing Mr. Rehnquist claimed that he had not personally challenged a voter on literacy grounds and that in any event literacy challenges were then legal under Arizona law. But the testimony against him and his own admissions establish that he at least knew what was going on and participated in some manner in the strategy of challenging voters at the polling places. Such strategy was bound to and indeed did involve intimidation and delay, as witnesses testified. Nevertheless, to this day Justice Rehnquist sees little wrong with what took place there because no technical violation of the law had been proven. There is a question of moral obtuseness in this response that we ask our Senators to reflect upon as they consider the other charges that have been raised.

(2) With respect to the restrictive convenants it is not a matter of what he did or failed to do, but likewise a question of his response to the existence of such obnoxious clauses. One response he made was that the clauses were unenforcible, again revealing a lack of appreciation for the ethical and symbolic dimensions of law. But he also said that he did not know of the existence of these clauses, an explanation that was only plausible if he had left the reading of his deeds to his lawyers. After the hearings however, he turned over a letter from one of his lawyers in which the restrictive covenant language was explicitly drawn to Justice Rehnquist's attention. This seemed to refute the Justice's testimony that he had no prior knowledge of the offensive language, or worse, it suggested that he felt compelled to correct his testimony because one of his lawyers was unwilling to accept the implied blame for failing to address the question of the restrictive convenants. We ask our Senators to consider what this initial willingness to implicitly shift blame to his lawyers for failing to do anything about such covenants in the deeds says about the integrity of the nominee.

(3) This same willingness to shift blame for an embarassment or a misdeed is also possibly revealed in the manner in which Justice Rehnquist responded to the questions about the memorandum opinion he drafted while clerking for Justice Robert Jackson. Notwithstanding the fact that there is no historic evidence that Justice Jackson ever supported the separate but equal doctrine, Mr. Rehnquist intimated that Jackson was considering a dissent in the Brown case. Holding the views expressed in that memorandum opinion in the fifties is not nearly as bad as disowning them and implied assigning them to someone of whose reputation the nominee, as a former clerk, should be solicitous. We ask once more that our Senators consult their collective experience about human behavior and apply this to the pattern of responses the candidate has made to the various charges brought against him.

(4) There have been charges by Justice Rehnquist's brother-in-law of a breach of ethics in connection with a trust fund. Such charges would be the basis of a bar committee investigation if lodged against an ordinary attorney. So far there has been no response from Justice Rehnquist and to the best of our knowledge no investigation by an official body.

(5) Lastly, in the light of the foregoing, we ask our Senators to review in close detail the explicit charge of the failure of judicial ethics arising from the refusal of Justice Rehnquist to disqualify himself in the case of Laird v. Tatum. Perhaps this is the most significant matter because in this instance the response to an ethical demand is largely set forth in the words of Justice Rehnquist for all to read and fairly judge.

In a memorandum submitted to the Judiciary Committee Professor Askin of Rutgers Law School has emphasized one basis for questioning the judicial ethics of the nominee. That basis was that testimony before the Ervin Committee by then Assistant Attorney General Rehnquist revealed that he had knowledge of or had formed an opinion about facts that were in dispute in Laird v. Tatum and were depositive of one of the questions before the Court. This point is clearly made by Professor Askin and we simply ask every Senator to study Professor Askin's submission with care. But there are two other points that require less careful study and these points raise serious questions of intellectual honesty.

When the subject of the Army surveillance of civilians came up at Mr. Rehnquist's first confirmation hearings he said that it would be improper for him to comment on issues involving the surveillance investigation because of his "lawyer-client relationship" with the President and Attorney General. Laird v. Tatum dealt specifically with the subject of the Army surveillance of civilians yet Justice Rehnquist stated his relationship to the subject under review very differently in his recusal opinion. There he said "that my total lack of connection with . . . the case of Laird v. Tatum does not suggest discretionary disqualification here because of my previous relationship with the Justice Department." Although Mr. Rehnquist declined to testify before the Senate Committee, once on the Court he had no difficulty deciding a case that dealt with the very subject for which he had claimed an attorney-client privilege.

The same issue of intellectual honesty appeared even more plainly perhaps in another portion of his recusal opinion. Justice Rehnquist dismissed the applicablity of the Canons for "Standards of Judicial Conduct" by describing them as "not materially different from the standards enunciated in the [federal disqualification] statute." The statute, in pertinent part, required disqualification in any case where a justice "has a substantial interest, [or] has been of counsel or has been a material witness." The Canons, which were not set forth in the opinion, in pertinent part state:" A judge should disqualify himself in a proceeding in which his impartiality might reasonably be questioned including but not limited to instances where: (a) he has . . . personal knowledge of disputed evidentiary facts concerning the proceeding; (b) he served as a lawyer in the matter in controversy . . . ." We ask the Senators whether under any interpretation of language these two standards honestly can be described as "not materially different."

The matters that appear on the face of the Laird v. Tatum disqualification case as well as the responses to all the other matters previously summarized are not political attacks nor are they trivial. Each of them relate directly to the central issues of integrity, honesty and character. Whatever the outcome of the confirmation vote, Mr. Justice Rehnquist will sit on the Supreme Court. The ultimate question that each Senator must answer is whether Justice William Rehnquist, in the words of Canon 2 of the Code of Judicial Conduct of the American Bar Association, has conducted "himself at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary." If a Senator entertains the slightest doubt on that question with respect to the nominee for the highest judicial post in the land we humbly ask that consent be withheld and the President be advised to submit the name of a candidate who unequivocally meets the demanding standards the people have the right to expect.

Hon. STROM THURMOND,
Chairman, Judiciary Committee, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR SENATOR THURMOND: This letter concerns the memorandum entitled "An Analysis of the Public Records Concerning Justice Rehnquist's participation in Laird v. Tatum," which was submitted to the Senate Judiciary Committee on September 5, 1986.

The memorandum is now being circulated among law teachers. The professors whose names appear on the attached sheets have indicated their belief that the issues raised by Justice Rehnquist's participation in Laird v. Tatum are of serious concern and should be investigated further by the Senate.

Yours respectfully,

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, today we debate, tomorrow we vote on a nominee to the position of Chief Justice of the United States. The words in the title fairly describe the position: Chief Justice of the United States.

With the single exception of the Presidency, no public office in our Nation possesses greater honor and responsibility.

The Chief Justice of the United States is the symbol of the central fact of our system of government: That every American is bound by the rule of law, that every American should stand equal before the law.

That is an ideal frequently expressed but rarely attained in the history of human societies.

It is a measure of the boundless confidence and optimism of Americans that we have set for ourselves so high a standard and that we struggle so resolutely to attain it, rising from each failure to an even greater effort.

In that effort our Supreme Court is central. Again and again in our history, the Court has reaffirmed and preserved the rule of law. In 1974, within the memory of every sitting Senator, the Court compelled the most powerful person on Earth, the President of the United States, to act against his will and against his interest. To the amazement of the world and the delight of Americans, we were again reassured that it is not empty rhetoric to say that, in America, everyone, even the President, must obey the law.

The immense power of American courts is not based upon force. Our courts have no independent means of enforcing their judgments. Their power rests ultimately upon public respect for their rulings.

Nowhere is that moral authority greater or more important than in the Supreme Court of the United States.

The Supreme Court is the final arbiter because it is the final forum.

It is also the forum to which the lower courts, the State courts and our citizens look for the judgments that inform and define our society.

When the Court construes the law, it not only chooses among competing rights and values. It helps shape those rights and the society which lives by those values.

On average, 4,000 cases are appealed to the Supreme Court each year. Of those 4,000 cases, the Court will hear and issue written decisions in roughly 150. The decisions it chooses not to make are often as significant as those it makes.

The choice of the Chief Justice is, therefore, a decision of immense significance.

The President has chosen to nominate Associate Justice William Rehnquist to this position.

Justice Rehnquist has served on the Supreme Court for 15 years. His opinions have been praised by some and criticized by others. His fluency has served to clarify some issues and it has served to obfuscate others, as fluency can do.

It is primarily on the basis of those opinions that the Senate should consider his elevation to Chief Justice of the United States.

Unfortunately, because of controversies involving the nominee's personal behavior, the hearings before the Judiciary Committee did not adequately focus on the most important part of his record.

Some of the controversies aired at the hearings are troubling.

But how many of us who have been long active in government could stand to have our every activity investigated, researched, and picked over, in some instances decades after the fact?

I doubt that a hearing process designed to elicit perfection can ever do more than demonstrate what all of us already know: Perfection does not exist in the human condition.

Therefore, while I am concerned about, ever troubled by some aspects of Justice Rehnquist's personal behavior, I do not find them individually, or in the aggregate, a sufficient basis to vote against him.

I refer specifically to the questions raised about Justice Rehnquist's candor, or lack of it, at the hearings on his original appointment to the Court and on his recent nomination to be Chief Justice; his purchase of homes through deeds which contained restrictive convenants; his refusal to withdraw from deciding a case in which he had previously been involved; and his participation in a voter challenge program in Phoenix in the early 1960's.

I will comment briefly on each of these aspects of his record.

It is clear from the record of both hearings that Justice Rehnquist was often vague and nonresponsive in his answers to questions. He also revealed a disturbing pattern of an occasionally clear ability to remember some events alongside a frequent inability to recall others. But there is no substantial evidence of false testimony.

That may be a sadly low standard, but the modern hearing process on Presidential nominations virtually invites such a course of action by witnesses. When a single contradiction or conflict in testimony may be pounced upon as evidence of disqualification, nominees are understandably reluctant to test their memories.

They do and will increasingly seek refuge in the safety of "I don't recall." That neither confirms nor denies the fact in question, leaving the witness flexibility if later evidence is convincing one way or the other.

Given the open hostility of some of his questioners and their previously stated determination to prevent his confirmation, it is not surprising that Justice Rehnquist was as wary and noncommittal as he could be.

I regret that. But it is a fact. Each of us must therefore decide whether his answers to questions were false, or otherwise of a nature to disqualify him from serving as Chief Justice. I conclude they were not.

The second aspect of Justice Rehnquist's behavior to be questioned was his purchase of two homes through deeds with racially restrictive covenants. Such covenants are unfortunately an all-to-common relic of past racism in our society. Justice Rehnquist first said he was unaware of the covenants, then said he did know of one of them when it was disclosed that his attorney had written him a letter calling the covenant too his attention. In any event, the circumstances are too common and the matter to insubstantial to disqualify Justice Rehnquist from serving as Chief Justice.

The refusal of Justice Rehnquist to recuse himself in the case of Laird versus Tatum, by contrast, seems to me to carry with it an implication of insensitivity to what is an important concern for a judge—the appearance of prejudgment, bias or unfairness.

In Laird versus Tatum, Justice Rehnquist in 1972 made the decision that, despite his earlier advocacy of the Nixon administration's position, which the plaintiffs in the case challenged, he was not precluded from sitting in judgment on the outcome of the case.

His response to a request for his abstention took the form of a memorandum in which he set forth his view of the law, and the duty he said it imposed on him to participate in deciding the case.

That memorandum attempted to draw parallels between the case at hand and the experience of other Justices who had been involved in legislative work upon whose constitutionality they later ruled. But it markedly did not contrast the distinction between generalized advocacy of a policy position and his substantial role in the military surveillance issue, where he had actively participated in developing the policy and had previously testified before Senator Ervin's Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights that the judgment in Laird versus Tatum should lie against the plaintiffs.

The law at the time required recusal in conflicts of interest or instances where a judge had been "of counsel" or so closely connected to a party in the proceedings that his participation in the decision might be affected.

Laird versus Tatum raises the question of when a judge should recuse himself in the absence of a personal financial interest but where there is a personal belief so strongly held that it may tend to override the constraints of the law.

Our laws are written and intended to safeguard against "well meaning men of zeal" as well as against potential tyrants. They are intended to withstand passions, and to hold fast to certain central values against the tides of political, ideological, and circumstantial demand.

When a judge is particularly enamored of his point of view and persuaded that it must prevail, self-restraint is particularly important. When a man's career has involved the spirited defense of a policy, as in this case, it is particularly important that the risk of prejudgment be weighed and the appearance of bias fully evaluated.

Justice Rehnquist clearly gave considerable thought to the case, as his lengthy memorandum of explanation demonstrates. I am not persuaded, however, that he gave as much thought to the risk of bias as to the justification of his decision.

The law at the time left the determination to a justice's own opinion of his rightness to sit, although the American Bar Association's Code of Judicial Ethics also indicated that even an appearance of bias ought to argue for recusal. The ABA Code was virtually enacted as statutory law in 1973, in part because of Justice Rehnquist's refusal to abstain in Laird versus Tatum, and in the hearings, he indicated that if the same situation were covered by the current language of the law, he might not reach the same conclusion.

I find this episode troubling, because a judge, above others, ought to be impressed with the importance of abiding by the spirit as well as the literal letter of the law.

I conclude that Justice Rehnquist made a mistake, a serious error in judgment, and that he would act differently if he had to do it over again. But I do not believe that this one mistake is sufficient in itself, nor does it fit into a pattern of such errors, to disqualify him from serving as Chief Justice.

□ 1600

(Mr. STAFFORD assumed the chair.)

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, the fourth and final area of alleged questionable behavior is Justice Rehnquist's participation in a voter challenge program in Phoenix in the 1960's. Phoenix at the time was a racially divided and politically conscious city in which both parties competed zealously.

The voter challenge project was clearly an effort by Republicans to reduce voting by blacks and Hispanics because of their presumed inclination to vote Democratic. It rested upon intimidation and represented a conscious effort to deny some citizens the right to vote.

Although not illegal at the time, it was deplorable. But there were parallel activities by Democrats in the city, whose busing of black and Hispanic voters to the polls late on election day was intended to keep the polls open, probably encouraged some illegal voting, and no doubt fed the fears of Republicans about illegal voting.

Much testimony was presented on the question of whether or not Mr. Rehnquist actually challenged voters. Even assuming he did, I would not find this a sufficient basis to disqualify him from serving as Chief Justice, if it were an isolated instance, or even one of a few instances, of hostility toward minorities and their rights, or if there were any evidence that his views on this issue had moderated over time.

But this was not an isolated instance. And there is no evidence that Justice Rehnquist's views have moderated at all.

Indeed, his participation in the voter challenge program, while not sufficient by itself to deny him confirmation, is one link in an unbroken chain of deeds and words demonstrating insensitively, even hostility, to the rights of women and minorities, especially black Americans.

Race has been the most deeply divisive issue in American history. For nearly the first century of our national existence, slavery and questions over its extension into an expanding America divided our people and wracked our society with violence. The Supreme Court's decision in the Dred Scott case was one of the most significant in our history. It led directly to the supreme American tragedy of the Civil War.

The result of that war and the passage in its aftermath of the 13th, 14th, and 15th amendments did not, as most Americans hoped and believed, resolve the race issue. Not until 1965, 100 years later, did Congress finally secure the right of black Americans to exercise the most fundamental right in a free society—the right to vote. To this very day, over a century later, race remains a thorn deep in the American side.

But whatever else the American people believe, it is clear that the overwhelming majority of them are convinced that ours should never again be a segregated society. There can be no turning back.

If nothing else, the welling up of emotion in this country against the continuance of apartheid in South Africa is a measure of that attitude.

Unfortunately, tragically, on that most fundamental question, it is clear that Justice Rehnquist does not share the sentiments of most of his fellow citizens.

From 1952 to 1986, by his words and his deeds, Justice Rehnquist has displayed total and unremitting hostility toward the rights of women and minorities, especially black Americans, and a deeply troubling willingness to condone, if not support, a segregated society.

Let me touch on some of the facts which have led me to this sad conclusion.

In 1896, in the case of Plessy versus Ferguson, the Supreme Court upheld racial segregation in public services—in this instance, railroad carriages—by establishing the principle of "separate but equal."

That principle prevailed until 1954 when, in its historic decision in Brown versus Board of Education, the Court reversed Plessy and prohibited segregation in the public schools. Other than the Civil War itself, the Brown decision is perhaps the most significant event in America's long and painful march toward social justice.

Robert Jackson was an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court at the time and William Rehnquist was his law clerk. During the Court's consideration of the Brown case, Rehnquist wrote a memorandum urging Justice Jackson to reaffirm Plessy and sustain the principle of segregated schools.

Rehnquist's later explanation, made after Jackson's death, that he was reflecting Justice Jackson's views, not his own, is wholly unconvincing. For one thing, Jackson voted to reverse Plessy. For another, there is nothing in Jackson's record to suggest that he supported segregated schools, while there is a great deal in Rehnquist's record to suggest that he did. And finally, others with intimate knowledge of Jackson have sharply disputed Rehnquist's explanation.

In a 1976 book entitled "Simple Justice," the author, Richard Kluger, makes it clear that Mr. Rehnquist's explanation is highly improbable. And Justice Jackson's long-time secretary said that Mr. Rehnquist's explanation was "incredible on its face" and "smeared the reputation of a great Justice."

The weight of evidence strongly supports the conclusion that in 1952, William Rehnquist believed in segregation in American public schools. His later actions confirm that conclusion.

In 1954, after the second Brown decision, Mr. Rehnquist wrote another memorandum urging that Justice Jackson upheld a Texas law which permitted only whites to vote in primary elections. He wrote:

> It is about time the Court faced the fact that white people in the south don't like the colored people; the constitution did not appoint the Court as a social watchdog to rear up every time private discrimination raises its admittedly ugly head.

In 1957, the citizens of Phoenix debated a plan to end racial segregation in their public schools. Mr. Rehnquist publicly opposed the plan.

In 1964, the Phoenix City Council adopted an ordinance prohibiting segregation in public accommodations. Mr. Rehnquist testified against the ordinance before its adoption, and later criticized it as a mistake.

During his service in the Justice Department in 1970, Mr. Rehnquist recommended a constitutional amendment as a response to court challenges to segregated school systems.

He wrote in one memo, "the arguments in favor of doing it by a constitutional amendment heavily predominate" over the enactment of a statute, because "what is validated by statute may likewise be invalidated by repeal. * * *"

In a second memo written 2 days later, he elaborated that the language of such an amendment ought to substitute the "classical due process 'rational connection' test for a test of actual intent," reasoning that "it is simply not feasible to try, as an issue of fact in a law suit, the intent of a multi-member school board."

Mr. Rehnquist's subsequent career on the bench has not deviated one iota from that 1970 reasoning. Despite the finding by the Court that a discriminatory outcome is a sufficient basis to alter public policies, Justice Rehnquist has pursued the reasoning of Deputy Attorney General Rehnquist in a series of dissents demanding proof of intent to discriminate.

In a 1973 dissent in the Keyes case, which challenged de facto segregation in Denver, CO, schools, he wrote that the Constitution does not "require school boards to affirmatively undertake to achieve racial mixing in the schools." He has continued to insist that specific intent to discriminate be proved in virtually any vindication of 14th amendment rights, no matter how much the result may discriminate. Adoption of his view would hinder a constitutional right meaningless. Because a right which cannot be enforced is a right which does not exist.

Many Americans, including high public officials, held views similar to Mr. Rehnquist's in the 1950's and 1960's. As our society has changed, most of them have also changed. But not William Rehnquist. What is most striking and disturbing about him is the rigid consistency of his views on minorities, especially racial minorities, long after times have passed him and his views by.

One searches in vain for some evolution, some moderation of his views, some balancing action to his earlier embrace of segregation. Sadly, as Mr. Rehnquist himself confirmed, one finds nothing. In response to a question during the hearings, he said he could not recall a single civil rights statute that he had publicly supported.

Since joining the Supreme Court in 1971, Justice Rehnquist's opinions and other writings have confirmed his hard, unyielding hostile attitude toward minorities.

According to the Leadership Conference on Civil Rights, a detailed analysis of his record on the Court reveals that:

In the 83 cases in which Justice Rehnquist has participated in which there has been disagreement within the Court as to the interpretation or application of a 20th Century Civil Rights statute (more than a dozen laws covering employment, housing, voting, and federal assistance programs, and prohibiting discrimination on a variety of grounds), Justice Rehnquist has joined on 80 occasions the interpretation or application least favorable to minorities, women, the elderly or the disabled; in two more, his interpretation was less favorable than that adopted by the majority and in only one did he vote for the interpretation advanced by the civil rights plaintiffs.

These statutory cases are . . . particularly important to an understanding of Justice Rehnquist's approach to civil rights cases, for a number of reasons:

(a) because these cases involve the interpretation of statutes, a justice's constitutional philosophy should have little impact on his/her decision.

(b) Justice Rehnquist's asserted concern, in constitutional cases, to avoid if possible overriding the will of the majority as expressed in the challenged legislation should have no bearing in these cases where the Court is asked to enforce the majority will as expressed by Congress.

(c) before he became a justice, Mr. Rehnquist on several occasions expressed opposition to adopting civil rights measures.

One of these cases, Bob Jones University versus United States is especially troubling, both because it is so recent and because Justice Rehnquist's lone dissent seems so wrong, so strained, so demonstrative of his inability to give expression to any civil right.

In that dissent, Justice Rehnquist not only chose to ignore the very clear choices the Congress had made not to overturn the IRS efforts—and even he was forced to admit that congressional action on this score did not comport with this preferred point of view—he reached out to suggest that if Congress wanted to do so, it could and perhaps even ought to enact legislative language enshrining racist schools as a common law charity.

Speaking for the Court in Bob Jones, Chief Justice Warren Burger wrote:

There can no longer be any doubt that racial discrimination in education violates deeply and widely accepted views of elementary justice. Prior to 1954, public education in many places still was conducted under the pall of Plessy v. Ferguson; racial segregation in primary and secondary education prevailed in many parts of the country . . . The Court's decision in Brown v. Board of Education signaled an end to that era. Over the past quarter of a century, every pronouncement of this Court and myriad Acts of Congress and Executive Orders attest a firm national policy to prohibit racial segregation and discrimination in public education.

An unbroken line of cases following Brown v. Board of Education establishes beyond doubt this Court's view that racial discrimination in education violates a most fundamental national public policy, as well as rights of individuals.

That is the end of the quotation by Chief Justice Burger who, when he wrote those words, wrote for every other Justice of the Supreme Court, except one, except for Justice Rehnquist.

And Chief Justice Burger wrote for more than just the Supreme Court. The overwhelming majority of the American people, the overwhelming majority of the Congress, including members of both parties, all agree that racial discrimination in education violates a most fundamental national policy.

Justice Rehnquist alone does not join this view, nor share the view of Justice Burger and the other members of the Court. Rather than moderating over time, his judgment has, if anything, hardened.

To those who say that Justice Rehnquist's support for segregation in the 1950's and the 1960's is a thing of the past, the Bob Jones case stands as an effective response. That decision came in the 1980's, a dozen years after he joined the Supreme Court.

The Judiciary Committee hearings focused heavily on Mr. Rehnquist's role in the voter challenge program in Phoenix in the 1960's, to which I have already referred. To me, the significance of these events lies primarily in their confirmation of his attitude toward black and other minority Americans.

Standing alone, his participation in this effort is insufficient to deny him the position of Chief Justice, even if one accepts the version of events most adverse to him. But as another link in an unbroken chain of hostility toward minorities, his participation is compelling evidence, especially when what was at stake was the fundamental right in a free society—the right to vote.

On September 8, 1986, the American Civil Liberties Union, which takes no position respecting the confirmation process, released a detailed report on the civil liberties record of Justice William Rehnquist.

I would like now to quote from the summary contained in that report:

Two propositions are central to Justice Rehnquist's civil liberties record and the degree to which his views differ from those of every Justice with whom he has served on the Court.

First, he believes that it is far worse to hold a statute unconstitutional than to deny an individual his/her civil rights. Second, he believes that the Bill of Rights as applied to the states prevents them from encroaching on the rights of individuals only when the state action is "irrational."

In Justice Rehnquist's opinion, the primary responsibility of the Supreme Court is to protect the freedom of action of the states against the action of the federal government and the claims of rights by individual citizens. In interpreting federal legislation or actions of the federal courts which affect the powers of the states, he interprets the constitution so as to preserve state autonomy. In dealing with individual liberty, on the other hand, he does not believe that the courts should go beyond the literal words of the Constitution or the original intentions of the Framers.

Thus, he rejects the view that the Supreme Court has a special obligation to defend individual liberty and rejects the position, often expressed in the opinions of the Court, that the Bill of the Rights as a whole, and the First Amendment in particular, have a favored place in the Constitutional scheme.

This approach to the Constitution—viewing it as the creation of the majority whose primary objective was to preserve the power of the States—also determines Justice Rehnquist's view of the Civil War Amendments. Every other sitting Justice has come to accept the position that the Fourteenth Amendment "incorporates" the major provisions of the Bill of Rights and therefore requires the states to observe these limits on governmental action to the same degree that the federal government is limited. Justice Rehnquist, in marked contrast, views the civil War Amendments as having only very limited Applicability. Writing on a clean slate, Justice Rehnquist would reject the doctrine of incorporation entirely and would permit the states to restrict the liberty of their citizens within limits prescribed by their state constitutions and those few rights in the federal constitution that apply explicitly to the states. Justice Rehnquist mentions this position only in passing in his opinions, and focuses instead on the very narrow reading that he would give to the applicability of the Bill of Rights to the states.

The civil liberties record of Justice Rehnquist is most succinctly summarized in his opinion of how a justice should weigh the relative harms of denying a person rights under the Constitution and striking down a legislative act in Furman versus Georgia:

An error in mistakenly sustaining the constitutionality of a particular enactment, while wrongfully depriving the individual of a right secured to him by the Constitution, nonetheless does so by simply letting stand a duly enacted law of a democratically chose legislative body. The error resulting from a mistaken upholding of an individual's constitutional claim against the validity of a legislative enactment is a good deal more serious. For the result in such a case is not to leave standing a law duly enacted by a representative assembly, but to impose upon the nation the judicial fiat of a majority of a court of judges whose connection with the popular will is remote at best.

That is the end of the quotation of Justice Rehnquist. I now return to the Civil Liberties Union summary.

To the extent that the Bill of Rights and the Civil War Amendments were designed precisely to limit the popular will when it impinges on individual rights, Justice Rehnquist's view is inconsistent with the functional purpose of the Bill of Rights and the generally accepted role of the federal courts in enforcing it.

Some in this debate have urged that Senators not weight ideology or philosophy when considering judicial nominations. But nowhere in the Constitution or in our laws or in our tradition are either the President or the Senate prohibited from considering philosophy or ideology. The President plainly and openly does so. Any Senator may, if he or she chooses, do so as well.

The question itself involves a kind of situational ethics which brings out the worst in both sides. When a liberal like Abe Fortas was nominated for Chief Justice, conservatives argued that ideology must be considered while liberals said it should not be. Now that the conservative Justice Rehnquist is nominated, their positions on the question have been reversed, thus undermining the credibility of both sides.

For me the decisive standards for us to consider was set by Justice Rehnquist himself, when in response to a question by Senator SIMON at the recent hearings he said:

• • • Have I fairly construed the constitution in my 15 years as Associate Justice?

To answer that question one must necessarily examine the Justice's view of the Constitution, the Court, and their roles in our society.

We must inquire into his philosophy, study his judicial decisions, and search the underlying premises he brings to the Court.

Nobody denies, least of all Justice Rehnquist himself, that he is a man of strongly held opinions about the proper role of Government and about the undesirability of nonelected judges arrogating to themselves powers which are properly within the province of the popularly elected branches of Government.

Such opinions represent no bar to confirmation. No sensible person would claim that a nominee to any court ought to be so free of opinions as to present a blank slate.

All the judges on the Court have ideas, opinions, philosophies and predispositions, just like everyone else. Nor is the document they are sworn to uphold a mathematically precise blueprint which need only be read for the meaning to become clear.

Constitutional phrases such as "due process of law" and "equal treatment under law" have no innate content. Content derives from existing circumstances, judicial precedent, traditional practice, and the philosophy of the individuals construing the words. Constitutional precision is reserved for relatively trivial matters—like the minimum age of the President.

Judges can no more avoid importing their beliefs and priorities into the Constitution's general commands than they can avoid thinking. So the argument that we cannot examine or take into account a nominee's philosphy seems to be a way of saying we cannot take anything at all into account.

As a former Federal judge, I am acutely conscious of the importance of preserving both the reality and the appearance of independence on the part of the judiciary. Judges ought not be required to advise in advance what judgments they may reach; nor should they be held to account for opinions they have delivered.

Under our system, the independence is secured by lifetime tenure and constitutional proscriptions against reducing judges' salaries. Judges are immunized against retribution for their actions on the bench.

But neither Justice Rehnquist's independence nor his future integrity are compromised by a debate over his work on the Court. Indeed, it is hard to see what could be more proper than to judge his fitness for the prospective post by the qualities he has exhibited in his current post.

On the Court, Justice Rehnquist has consistently pursued the primary goal he sees for the Constitution: The goal of preserving the political institutions which serve to define and establish majority rule.

In describing his view of the relative role of the judiciary and the legislatures, Justice Rehnquist has rejected the idea of a living Constitution—which is to say a constitutional interpretation that changes as times and circumstances change.

In contesting that notion as an "end run around popular government," Justice Rehnquist concludes that the Framers of the Constitution did not intend the Constitution itself to suggest answers to the problems their descendents would face. He contends that the limited view of the Founders was that the legislature and executive were intended to fulfill that role, not the language of the Constitution.

Last month, Justice Powell, a Republican, a conservative appointed by President Nixon, told the American Bar Association that the Supreme Court "has well discharged its responsibilities to safeguard the liberties of the people."

The view of the Court's role and responsibility is shared by all but one of the other Justices of the Court, and by most Americans. It is one of the bases of the extraordinary regard in which the Supreme Court is held by our people.

The only Justice who does not share that view is William Rehnquist.

He views the Court's role as being one of preserving the framework within which the articles of the Constitution can be used to sustain majority rule, but in which the amendments to the Constitution—most notably the first 10 which make up what we know as the Bill of Rights—do not figure prominently.

In other words, he seems to believe that it is the Court's role to see to it that the mechanical functions of the governmental branches perform as they are supposed to—hence the enormous deference to legislatures, especially State legislatures—but that the purpose for which this machinery has been erected is beyond the scope of the Court's authority.

To quote him directly:

The role of the judiciary is to police the structure of government set out in the Constitution to ensure that no branch or level of government exceeds its authority. The judiciary should not interfere with the majoritarian process of decision-making on substantive issues. • • • It is only success within the majoritarian process that can give substantive values legitimacy. ["The

□ 1630

One problem with this formulation is that it presupposes that the structures through which the majority speaks give each individual an equal voice. But we know for a fact that this was not historically true for blacks and remains only formalistically true today for the poorly educated and economically disadvantaged. And, of course, Justice Rehnquist's view ignores the fact that the Bill of Rights specifically withdraws certain areas from the majoritarian process, and that it has been the historic role of the Federal courts, particularly the Supreme Court, to protect those minority rights, however strong or passionate the attitudes of the majority of the time.

There are some rights that every American holds that are not subject to majority will. There are some rights that every American holds that will be held inalienable, cannot be challenged, cannot be overridden, no matter how many votes are cast the opposite way. It is a truth that Justice Rehnquist's entire record overlooks and ignores.

Justice Rehnquist's formulation seems to set up a social ideal based on competition for influence and success in propounding a point of view. If no moral values can be ascertained except those that a legislature enacts, then the ultimate value must be numerical.

Fifty-one percent of anything is good and less than 50 percent of anything else is bad.

I do not regard this as an acceptable point of view for the Chief Justice of the United States, and in any event, it is not what the Constitution says.

Justice Rehnquist regards the Bill of Rights as a series of limitations placed on the branches of Government, but which—

Were not themselves designed to solve the problems of the future, but were instead designed to make certain that the constituent branches, when they attempted to solve those [future] problems, should not transgress those fundamental limitations. [Ibid. P. 26].

No more effective way to drain meaning from the Constitution has been devised. For if the Bill of Rights, the first 10 amendments, the heart of the liberty of Americans, must be read only as an eighteenth-century political compromise designed to allay fears that the new central Government would intervene in the States' existing rights, then virtually our entire judicial history must be disregarded as a mammoth misunderstanding.

Justice Rehnquist's record mirrors that belief. In Buckley versus Valeo (1976), Justice Rehnquist wrote:

The limits imposed by the First and Fourteenth amendments on governmental action may vary in their stringency depending on the capacity in which the government is acting. * * * I am of the opinion that not all of the strictures which the First Amendment imposes upon Congress are carried over against the states by the Fourteenth Amendment, but rather that it is only the "general principle" of free speech * * * that the latter incorporates.

In a 1980 speech, noting that according to an opinion poll, 70 percent of the public supported repealing the Bill of Rights, he contended that while that might be "unwise," he say nothing to "make this an illegal, an immoral, or an improper act."

I disagree. Repealing the Bill of Rights would not only be unwise. It would be immoral and improper for our society.

But even when the question of Justice Rehnquist's view of the Bill of Rights is set aside, his claimed deference to majority opinion as expressed in statutory law does not lead him to defer to that majority, acting through their elected representatives in Congress, when the subject is civil rights.

As I earlier stated, since 1971 the Supreme Court has disagreed, to some extent, on the application of Federal civil rights statutes in 83 specific cases. According to Justice Rehnquist's own frequently expressed standards, such statutes—the civil rights statutes—embody the majority will of the people through their legislature, and should only be set aside under constitutional compulsion.

Yet in spite of his repeated verbal deference to the judgments of the majority as expressed in statutory law, in 80 of those 83 civil rights cases, Justice Rehnquist joined in or wrote the dissenting opinion which most severely curtailed the exercise of the legislative majority's powers.

In other words, his view is that we must defer to the will of the majority as expressed by legislative action—except when civil rights are involved.

This unwillingness, indeed this virtual inability to ever support the existence of civil rights, even when it causes him to contradict his most cherished principle of the proper role of the Court, is the most distressing and least defensible aspect of Justice Rehnquist's record.

It is beyond dispute that Justice Rehnquist has a brilliant mind. It is equally beyond dispute that, as to civil rights, it is a closed mind.

A century after the enactment of the Twenty-fourth amendment, which reads: "* * * nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty or property, without due process of law; nor deny to any person * * * the equal protection of the laws.", Justice Rehnquist limits the reach of the amendment to instances of racial discrimination alone, and even then, only when such discrimination is the official policy of a State.

In all other instances, whether they involved women, the disabled, the elderly or any other group disadvantaged in our society, Justice Rehnquist believes, as he wrote in Weber versus Aetna Casualty & Surety Co. (1972), that—

The Equal Protection Clause of the Fourteenth Amendment requires neither that the state enactment be "logical" nor that they be "just" in the common meanings of those terms. It requires only that there be some conceivable set of facts that may justify the classification involved.

To support that conclusion, Justice Rehnquist has reached back to an 1872 opinion which said:

We doubt very much whether any action of a State not directed by way of discrimination against the negroes as a class, or on account of their race, will ever be held to come within the purview of this provision.

But while he acknowledged that this prediction had been disproved by over 100 years of judgments, he rejected that century of jurisprudence in favor of his own preference for the 1872 prediction.

Such a preference is not illegitimate in itself. But unless we turn the history of the country on its head, we cannot conclude that all prior decisions are equally relevant. Neither Dred Scott nor Plessy versus Ferguson today commands either adherence or defense.

The 1872 cases to which Justice Rehnquist referred were the first in which the Court considered the claim that the 14th amendment imposes any but the most minimal constraints on the States.

It is not surprising that that Court responded to those claims in a narrow way. The full extent of the First Amendment was not determined in its first test before the Court.

But that does not discredit the concept of a living Constitution, the concept of an evolving standard of judicial interpretation. Indeed, American history is to the contrary. The framers did not envisage the inclusion of women or slaves in the ranks of those with suffrage. The barons who forced Magna Carta upon King John seven centuries ago never thought it would or should protect ordinary peasants. Yet who today in 20th century America would suggest that peasants are without rights, who would defend slavery, who would exclude women from the vote?

The attempt to place the dead hand of the past on our efforts to cope with comtemporary problems finds little serious support now, or even in that same past.

□ 1640

Justice Marshall's claim that a constitution must be "designed to approach immortality as nearly as human institutions can approach it" seems to me a closer and more accurate reflection of the views of the Founders, with whom he was contemperaneous, than the narrow view of Justice Rehnquist, that justice and liberty can only reach "constitutional status by virtue of the fact that they have been initially recognized and protected by state law . . ." [Paul versus Davis (1976)].

A persistent effort to import other values—numerical majorities, popular opinion, traditional preference—over those embodied in the Constitution remains a hallmark of Justice Rehnquist's jurisprudence.

Whether his conclusions spring from his historical understanding or his belief that no value exists except as it gains some kind of "generalized moral righteous or goodness . . . because [it has] been enacted into positive law" [ibid. p. 26], I believe his view does not represent either contemporary understanding or the original intent of the Founders of our Constitution.

The Constitution displays no overt preference for one form of economic arrangement over another. It does not explicitly say that the due process of law must require proof of guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. The Constitution contains no ban on child labor nor a preferred role for the single-earner family.

But to infer from its broad commandments that it is a value-free document void of any prescriptive intent is a leap of faith, not logic.

The Constitution is not limited to establishing procedures by which we may reach consensual agreements about economic arrangements, social policy, and labor law. It embodies profoundly value-laden preferences for certain kinds of human liberties and is silent about others.

The Constitution prefers democracy to autocracy and theocracy. It withdraws from the majority the power to alter the conditions under which the minority may preserve itself. It balances every grant of authority with a countervailing power lodged elsewhere. It exists against an explicitly acknowledged context, set forth in the Ninth Amendment, of inherent human rights held by every American.

And by its demanding terms for amendment, the Constitution at least implicitly lays a claim for its system of values on the future.

That set of values has been accepted by two centuries of American generations and continues as a living reality today.

When Justice Rehnquist asks:

> How can government by the elected representatives of the people co-exist with the power of the federal judiciary, whose members are constitutionally insulated from the popular will, to declare invalid laws duly enacted by the popular branches of government?" [Furman v. Georgia (1972)]

He is framing one of the enduring questions posed by our system.

But when he answers that "human error on the part of the judiciary * * * wrongfully depriving the individual of rights secured him by the Constitution" [ibid.] is worse than an error which mistakenly sustains the individual's claim, he parts company with me and with the historic and the contemporary understanding of the function and purpose of the constitutional system.

I conclude that Justice Rehnquist is so totally hostile to the rights of women and minorities, that his mind is so closed on the issues of race, that he does not sufficiently share the common recognition of the Supreme Court and the Constitution and their roles in our system to serve as Chief Justice of the United States. I will, accordingly, vote against his confirmation.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. MITCHELL. I yield the floor.

Mr. KENNEDY. I was wondering if the Senator would yield for a question?

Mr. MITCHELL. Yes, I will, Mr. President.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, during the excellent statement of the Senator from Maine, he referred to the issues raised in the Laird versus Tatum case, in which Justice Rehnquist, who was, in 1969 serving in the Office of Legal Counsel, drafted a memorandum dealing with the army surveillance of civilians. That memorandum has been examined by the members of the Committee on the Judiciary as a result of an agreement that was worked out with Senator LAXALT and the Justice Department. We later learned that it appeared in the public record in 1974. In 1974, Mr. Rehnquist appeared before Senator Ervin's subcommittee Senator Ervin asked then-Assistant Attorney General Rehnquist about his views about the Government surveillance policy for military surveillance of civilians. In the first round of questions, Mr. Rehnquist commented on his own basic view about first amendment rights and was quite circumspect about whether the activity was constitutional or not constitutional. He certainly gave the impression that he believed that the actions of the military and the FBI during the antiwar demonstrations did not violate the first amendment rights or chill first amendment rights by demonstrators.

Then, in the second round of questions, Senator Ervin asked him specifically about the Laird versus Tatum case and Mr. Rehnquist indicated that he did not believe that Mr. Tatum had a justiciable right to raise this matter in the courts. Tatum motion to dismiss prevailed in the lower Federal courts against the Government's and then the matter came before the Supreme Court.

Justice Rehnquist and the Laird versus Tatum case got to the Supreme Court together. Justice Rehnquist ruled in favor of Mr. Laird and cast a deciding vote which dismissed the case.

I know the Senator is familiar with the fact that it was after the decision was issued that the question of recusal was raised by the respondent.

In response to the motion for recusal Justice Rehnquist issued a memorandum in which he said he thought he was under a duty to sit.

I know the Senator from Maine is familiar with the letter from Professor Hazard commenting on the judicial ethics involved in that situation. He found it incomprehensible that Justice Rehnquist could possibly have found a rationale for his sitting on that case. I have in my hand a letter from the Society of American Law Teachers, a distinguished organization, that reached the same conclusion.

I ask unanimous consent that this letter to the Members of the U.S. Senate be printed in the appropriate place not to interfere with this discussion.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SOCIETY OF AMERICAN LAW TEACHERS,
Davis, CA, September 13, 1986.

Members of the U.S. Senate,
Washington, DC.

I write on behalf of the Society of American Law Teachers (SALT) to oppose the nomination of William H. Rehnquist to become Chief Justice of the United States. The Society of American Law Teachers is a membership organization of individual law professors. We are unique among organizations in legal education because we represent the views of individual teachers, rather than those of our affiliated institutions. Our opposition reflects the unanimous opinion of the members of the Board of Governors at the end of an extensive internal debate.

We fully recognize the President's power to select a Chief Justice who shares his own political views. Our objection to this nomination does not stem from political opposition. Our views rest instead on two grounds. First, we have concluded that the serious questions of ethical impropriety arising from Justice Rehnquist's participation in Laird v. Tatum simply cannot be resolved in his favor. Secondly, we have grave reservations about his record of demonstrated hostility to the constitutional ideals of equality and individual rights.

We turn first to the question of integrity and ethics. We have found it difficult, to overlook the serious questions of credibility arising from the nominee's disturbing memory lapses concerning controverted matters of the gravest national importance. Our concern here rests not on a single occurrence, but rather on a cumulation. We find it difficult to avoid the conclusion that Justice Rehnquist has failed to meet the test of Canon 2 of the Code of Judicial Conduct which requires that he conduct "himself at all times in a manner that promotes public confidence in the integrity and impartiality of the judiciary." We have read the opinion letter of September 8, 1986 from Professor Geoffrey Hazard to Senator Charles Mathias, and the comprehensive analysis of Professor Floyd Feeney and Mr. Barry Mahoney. Professor Hazard notes that Justice Rehnquist "had a duty of candor to the Senate in answering questions concerning Laird v. Tatum * * * (he) complied with (that) duty only if his statement is accepted that he had 'no recollection of any participation in the formulation of policy on the use of military to conduct surveillance.'" Professor Hazard observed that "whether that statement should be accepted is a matter of judgment." It is the judgment of the Society of American Law Teachers that this lapse cannot be accepted.

We are guided by our roles as teachers of the future lawyers who will serve the citizens of this country. We are concerned that the message we will send to the next generation of lawyers is one of cynicism for law. Our concern in this regard extends as well to members of the general public. Today the honesty and integrity of every lawyer is subject to doubt in the minds of many members of the public. We fear irreversible damage to public confidence in the integrity of the judicial branch if Justice Rehnquist is confirmed. The office of Chief Justice is unique in our constitutional government. Only 15 citizens have served this country in that capacity. The Chief Justice must embody the spirit of our highest aspirations for honest, impartial judicial conduct. Both our students and the general public will find much to confirm the cynicism about which we are concerned. We have come slowly, and painfully to the conclusion that the honesty and integrity of this high office will be seriously degraded if this nominee is confirmed.

A second, and equally critical factor in our decision to recommend that you withhold your consent from this nomination, is our concern that the candidate has a consistent, demonstrated hostility to the constitutional values of equality. We base our view in this regard upon our assessment of his non-judicial conduct. The confirmation hearings revealed many things about the Justice's conduct before he joined the Court. We are disturbed by the contradictions of eyewitnesses concerning Justice Rehnquist's involvement in partisan challenges to minority voters. We are disturbed by the reports of memoranda prepared by the Justice while he was a law clerk and in a second instance, while he was an Assistant Attorney General in the Justice Department. In the first instance, he is reported to have stated the view that Brown v. Board of Education was wrongly decided. In the second instance, he is reported to have expressed views concerning the role of women in the family that are so extreme as to undercut our confidence in his fidelity to the constitutional ideal of equality.

For all of the reasons stated above, we urge you to withhold your consent, or in the alternative to return this nomination to the Judiciary Committee.

Sincerely,

EMMA COLEMAN JORDAN,
President.

Mr. KENNEDY. The Senator from Maine is a former judge—and I think perhaps no one else in this body would bring to this particular issue the kind of background and experience that the Senator from Maine can bring. I am wondering whether he feels that the decision by Mr. Rehnquist to sit in this case, after he expressed an opinion that the case was without merit, was a proper decision. I wonder if the Senator from Maine were a plaintiff in that particular case and he was sitting in court and saw that one of the judges before him had made a statement at a congressional hearing saying he did not have a case, whether he would feel he was going to get fair and equal justice in that particular court.

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. President, I think it goes without saying that the plaintiff in that case must have felt that he would not receive fair and equal justice. If I may, with the Senator's permission, read a couple of sentences which I read during my remarks and this will amplify them. After recounting at some length the Laird versus Tatum circumstances, I said:

I find this episode troubling, because a judge, above others, ought to be impressed with the importance of abiding by the spirit as well as the literal letter of the law.

I conclude that Justice Rehnquist made a mistake, a serious error in judgment, and that he would act differently if he had to do it over again. But I do not believe that this one mistake is sufficient in itself, nor does it fit into a pattern of such errors, to disqualify him from serving as Chief Justice.

□ 1650

All members of the Judiciary have a special responsibility to not only act impartially and dispassionately but to give the appearance of acting impartially and dispassionately. It is a primary obligation; when any human being is given the enormous power that Federal judges have in our society, to sustain public support for our judicial system we simply must insist that judges act fairly, appear to act fairly, act impartially and appear to act impartially, and that it is a serious mistake for any judge to sit on a case in which he or she has previously been involved and on which the judge has a strong view. I believe, as I said in my remarks, this was a serious error in judgment by Mr. Rehnquist.

Mr. KENNEDY. I thank the Senator. Just to continue on the Laird case, Professor Hazard mentions this in his excellent letter when he is talking about the matters which were being considered in the case. He says in his letter on page 3 in the bottom paragraph:

Justice Rehnquist's addressing the publicly known grounds of recusal, but omitting references to the confidential ones, would have been proper only if he had forgotten that his office in the Justice Department had handled the surveillance policy negotiations and that he himself was involved to a substantial extent. If when writing his opinion in Laird v. Tatum, Justice Rehnquist had not forgotten his involvement in the surveillance policy negotiations, then his opinion constituted a misrepresentation to the parties and to his colleagues on the Court. In such a matter, a lawyer or judge is expected to give the whole truth.

And then he continues:

Finally, Justice Rehnquist had a duty of candor to the Senate in answering the questions concerning Laird v. Tatum.

Mr. MITCHELL. I think Professor Hazard was making two points with which I agree. The first is that in this particular case Justice Rehnquist made two errors in judgment. The first was to fail to abstain from participating in deciding the case in which he had been involved prior to entering the court and on which he had already expressed an opinion as to what the outcome should be.

The second was in writing his memorandum explaining his decision, justifying his decision, he did not set forth all of the facts, particularly those which were peculiarly known to him and might not have been known to either of the parties. That is a special burden on a judge under these circumstances. By virtue of his or her unique position, a judge may be in possession of facts affecting his or her impartiality, either the fact of impartiality or the appearance of impartiality or both, of which the parties may not be aware. And a judge then has a special responsibility under such circumstances to disclose to the parties those facts as not only explaining his decision but providing the parties with full information as to the basis for a decision. I believe Professor Hazard is correct and I share that conclusion, that there was not only the initial error in the failure to abstain from the case but the second error of a memorandum of explanation which did not fully disclose facts known to the judge at the time and possibly not known by the parties.

Mr. KENNEDY. I thank the Senator for his elaboration on this point because I think his explanation and illumination on this issue is particularly helpful to our Senate colleagues. I am also reminded that Senator Ervin, who took great interest in this issue, at the time when Justice Rehnquist refused to recuse himself, including filing an amicus curiae brief in the Supreme Court, expressed his strongest disappointment in Justice Rehnquist's action. Senator Ervin noted that, if he had known in advance that Justice Rehnquist would participate in the Laird versus Tatum case, he would not have supported his nomination for Supreme Court Justice. This statement by Senator Ervin gives an indication of the importance and significance of this kind of activity by Justice Rehnquist.

I welcome the Senator's comments. I think in his memorandum of explanation for not recusing himself, Justice Rehnquist, in his references to his exchanges with Senator Ervin, did not include the specific language on the Laird versus Tatum case. As to the Canons of Ethics, which had just been issued, there was a complete misinterpretation of those, to permit him to reach his conclusion on the duty to sit. I welcome the comments of the Senator from Maine and also the letters from Professor Hazard and the Society of American Law Teachers on this issue. They should be carefully reviewed by all Senators before making their judgment on this nomination. I thank the Senator for an excellent statement.

Mr. President, next year, America will commemorate the 200th anniversary of the Constitution. In that document and the bill of rights, the Founders established a society based on individual liberty, equality, and the rule of law. In the two centuries since then, the American people have worked hard to advance the noble values embodied in the Constitution and make them a reality for all Americans. We have weathered many storms, including a civil war that nearly destroyed the Nation, but in these 200 years, we can be proud of the strides we have made toward realizing the goals of the Constitution.

Nearly from the beginning, the Supreme Court established itself as the ultimate Guardian and interpreter of the Constitution. In the final analysis, it is the Justices of the Court who give meaning and life to our liberties. The Chief Justice, as the leader of the Court, sets the standard for defining the Constitution and interpreting laws. The office itself is a constant symbol of the fundamental values upon which America is built, and the protections which we rely on for our freedom and justice.

The Supreme Court building itself restates this important truth. At the entrance to the building, inscribed in the pediment above the majestic pillars, are four simple eloquent words—"Equal Justice Under Law."

Now, however, the Senate is being pressed to confirm a Chief Justice whose entire career has been an impediment to those noble words.

The nomination of William H. Rehnquist to be Chief Justice of the United States places us at a crossroads in our history. We must give the mantle of leadership only to someone who has embraced our historical commitment to religious liberty and freedom of expression and our historical progress toward the elimination of discrimination based on race, sex, nationality, and economic status. Justice Rehnquist falls far short of this critical standard. If we confirm Justice Rehnquist to be Chief Justice, we will elevate to the pinnacle of our American Judicial system a man who by word and deed throughout his career has shown disdain for the fundamental values embodied in our Constitution. If we consent to the nomination of Justice Rehnquist to be Chief Justice, we will be choosing as the symbol of American Justice someone who would roll back the hard won progress of women and minorities to achieve full equality and would strip away essential protection from Government interference in highly personal decisions about religion, marriage, and family.

The struggle of racial minorities to achieve their rightful place in our society has been long and often bitter. For racial minorities, particularly blacks, equal protection of the laws was, until very recently, a hollow slogan. As recently as 1959, a negro was hauled from a jail in Mississippi and lynched, one of 3,441 negroes to fall victim to this form of mob violence, unhindered by law enforcement officials. During the 1960's, peaceful civil rights demonstrations were subject to excessive force by police, and were often assaulted by private citizens as law enforcement officials looked on. In St. Augustine, FL, for example, a negro girl was stabbed with the end of a stick, and when she and another marcher fell on the ground, they were arrested immediately for disorderly conduct. It was common for the victims of violence, not the perpetrators, to be taken to jail.

Negroes accused of crimes could not expect a fair trial. For example, in 1965, it was common practice in Talladega County, AL, for the prosecution and defense in a case to get together and decide whether they wanted any negroes on the jury—if not, they would just agree to strike them. No negro had ever served on a jury in the county. The use of preemptory challenges to exclude blacks from juries is widespread. The Supreme Court at last put an end to this practice last term. Justice Rehnquist, dissenting in that case, would perpetuate race discrimination in our justice system by allowing prosecutors to strike blacks from a jury because of their race.

In education, minorities suffered the discrimination of government sanctioned segregated schools until the middle of this century. Inferior education is the essence of the iron ring of discrimination against minorities. By limiting their opportunities for self-improvement it makes and keeps them inferior. Inferior status provides the justification for laws and customs which penalize minorities.

In the wake of the Brown decision, desegregation of schools was met with massive resistance in the South. A key element of Southern resistance was the creation in the 1960's of private white schools to circumvent desegregation orders. In 1970, the IRS began to withhold tax exemptions from these private segregated schools. In 1983, in the Bob Jones University case, the Supreme Court upheld the Government's refusal to subsidize segregated schools. Justice Rehnquist alone dissented.

Women in America are fighting a difficult battle in eradicate sex discrimination in our society. Although sex discrimination is often more subtle than other forms of discrimination, it is no less destructive. Innumerable legal obstacles still exist to full equality of men and women in America. Justice Rehnquist is committed to perpetuating much of this discrimination. He is the only member of the Supreme Court who believes that the Government can discriminate against women in selecting juries, deny unemployment benefits to an unemployed woman who is seeking work if she is pregnant or has recently given birth, or give smaller housing allowances to married women in the Armed Forces than to married men.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COCHRAN). The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

□ 1700

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, the most important measure of good government is how well it protects the weakest and most powerless. Most important among these are our Nation's children. In recent years, the Court has endeavored to blunt the social stigma of illegitimate children by prohibiting laws which single out these innocent children to disadvantage them. These children truly are victims of their parent's behavior, and there is no justification for laws which further punish them. Justice Rehnquist has voted consistently to uphold statutes which deny illegitimate children the right to inherit from their fathers by intestate succession, the right to child support from their fathers, the right to receive disability or worker's compensation benefits, or the right to benefit from supplemental income programs for indigent families.

The poor are also in need of government protection. Justice Rehnquist's response is to vote, along, to uphold a State statute which Justice Stewart characterized as prohibiting the poor from marrying.

Justice Rehnquist also has voted consistently to uphold statutory schemes that discriminate against resident aliens. Beginning in the late 19th century, States and localities enacted various laws that disadvantaged newly arrived, and often unpopular, immigrants. Many of these laws struck at the core privilege of freedom—the right to seek and obtain employment. Because legal aliens generally are not qualified to vote, they are uniquely vulnerable to discrimination by the majority.

The Supreme Court has repeatedly held these discriminatory statutes unconstitutional. Justice Rehnquist has voted to prohibit aliens who are in this country legally and are eligible to work from engaging in the profession of engineer or architect, from becoming a notary public, or from holding any State job whatsoever.

For the Founders, religious freedom was the crux of the struggle for freedom in general. James Madison authored the first legislative pronouncement that freedom of conscience and religion are inherent rights of the individual in Virginia's great Declaration of Rights in 1776. Madison opposed every form and degree of official relation between religion and civil authority. For him, religion was a wholly private matter beyond the scope of the civil government either to restrain or to support.

The Founders wisely recognized the historical divisiveness of government entanglement with religion, and the fundamental importance of freedom from such entanglement to the realization of individual liberty. The separation of church and state has been respected by the Court throughout our history.

Justice Rehnquist would tear down the wall of church/state separation. In his extreme dissent in Wallace versus Jaffree, with which no other member of the Court agreed, Justice Rehnquist stated:

> The Establishment Clause did not require government neutrality between religion and irreligion nor did it prohibit the federal government from providing nondiscriminatory aid to religion.

This startling statement flies in the face of our historical commitment to government noninterference in religion.

Due process is the cornerstone of the criminal justice system of a civilized society. It is the basis for preventing intolerable abuses in law enforcement. Justice Rehnquist has voted to strip away some of our most important due process protections. For example, he alone voted a defendant to be sentenced to death on the basis of a secret report which neither the defendant nor his attorney was permitted to see.

I urge every Member of the Senate to reflect on what would become of our precious freedoms if the positions that Justice Rehnquist has taken on these fundamental issues prevailed. He would create a society that none of us would recognize. Living in Justice Rehnquist's America would be a vastly different experience from living in America today. Civil rights and civil liberties would mean little in his society. Our Nation's commitment to bedrock principles of individual liberty and equality for all Americans is not shared by Justice Rehnquist. His vision of America is not shared by most Americans. He does not deserve the privilege and solemn responsibility of being the Chief Justice of the United States.

Mr. HATCH. Let us review the issue we are debating.

If it were a question of qualifications, the debate would be over. It would have been over as soon as the ABA reviewed 200 of Justice Rehnquist's opinions and found that he "meets the highest standards of professional competence." It would have been over when President Carter's Attorney General and President Johnson's Solicitor General endorsed Justice Rehnquist. The fact is Justice Rehnquist has been an outstanding Justice for 15 years. Questioning his qualifications now, is like asking 15 years into his career whether Babe Ruth could hit home runs. This debate has nothing to do with qualifications.

If this debate were about judicial temperament or integrity, it would already be over. It would have been over when the ABA interviewed 180 judges, 50 law deans and professors, and 65 attorneys before stating that his temperament and integrity make him "among the best available" for the office. It would have been over when the Judiciary Committee voted 13 to 5 in favor of appointment. It would have been over when his colleague, Justice Brennan, declared that he would be a "splendid Chief Justice."

This is not a debate about qualifications or integrity. This is not a debate about judicial temperament.

The debate continues only because some Senators and special interests disagree with Justice Rehnquist's legal views. These Senators say their case is not a question of mere disagreement, yet they proceed to call him insensitive on civil rights solely because he differs with their views. They say disagreement is not the issue, yet they say Justice Rehnquist considers women "second class citizens" only because he differs with their extreme and narrow view of equal rights.

CIVIL RIGHTS REBUTTAL

We continue to hear charges of insensitivity to civil rights. It is accurate to say that Justice Rehnquist disagrees with some of my colleagues about the outcome of many civil rights disputes. It is not accurate to describe his record as "insensitive." Let me briefly recount his record on civil rights:

First, over 34 times he has upheld and reaffirmed the landmark Brown versus Board case which held that racial classifications are stigmatizing and that "separate but equal" is unconstitutional.

Second, over 27 times he has voted to sustain minority and women's rights.

Third, he wrote the landmark womens rights case, Meritor Bank, which held that an employer may be held liable for sex harassment in the workplace.

Fourth, he has consistently defended the principle that the Constitution is colorblind. This defense for a race-neutral Constitution and society is what causes much of the concern amongst those who disagree with him. They would prefer to have the Constitution justify preferential treatment for some citizens through quotas, busing, and effects tests that invalidate legitimate State actions or require reverse discrimination. They want preferential treatment and quotas: Justice Rehnquist has carefully read the law to require color blindness—a total absence of race as relevant criterion for any government purpose.

Fifth, a study of the 1986 term showed Justice Rehnquist was clearly in the mainstream of the Supreme Court on civil rights issues. On the 20 civil rights cases studied, he voted with the majority 70 percent of the time.

BATSON

We began last week to discuss one civil rights case, Batson versus Kentucky, the 1986 jury selection case. Justice Rehnquist's position in this case has been characterized as "preventing blacks and minorities from serving on a jury." This is inaccurate. In fact, in a related 1986 case, Turner versus Murray, Justice Rehnquist prohibits attorneys from inquiring into racial attitudes when screening jurors. In this instance, Justice Rehnquist was simply defending the longstanding principle that an attorney may legitimately make peremptory challenges to jurors, even if the juror was eliminated on the basis of race or ethnicity. This was a policy first articulated by the supposedly liberal Warren Court. Moreover the dissenting opinion which he joined was actually authored by the Chief Justice. The Chief Justice, joined by Justice Rehnquist, recognized that race or ethnicity could affect a juror's decisionmaking in a particular case. Peremptory challenges are undoubtedly applied across the board to jurors of all races and nationalities and accordingly do not evince a deprivation of equal protection to any particular group. Justice Rehnquist is simply stating that the color of a juror's skin should be irrelevant. Jurors are fungible, meaning that they can be interchanged in any combination and the decisionmaking process should still produce the truth. Therefore, these two Justices oppose making race a factor in jury trials. This is the basis for their decision. This is a distant departure from the way this case has been characterized by some of the Justice's critics.

BATSON VERSUS KENTUCKY

One further thought on Batson versus Kentucky. It is both irrational and stereotypical to believe that the defendant has been denied a fair trial or suffered other prejudice because of the underrepresentation of one group of potential jurors. People do not perceive truth differently because of race or sex or any other arbitrary and irrelevant classification. All persons of all races and both sexes are essentially fungible as jurors. They can be interchanged without any prejudice to the defendant.

If all persons are fungible as jurors, it follows that racial or gender composition of the jury cannot possibly affect the defendant's rights or the outcome of the trial.

Because race is irrelevant to the composition of the jury, it makes no difference legally whether a preemptory challenge is based on race or gender or any other "gut instinct" of the prosecutor. Thus, the ruling in Batson, according to the Chief Justice's opinion, does no harm to the defendant but it does damage the basic notion of preemptory challenges which have been part of the common law for centuries. Preemptory challenges are meant to be preemptory. If a court begins to inquire into the basis for the challenge, to question its racial or gender motives, it no longer is a preemptory challenge, but a challenge for cause.

This is also what concerned the Warren court in the Swain case. No one suggested that this 6-to-3 vote of the Warren court made those Justices "insensitive to civil rights." This is another instance of selective name calling. When the Warren court does it it is warranted; when Justice Rehnquist does it it is objectionable.

RECENT MEMORANDA

In the past few days, we have seen the emergence of a few additional memoranda from the time that Justice Rehnquist served in the Office of Legal Counsel. One of these memos dealt with the equal rights amendment. This memo was prepared in response to a request from the White House for a paper setting forth the arguments against the ERA. Attorney Rehnquist was simply complying with his client's request by setting forth only one side of the debate. Moreover, on another occasion, his office prepared a memorandum supporting the ERA. At one time or another, he took both sides.

The most recent ERA memo, however, took the reasonable position that the proposed amendment would invalidate many laws designed to provide special assistance or treatment to women and many other laws which simply recognize that men and women are not identically situated for all purposes. There are many examples in both areas. For example, draft laws, child custody laws, labor laws, and others fall into these categories. This memo further notes that the proposed amendment is ambiguous and could prohibit legal and social practices accepted by many who support the ERA because of its simple equality slogan. As we know, these are precisely the legal arguments against the ERA. The most we can conclude from this memo is that legal counsel Rehnquist did his job well years before these precise issues arose to defeat the ratification of the proposed amendment.

Another recent memo from Justice Rehnquist's days at the Office of Legal Counsel discusses the possibility of legislation or a constitutional amendment to make clear that a nondiscriminatory, race-neutral system of school assignment need not be subjected to forced school busing simply to achieve racial balance. The legal analysis of the memo is simply that the Constitution prohibits intentional racial discrimination, not racial imbalance that naturally results from the free choices of private citizens. This is the classic distinction between de jure and de facto discrimination. The Supreme Court has upheld the same distinction found in the Rehnquist memorandum in the subsequent cases of Swann, Pasadena, and most recently Bazemore. The Post article on this memo makes it apparent that the memo advises a race-conscious "freedom of choice" plan, as was rejected in the Goss versus Knoxville case, would remain unconstitutional. If anything this memo must be praised as a testament to Justice Rehnquist's legal foresight.

The amendment considered in the memo would not have foreclosed any alternative to forced busing, it instead added the alternatives of neighborhood school plans. Congress apparently went further in 1974 when the Equal Educational Opportunities Act, 20 U.S.C. 1701, et. seq., declared that "the neighborhood is the appropriate basis for determining public school assignments" and prohibited busing merely to achieve racial balance. Indeed the Senate has gone even further by passing the amendment of Senator JOHNSTON of Louisiana which would have removed busing from the Federal courts.

As might be expected, this memo, too, was prepared for legal counsel Rehnquist's client, the White House. He provided legal advice which discussed the murky caselaw of the time and suggested the sound and moderate alternative of preserving the emerging distinction between de facto and de jure discrimination. The memo apparently noted that a broader amendment could be fashioned "to go all the way with freedom of choice." But this broader course was discouraged by the memo. In short, this memo demonstrates once again Justice Rehnquist's ability to quickly grasp and sort out legal concepts. Moreover his advice was very moderate in the climate of the times and has been vindicated by subsequent policy clarifications.

LUDICROUS

Finally, we have heard about a few issues that are almost ludicrous. One issue of this nature dealt with the Vermont restrictive covenant.

First, unenforceable due to Shelly versus Kramer.

Second, Justice Renquist immediately agrees to correct deeds.

Third, JFK was not considered "insensitive" even though he had such covenants; it would be irresponsible to make this accusation.

CORNELL TRUST

Another issue in this category deals with the Cornell Family Trust. The facts are that Justice Rehnquist set up a trust account in 1961—10 years before he took a seat on the Supreme Court—for the benefit of his brother-in-law, Harold Cornell. The trust was established by H.D. Cornell, Harold's father, for the express purpose of paying medical expenses when Harold's multiple sclerosis made it impossible for him to care for himself. The trust was administered by George Cornell, Harold's brother. H.D. Cornell, the father, specifically instructed his attorney, Mr. Rehnquist, and the trust administrator, George, not to disclose the existence of the trust to his son because he feared that Harold might not preserve the money for its intended purpose. Attorney Rehnquist obeyed his client's instructions impeccably.

Nonetheless, this has formed the basis for allegations that Justice Rehnquist acted improperly in participating in establishment of a trust when he might have some interest (as son-in-law) in the estate. This overlooks that the code of professional responsibility does not bar family cooperation in legal matters, but only requires that the testator initiate the request for legal help and that the testator be aware of the attorney's potential interest as an inheritor. Attorney Rehnquist was in full compliance with these standards. Frankly, the family was grateful that Mr. Rehnquist handled the matter because of its sensitivity and the need for care and confidentiality.

We also hear that Mr. Rehnquist was somehow wrong for not disclosing the trust to Harold. In the first place, Mr. Rehnquist was not the administrator. George was. If anyone had the responsiblility to decide when the trust was to be disclosed, it was George. Moreover, Mr. Rehnquist was obeying his client's orders. It would have been more severe for him to have presumed to break his client's trust. It he had disclosed the trust over his client's objections, I have no doubt that Justice Rehnquist's critics would have been even more vociferous in their attacks on his violation of legal responsibilities. For those seeking some flaw in Justice Rehnquist, he would have been wrong either way. The facts show that he performed admirably by remaining within his duties as a lawyer.

This is, in reality, a sensitive family dispute. The FBI did a thorough check of the facts and every member of the Cornell family agrees that the purpose for confidentiality was to prevent Harold from invading the trust and spending the assets before they were needed for his medical care. To suggest that Justice Rehnquist kept his client's trust because his wife might benefit from the estate is ludicrous. This issue simply demands no further explanation.

These arguments demonstrate that this debate is about ideology, not integrity. They should be laid to rest for once and for all.

Mr. BINGAMAN. Mr. President, this week we are being asked to confirm the President's nomination of William Rehnquist for Chief Justice of the Supreme Court and the President's nomination of Judge Scalia as an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court. My vote will be to deny the President's request for confirmation of Mr. Rehnquist and to grant the Prsident's request for confirmation of Mr. Scalia.

In Mr. Rehnquist's confirmation hearings some questioned the significance of the position of Chief Justice. They argued that the factual scope of the office, the duties of the Chief Justice compared to those of the Associate Justices, render the office only nominally different from the position Mr. Rehnquist currently holds.

In my view they are wrong. The Chief Justice's power and prestige extends beyond the responsibility of assigning opinion authorship and beyond his role of determining what cases the courts will hear. Rather, the power of the office is closely related to the fact that the Chief Justice presides over our entire judicial system and that he is the most honored figure in our legal system.

Mr. Rehnquist clearly has the intellectural capability to function as the Chief Justice; nobody questions that. Similarly, he has the ability to administer the Court as its Chief Justice. However, I do not believe that Mr. Rehnquist is qualified to carry out the role as the symbol of justice for all our Nation's people. The hearing record shows that his record on civil rights—on equal justice for all Americans—is questionable. Whether the question concerns his authorship and views in the now famous memorandum on Brown versus Board of Education, or his lone dissent in the Bob Jones University case, his positions indicate an unwillingness to apply the 14th amendment in race and gender cases. Moreover, his involvement in Laird versus Tatum raises serious and unanswered questions of judicial ethics—whether Mr. Rehnquist should have disqualified himself from this case. Further, the record remains unclear on charges of voter harrassment by Mr. Rehnquist in the "ballot security" programs in Phoenix in the fifties and sixties.

In short, Mr. Rehnquist's record alienates large numbers of Americans. And in my view the Chief Justice must meet a higher and more complete standard of excellence to maintain the high esteem that the position requires.

As my colleague, Senator EAGLETON, states:

> About a nominee for Chief Justice, we cannot harbor an array of disquieting doubts. About a nominee for Chief Justice, our minds and consciences must be clear and unhesitating.

I agree that this is the test we must apply to the nominee for Chief Justice, and in my view Mr. Rehnquist does not meet that test.

Mr. President, the Senate Judiciary Committee has unanimously recommended the nomination of Judge Scalia as Associate Justice. Nothing in the record before the committee raised questions about his fitness for that position. Based on that record, I will vote to confirm Mr. Scalia.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROCKEFELLER. Mr. President, our colleagues on the Judiciary Committee have presented the issues concerning the nomination of William Rehnquist in great depth. Some of our other colleagues—Senators LEVIN, EAGLETON, BRADLEY, and MITCHELL—have, and added to our understanding with notable statements.

I do not intend to repeat the arguments that have been made in detail by others. Instead, I would like to summarize the conclusions that I have reached based on the case that has been presented so forcefully—pro and con—by others.

Mr. President, I intend to vote against the nomination of William Rehnquist to be Chief Justice of the United States.

I base my opposition to Justice Rehnquist on his complete hostility to civil rights and individual rights—and his lack of sensitivity to the special role that the Supreme Court, and its Chief Justice, play in protecting those rights.

I base my opposition on an overall sense, obviously subjective, that Mr. Rehnquist, despite his brilliant intellect, lacks the breadth of vision and potential for growth that our country has a right to expect in the Chief Justice.

In our system, Mr. President the legislative branch makes the laws and represents majority opinion. The President gets his mandate from the electoral process, and the majority of the country. But the Constitution protects the rights of minorities and individuals, often against hostile majorities, and it is the special responsibility of the courts to protect those rights which the Constitution provides.

Of course, it is inevitable that reasonable people will disagree, and fairminded judges will disagree, about what the Constitution requires in particular cases. But Justice Rehnquist's record goes beyond the normal range of disagreement that fairminded people and Justices could have. He is uniformly, predictably and inevitably opposed to civil rights, whatever the claim, and always on the side of the state when Government authority collides with the constitutional rights of individuals.

Despite the special, historic role which the Federal courts have in protecting civil rights, it is of course possible to believe in civil rights and equal justice for all, while opposing on philosophical grounds the idea of an activist Federal judiciary.

But that is not Justice Rehnquist's approach. He has not confined his opposition to Federal court action on civil rights. He opposed the historic Civil Rights Act of 1964, and every other Federal civil rights statute; so he does not believe that Congress has a role to play in protecting civil rights. He opposed the efforts in Arizona when the city of Phoenix wanted to pass an ordinance protecting the right of minorities to go into restaurants and other public accommodations; so he does not believe that local government has a role to play in protecting civil rights. Thirteen years after the Supreme Court decided in Brown versus Board of Education that segregated schools were unconstitutional, Mr. Rehnquist offered the opinion that "we are no more dedicated to an integrated society than a segregated society"—an opinion that was legally incorrect and morally wrong.

There is no chink in the armor of his hostility toward civil rights. But the struggle for civil rights has been the central, moral issue of our time. As a country, we have worked so hard and we have worked for so long to translate our concept of equal justice into a reality for all Americans. Having a Chief Justice of Mr. Rehnquist's proven insensitivity would be a serious step backward and not one that I would support.

Mr. President, as I have studied this nomination, I have slowly become convinced that for all his intellectual ability, Mr. Rehnquist is not the kind of person who should be the Chief Justice of the United States. His dismaying judicial record is troubling enough, but really it is only part of the picture. Mr. Rehnquist seems to be the kind of person who decided very early on exactly what he felt about the world and how he felt about all issues and has never wavered or grown. Most people change their views over time; sometimes they become more liberal; other times more conservative; hopefully, in most cases, more aware of nuance, and complexity. Frankly, I do not see that growth in Mr. Rehnquist; his strongly held, provocative views today are no different than they were in 1952 when he clerked on the Supreme Court: both unshaken and unrefined by anything that has happened in three tumultuous decades.

That lack of growth seems to me to be compounded by the coldness of his ideology and the lack of a generous spirit. He seems intolerant of the kind of diversity than makes this country unique; he seems incapable of trying to strike the genuinely difficult balance that our country relies on the Supreme Court to find between government authority and individual rights. And there is no doubt that my view of Mr. Rehnquist's character and rigidity of ideology is influenced by what I believe to be his lack of candor to the Judiciary Committee and his totally improper refusal to recuse himself in the Laird versus Tatum case.

Supporters of this nomination have argued that the Senate should give great deference to the President's choice, particularly because the American people have twice elected President Reagan with great majorities. This is the first time that I have had the privilege of voting on a Supreme Court nomination, and I have become firmly convinced that every Senator has a special responsibility to reach an individual decision on whether Mr. Rehnquist should be elevated to be Chief Justice. That decision should be based on each Senator's individual assessment of Mr. Rehnquist's qualifications to hold this position of extraordinary responsibility and not the popularity of the President who appointed him.

There have only been 15 Chief Justices in the nearly two centuries since the Constitution was written. Chief Justices stay on while Presidents change, their decisions touching the lives of Americans in very crucial ways, for 15 or 20 or 25 years. Throughout history, the Senate has recognized its special responsibility to consider this nomination; 5 of the 20 men nominated for the position have actually been rejected by the Senate.

The President has won from the American people the awesome right and privilege of selecting, from among 230 million Americans, his choice to nominate for Chief Justice of the United States. And that is all. The Senate has, and each individual Senator has, an absolute right and responsibility to decide whether to "advise and consent" to the President's nomination. That is what the Constitution envisions; That is what our separation of powers is all about.

The Senator from Illinois, Mr. SIMON, made in interesting observation on this nomination last week. Recognizing that Mr. Rehnquist was likely to be confirmed, Senator SIMON expressed the hope that Mr. Rehnquist would take some time on the beach, as he expressed it, to reflect seriously on the criticisms and concerns that have been raised—hopefully, to open his mind and change his views on certain matters.

I wish I believed that were possible. But it does not seem realistic to me any more than it probably did to Senator SIMON.

John Mitchell and Richard Kleindienst gave Mr. Rehnquist a key position in the Justice Department—because of his views.

Richard Nixon appointed Mr. Rehnquist to the Supreme Court—because of his views.

And now Ronald Reagan has nominated him to be Chief Justice of the United States—because of his views.

So there is little chance that, having attained the pinnacle of our system of justice, because of his views, Mr. Rehnquist will change his views now.

And yet despite his ascent, I don't believe that Mr. Rehnquist's view of constitutional rights is shared by most Americans. And frankly, I do not think that it is shared by most Senators.

Mr. Rehnquist is not a fair-minded conservative. He is a closed-minded ideologue. He bears no serious resemblance to the distinguished, conservative Justices appointed by conservative Presidents: John Harlan or Potter Stewart, appointed by President Eisenhower; Lewis Powell or Harry Blackmun, appointed by President Nixon; and, based on the record so far, Sandra O'Connor, appointed by President Reagan.

It appears that opponents of this nomination will total perhaps 25 or 30. but if we were voting on Mr. Rehnquist's view of the Constitution, I would say to my colleagues that Mr. Rehnquist would be lucky to get 25 or 30 votes.

And we should be voting on Mr. Rehnquist's view of the Constitution. That's what this process is all about; not the popularity of the President, and not Republican versus Democratic politics. There are times for Senators to defer to the President. This is not one of those times. Sometimes loyalty demands to much.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

□ 1730

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, it is now 5:30 on Monday, and I would like to hope we could reach some agreement on voting on the Rehnquist nomination tomorrow. Either that or we ought to stay here tonight and debate it because October 3d is not as far away as some might think. If we are going to be denied the right to vote tomorrow, then I think in fairness we should be told we are not voting tomorrow so we can decide what other efforts we might wish to pursue. I get rumors that the press has been told there will be no votes tomorrow. I am not certain that is true. We might have a vote on both Rehnquist and Scalia prior to 4 o'clock. We have now been about 5 days on the nomination of Rehnquist. We find some Senators making additional speeches on the same subject. We will have a full RECORD of that. I guess some made two or three.

I really believe we have reached the point now where we are holding up the entire Senate program. No one has complained about the debate. We have not filed cloture on this side. And we may have to yet this evening, but I hope we could have some indication that we will be permitted to vote tomorrow.

It was my understanding on Friday from a number of Members on the other side—Senator BIDEN, Senator METZENBAUM—that they saw no reason why there could not be a vote on Tuesday. I hope that is the case because we do have as I have indicated a mountain of work to do. We would hope tomorrow then, if we can, to have a vote on Rehnquist, and Scalia following. We will take up appropriations bills until well into the evening tomorrow night.

If there is not to be a vote on those nominees, then we I think are entitled to have that information so that we can plan on what we wish to do to try to expedite the business of the Senate.

I hope there would be more debate, that people are willing to speak on Rehnquist for or against nomination, and now would be an appropriate time to do that. It is only 25 until 6. We did not come in until 11 today, and were not on the nomination until about 12:30. We have had several quorum calls.

I understand we now have a speaker on the nomination. I thank the distinguished Senator from Rhode Island.

Mr. PELL addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Rhode Island.

THE REHNQUIST NOMINATION: A LEGAL EXTREMIST SHOULD NOT LEAD THE SUPREME COURT

Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I appreciate the opportunity to speak on the nomination of Justice Rehnquist.

I must say that after careful consideration I have decided to oppose the nomination of William Rehnquist to serve as Chief Justice of the United States.

I oppose the nomination of Mr. Rehnquist with some reluctance, because I have always believed that a Presidential nominee should be confirmed, barring serious flaws of character or integrity or evidence of gross incompetence which would prevent the nominee from performing the duties of the office for which he or she has been nominated. In the case of Mr. Rehnquist, clearly none of these impairments apply. He is a man of great intellect and good moral character and clearly his record over the past 15 years on the Supreme Court demonstrates his technical competence for the position of Chief Justice.

But when a nominee is being considered for a term that will extend many years after the life of the administration that appointed him, as is uniquely the case with Federal court nominees, then I believe the Senate has a greater burden to discharge in the confirmation process. The question becomes not merely one of whether the justice-designate is a man or woman of intelligence and integrity, but whether the nominee is a person who is appropriate to make legal and social policy for the society that will be inhabitated by our children and our children's children.

The Supreme Court occupies a very singular position in our society. Nine unelected men and women, with lifetime tenure, are vested with the power to act, in effect, as a "superlegislature" in making legal and social policy that touches virtually every aspect of our lives. One need only look at Supreme Court decisions over the past 40 years in the areas of civil rights, voting rights, labor relations, sex discriminaton, and a host of other questions along the cutting edge of social change to realize the virtually infinite power of the Supreme Court to alter the fabric of our society.

The leadership and judicial philosophy of the next Chief Justice will long outlast the viewpoint of the current administration, which of course will expire on January 20, 1989. Chief Justice John Marshall was nominated by the lame duck administration of John Adams in 1801 and, over the next 34 years, left a lasting judicial legacy even though President Adams' political party, the Federalists, has long since ceased to exist. His successor, Roger B. Taney was appointed in the last year of the Jackson administration and served for 28 years. The combined tenure of these two men spanned the period from the infacy of the Republic until the closing days of the Civil War, a reach of well over three generations. In more modern times, the legacy of Chief Justice Earl Warren outlived the Eisenhower administration. From 1789 until the present, a period of roughly 200 years, only 15 persons have served as Chief Justice.

When a nominee is being considered for a term that will extend many years the life of the administration that appointed him, the confirmation process is far more important than in the case of a routine appointment. And when that nominee is also of an extreme viewpoint, whether liberal or conservative, then I believe the Senate should hesitate in confirming that appointment.

The record of Justice Rehnquist, both in the period before he joined the Supreme Court and more importantly over the past 15 years, demonstrates conclusively that his extreme legal philosophy is incompatible with the mainstream of our society today.

I have reviewed his record, and particularly in the areas of civil rights, women's rights and the relationship of government and the individual in modern society, Justice Rehnquist has demonstrated that his extremely narrow judicial philosophy is at odds with the view of society held by the board spectrum of American citizens. His interpretation of the Constitution is a narrow one, perhaps better suited to the more uncomplicated world of 1886 than the turbulent sometimes chaotic American society of 1986.

I would emphasize here that the current confirmation process is not a referendum on whether William Rehnquist should continue as a member of the Supreme Court. I fully expect Mr. Rehnquist to serve as an able member of the Court for many years to come, indeed into the next century, long after most Senators here have left this body. Moreover, I would point out that 15 years ago, I supported Mr. Rehnquist's confirmation when he was nominated to serve as an Associate Justice of the Supreme Court. My concerns about Mr. Rehnquist's extreme legal and constitutional views were not as great when he was selected to serve as an Associate Justice.

The issue before us, today, however, is whether Mr. Rehnquist should be promoted to the high position of Chief Justice. Other than the presidency, no public office in the American system of government is entrusted with greater responsibility than the Chief Justice. He is both the symbolic head of our judicial system and the top policymaker and administrator for the Federal courts. The responsibilities of the Chief Justice make him more than merely "first among equals" in his relationships to his colleagues on the Nation's highest court. This is especially so as we stand at the eve of the bicentennial of our Constitution. The task of the next Chief Justice is to adapt that great document to the society that will usher us into the 21st century, and who does not go beyond the bounds of mainstream constitutional philosophy. That man or woman must have a vision of an evolving society, an evolving Constitution, and I do not believe Justice Rehnquist possesses that.

Here I am reminded of Thomas Jefferson's admonition that institutions of government must evolve with the times:

> I am not an advocate for frequent changes in laws and Constitutions, but laws and institutions must go hand in hand with the progress of the human mind. As that becomes more developed, more enlightened, as new discoveries are made, new truths discovered, and manners and opinions change, with the change of circumstances, institutions must advance also to keep pace with the times.

In conclusion, I would emphasize this point: when it comes to the Chief Justice, he, above all the Justices, must be within the limits of conventional political philosophy and not be on the extreme left or the extreme right. In this case, this would not be the case. If an individual Justice is outside the extremes, then it is no excuse for the Chief Justice.

Mr. MOYNIHAN addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that I might be allowed to proceed as in morning business for 10 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

NICHOLAS DANILOFF

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, in the week since the Senate unanimously deplored the outrageous arrest of Nicholas Daniloff in Moscow, a correspondent for U.S. News & World Report, that situation has worsened and it would not, I think, be wrong to describe it as having escalated at the desire of the Soviet Union; escalated between our assertion of the fact and their denial; their acts of provocation that can only be seen as deliberate; and their decision to act in a manner without precedent in the history of the relations between the United States and the Soviet Union.

I think, Mr. President, that this is something to be emphasized.

In the past, when Soviet spies have been arrested in the United States, it has been common for the Soviet Union to respond by arresting an American. But never before a journalist, and never before a journalist on the charge of espionage.

In the darkest hours of Stalin's murderous dictatorship, this never happened.

Precision requires me to state that, in 1949, the American journalist, Anna Louise Strong, was arrested by the KGB, though there has been a whole succession of names for that organization since it was established in 1918–19.

Anna Louise Strong was a fervent admirer of Mao Tse-tung and the Chinese program which developed into an internal division between the Marxist worlds. Stalin wanted her out of Moscow and arrested her.

That was an exception. That was an argument within the Marxist world.

The arrest of Nicholas Daniloff is a direct, unprecedented attack upon an American journalist. But something has been added. It has become an attack upon the integrity of the President of the United States.

Mr. President, I feel the Senate must take cognizance of this. The passing of the years is never altogether a pleasant thing, but it does mean a certain accumulation of memories.

I can remember very well when, in 1963—while I was a member of the Kennedy administration—American authorities arrested an Amtorg employee. Amtorg, of course, is the Soviet state trading organization.

In response, a very distinguished scholar at Yale University, Prof. Frederick Barghoorn, was arrested in Moscow.

The very idea that this person was engaged in any espionage or other illegal activity was offensive to President Kennedy, and offensive to the academic community in this country, just as the charge against Nicholas Daniloff is offensive.

President Kennedy wrote to General Secretary Khrushchev. This was in the approximate aftermath of the Cuban missile crisis and our relations were not the warmest by any means.

He wrote the General Secretary and said, "You have my assurance that Professor Barghoorn is in no way an agent of American intelligence and we would be much obliged if you would immediately allow him to leave."

Mr. Khrushchev felt he had no alternative. You cannot tell the President of the United States, "You are a liar." He did not. He must have had some thoughts, but in no time at all, Professor Barghoorn was out of prison and back in New Haven.

Mr. President, the exact sequence of events has occurred here with respect to Mr. Daniloff. Not many days after his arrest, as reported in the press of September 7, it was stated that Mr. Reagan had written Mr. Gorbachev on September 5 and given his personal assurance that Mr. Daniloff was not a spy. This term "personal assurance" was given to the press by an official of the administration who in no way wished it not to be known but, to the contrary, wanted it to be known. Obviously, there was a parallel with the earlier letter to Mr. Khruschev.

□ 1750

Then, Mr. President, I am sorry to say that the very day following receipt of the President's letter, which we may assume was immediately transmitted, the Soviets announced that Mr. Daniloff would be charged with espionage, a crime for which the penalty in the Soviet Union is death. That is a sufficient outrage in and of itself. But, Mr. President, it was accompanied by the decision in effect to reject the President's assurances. It is a statement by Mr. Gorbachev that he either believes the President of the United States to be lying, or else that Mr. Gorbachev does not care about the President's statement of the facts. Mr. Gorbachev means to proceed with the prosecution in any event.

May I draw attention, Mr. President, to one of the more glaring aspects of this event in Moscow? On Saturday, September 13, Mr. Gerasimov, a Foreign Ministry spokesman for the Soviet Union, escalated yet further the charges against Mr. Daniloff, stating that he had been in contact with the named Americans who are alleged to be involved with intelligence activities.

Mr. GOLDWATER assumed the Chair.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Yesterday, on "This Week with David Brinkley," that seasoned and always agile journalist asked Mr. Gerasimov to appear. He did. He asked him to tell us what was going on in Moscow. He did.

He referred to the scene in the Lenin Hills where Mr. Daniloff was handed a package from a Soviet citizen, whereupon he was sized by police officials. The package was opened and found to contain secret documents of the Soviet State, for which reason it was necessary to indict Mr. Daniloff for espionage, held him in prison, interrogate him, and remand him to his own Embassy to await trial on a charge for which the penalty is death.

This went on for some moments, Mr. President. My distinguished and good friend in the chair very possibly witnessed this. Suddenly, in the most innocent possible way, Mr. Brinkley asked the Soviet spokesman, "And tell us, what has happened to the Soviet citizen who passed this secret information to Daniloff? Is he in prison?" Silence. Silence. "The matter is being investigated."

Now, Mr. President, could there be a more transparent assertion that this was a situation of entrapment? Are the Soviets much in the habit of arresting foreign agents who are involved with their own citizens who are, shall I say, legitimately involved in treason, and letting them just go off for their vacations or whatever? Obviously not. I am afraid that the poor man was used by the KGB may be in prison today as they could not very well have him walking about the streets. This is so clearly a case of entrapment.

But, Mr. President, beyond that, the solemn word of the President of the United States has been rejected. It raises for us in the Senate, and for the American people generally, the question of what can be our relationship with a Government which is so disdainful, is so contemptuous of our Government?

When the President of the United States sends a letter about a matter of this gravity, he speaks for the Nation. Consequently, I would hope that the President might make that letter public. There is a sense in which the only people who do not have it are the American people. The Soviets do—the letter was sent to Mr. Gorbachev. The fact of it being sent was made public, as it should have been. The essential contents were made public, as they should have been. But would it not be useful if the President or the Secretary of State were to send to the Congress a copy of that letter so we might see what it is Mr. Gorbachev has chosen to reject?

If he is prepared, in effect, to say the President of the United States has lied, are we prepared to send the man's nation subsidized wheat? Are we free to enter into agreements of any consequence? Can we trust their word if they are so disdainful and contemptuous of ours? I do not see that possibility.

It may be they did not at first understand the enormity of their act. But surely, they could not have failed to grasp it when the President personally intervened in a manner that had precedent.

When President Kennedy intervened, the American was released. Mr. Khrushchev said, "I take your word." And a President is in the position indeed to say, yes, he was one of our fellows, I wish you would let him go anyway. That is the game nations play; we do it all the time, as a matter of fact.

But with Mr. Daniloff, there was obviously no occasion to make such a statement. President Reagan did assert, through direct personal contact with the General Secretary of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, that this man has been wrongfully imprisoned and charged. And I am sure he asked for his immediate release.

If that is not sufficient, if that does not matter to the Soviet Union, then we have to contemplate what that means.

Let us ask, what now in these relations? If they cannot be based at some level on some elemental form of trust—not trust in terms of the large movements of nations, but trust adversaries have to have about some of the rules of engagement, as the distinguished Presiding Officer would use that term, we are heading for a very cold winter indeed, again to use a phrase of John F. Kennedy.

In that regard, Mr. President, the President will be in New York on Monday, September 22, addressing the General Assembly of the United Nations.

□ 1800

And whilst there, I hope he might take cognizance of a crisis in the finances of the institution: A crisis precipitated on this floor when we made the decision to reduce our payments to the United Nations, from the 25 percent which is our assessed amount to 20 percent, unless the General Assembly adopts a system of weighted voting based on budgetary contributions. Such a system would require a change in the U.N. Charter equivalent to a constitutional amendment. Such a change is not feasible given the voting system in the United Nations. The result is that we seem to be heading inexorably for a situation where we are in default.

I have said several times, Mr. President, that I would be happy to see the budget of the United Nations reduced. But I do not want to see our influence there reduced. They are two different things. The budget payment is meant to represent a nation's portion of the world gross product, and to say we are a less important country than we have been seems to me to serve no purpose of any kind. Still, we have done this. And either the State Department or the White House has informally let the press know that they will ask us to restore moneys or appropriate additional moneys to avoid this crisis, one which we were very severely concerned with when the Soviets refused to pay assessments for the operations in the Congo in the 1960's.

I would hope, Mr. President, that when Mr. Reagan does speak in New York on Monday, he might even say that if we have a problem with financing the United Nations, it is in no small measure derived from the fact that the Soviet Union is in gross violation of its responsibilities under the charter. The U.S.S.R. places intelligence agents in the Secretariat, directly violating section 2, article 100 of the charter. This is more than a violation. It is a grievance over which the United States and the American public might properly be outraged. The simple fact is that when the Soviet intelligence agents in the Secretariat get their U.N. checks, they quite literally turn them in to the Soviet mission and get instead their regular pay allowances from the U.S.S.R. as if they were working in the mission itself in an overseas post. It is insult enough that the Soviets violate the charter and that Mr. Zakharov is a U.N. employee, but it certainly adds injury to insult that we are required to pay part of his salary. It would do no harm for the President to make this point.

We are in our current situation with the Soviets because after the United States arrested Mr. Zakharov, who does not have diplomatic immunity, the Soviets arrested an American who did not have diplomatic immunity.

Well, why have we let them do this for 30 years? Why do we not say to them the charter means something to us; that we did not write it that way without a care as to whether it would be observed; that we will not have your spies in the Secretariat building?

It was during my tenure as Ambassador to the United Nations that Arkady Slevchenko, the Under Secretary General of Political Affairs and the highest ranking Soviet member of the Secretariat, decided he wished to defect to the United States. He came over. He stayed in place for some time. He described this Soviet spying and most explicitly gave us the names, ranks, and serial numbers of the KGB and GRU agents in the United Nations. When a responsible foreign civil servant knows that the man in the next office is a Soviet spy, just think of the burden placed on the elemental workings of that organization. It is an outrage. It is a violation of the charter. It should never have been allowed to begin with and it ought to be stopped.

Mr. President, I see the distinguished majority leader is on the floor. The Senator was very courteous to me in giving me time to make these remarks and I yield the floor.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that two articles be entered into the RECORD, one from the New York Times of September 7, 1986, and one from the Washington Post of September 8, 1986.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the materials will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, I had asked unanimous consent to proceed as if in morning session, and I assume we return to executive session.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REAGAN WRITES TO GORBACHEV ABOUT REPORTER

(By Bernard Gwertzman)

WASHINGTON, Sept. 6.—President Reagan has sent a message to Mikhail S. Gorbachev, urging the immediate release of an American reporter held in Moscow on suspicion of espionage, Administration officials said today.

Mr. Reagan, in his first direct involvement in the case of Nicholas S. Daniloff, correspondent of the magazine U.S. News & World Report said in the message that he will offer personal assurances Mr. Daniloff was not a spy, the officials said.

The President also told Mr. Gorbachev, according to the officials, that Soviet-American relations were too important to be affected by the Daniloff case.

MESSAGE DELIVERED ON FRIDAY

The message was reported to have been delivered Friday. It was part of a stepped-up American effort that included a public declaration by Secretary of State George P. Shultz on Friday to press for the release of Mr. Daniloff, who was arrested Aug. 30.

The K.G.B., the Soviet intelligence and internal security agency, has accused Mr. Daniloff of espionage and Moscow has rejected American demands for his release. White House and State Department officials said today that if Mr. Daniloff was not freed by Monday, they would begin taking decisions on retaliatory measures.

Mr. Reagan's unusual testimony to the effect that Mr. Daniloff was not a spy was similar to a statement by President John F. Kennedy in November 1963 to gain the release of a Yale professor, Frederick C. Barghoorn. Professor Barghoorn had been seized in Moscow in apparent retaliation for the arrest in New Jersey of a driver for the Soviet trade agency, Amtorg.

The existence of Mr. Reagan's letter in the Daniloff case was first disclosed by U.S. News and World Rerpot. The White House had no comment, but other officials confirmed the report.

A senior official said the K.G.B. seemed to hope that Mr. Daniloff could be traded for Gennadi F. Zakharov, a Soviet spy suspect held in New York.

Mr. Daniloff told his wife by telephone from prison today that interrogators had made "fuzzy" remarks about a possible exchange, but that in the meantime they were acting as if his case would go to trial and he would be convicted.

On Friday, Secretary of State Shultz said that the United States ruled out a trade and that Mr. Daniloff had concurred.

The United States contends the two cases are not equivalent. The Americans say that Mr. Daniloff was set up when an envelope handed him by a Soviet acquaintance turned out to contain secret materials, and Mr. Zakharov was caught as he was paying for secret documents.

The Americans have made a proposal to the Soviet Union for resolving the situation. Under the proposal, Mr. Daniloff would be freed and allowed to return to the United States, and the United States Attorney's office would then ask a judge to release Mr. Zakharov in the custody of the Soviet Ambasador, Yuri V. Dubinin, pending trial on espionage charges.

Mr. Dubinin's initial request that Mr. Zakharov be turned over to him was rejected during the arraignment hearing. Another hearing is set for Tuesday, by which time it may be clear whether the Daniloff case turns out to be "a tempest in a teapot or a big deal," a senior official said.

This message, he said, has been conveyed to the Russians in different ways in recent days. On Friday, for instance, during the opening of special arms control talks here, Paul H. Nitze, the American delegate, raised the matter privately with Viktor P. Karpov, the Soviet delegate.

Mr. Shultz is scheduled to meet with Foreign Minister Edward A. Shevardnadze on Sept. 19 and 20 to discuss, in part, the setting of a date for a meeting between President Reagan and Mikhail S. Gorbachev, the Soviet leader.

"If Daniloff is still in prison by Sept. 19 it is going to be very hard for there to be a very constructive meeting, because Daniloff will have to head the agenda," a State Department official said. "And it blows my imagination to see the President sitting down with Gorbachev if the Daniloff case is still out there."

Officials said that a list of retaliatory moves was being discussed, but that it was difficult to identify steps that would be both damaging to the Soviet Union and not counterproductive to the United States.

CARTER'S SANCTIONS RECALLED

An official said that the Carter Administration, for instance, "shot itself in the foot" with some of the sanctions it imposed on the Soviet Union after its forces intervened in Afghanistan in December 1979.

One was the canceling of plans to open consulates in Kiev and New York. The Russians lost very little, the official said, because they already have a large presence in New York, but "we lost a city where there are hardly any Americans."

He said the possible withdrawal of an offer to sell the Russians four million tons of subsidized wheat would be of no significance because there was a glut on the world grain markets. Moreover, it would damage American farmers.

He said that the United States was looking at sanctions that would cause some "permanent disability" if the Daniloff case is not resolved.

"We have to be more resourceful than we have been in the past and come up with something genuinely punitive, and convince them that the seizing of Nick Daniloff was absolutely not the way to go in relations," the official said.

The Daniloff case has again aggravated differences within the Administration on how to deal with the Soviet Union.

Defense Secretary Caspar W. Weinberger considers the arrest of Mr. Daniloff so outrageous that he says the Soviet Union should be punished now, and not threatened with some future steps, an aide said.

Mr. Weinberger said on Friday that the Soviet action had endangered arms control talks, and the aide said Mr. Weinberger would not mind putting off future negotiations until the reporter was freed.

But Mr. Shultz was said by officials to believe that Soviet officials should be given time to extricate themselves from the situation in a way that allows them to save face. Thus, he argued that Moscow should be given at least until Monday.

Several officials acknowledged that the Administration's public position has been flawed. On two occasions, spokesmen at the California White House were the sources for articles suggesting that the United States was amenable to a deal, when the only arrangement was to consider turning over Mr. Zakharov to Soviet custody pending trial after Mr. Daniloff was safe in the United States.

DANILOFF IS INDICTED AS SPY BY SOVIETS

(By Gary Lee)

Moscow, Sept. 7.—American journalist Nicholas Daniloff was indicted today on charges of espionage against the Soviet Union, in a move that both U.S. and Soviet officials said could pose a serious new obstacle to efforts to improve relations between the two superpowers.

Daniloff, the correspondent here for U.S. News & World Report, is the first American journalist to be formally charged by Soviet authorities with espionage.

There was no indication when Daniloff would be put on trial, and he told a colleague by telephone today that he understood the pretrial investigation could last six months or more. Without elaborating, however, he also said, "I received oblique hints that it will end before being brought to court."

The indictment was publicly announced tonight on the evening news on Soviet state television, after Daniloff had informed Jeff Trimble, the new U.S. News & World Report correspondent here, in a telephone call from Lefortovo Prison, where he has been held since being arrested.

Earlier, Soviet Foreign Ministry spokesman Gennady Gerasimov, appearing from Moscow on CBS-TV's "Face the Nation," had said that Daniloff was about to be charged and "there is going to be a trial."

Daniloff, who was about to end a 5½-year assignment here, was seized by KGB secret police agents Aug. 30 moments after he received an envelope from a longtime Soviet acquaintance. Daniloff said he had expected the envelope to contain newspaper clippings. But when the KGB opened it, Daniloff told Mortimer Zuckerman, chairman of U.S. News & World Report, who visited him in prison Tuesday, it turned out to hold photographs of military installations and negatives of maps.

Gerasimov, interviewed from here by CBS today, said, "If you think he is innocent, we can learn pretty soon because there is going to be a trial."

Gerasimov also charged that Daniloff "doesn't deny the things that he got in that unfortunate envelope were secret ones," and he said that "my understanding is that this particular envelope is not the only thing that they have against him." He would not give any details.

"Let us not make this case a hostage for Soviet-American relations," Gerasimov said, observing that "if you really want to ruin Soviet-American rapprochement, you can always find something happening here or there."

The formal announcement of the indictment and trial plans marked the beginning of a tougher official line here against Daniloff. The official Soviet Communist Party newspaper Pravda, breaking a weeklong silence on the case, attacked Daniloff and his American supporters, including Secretary of State George P. Shultz.

Western diplomats here interpret Moscow's threat of a trial and the hardened official line as a signal that the Kremlin is unlikely to accept any early resolution of the Daniloff case short of a direct swap of the American reporter for Gennadi Zakharov, the Soviet U.N. employee who was arrested on espionage charges in the United States and is being held for trial.

The Daniloff arrest came exactly one week after the FBI arrested Zakharov, moments after he paid a New York man for what U.S. officials said were classified documents.

"My case is moving into a more serious phase," Daniloff told Jeff Trimble's wife, Gretchen, who answered the telephone when he called his home from prison this afternoon. "The charge of espionage puts it on a par with another case we know," he said, in a clear reference to Zakharov, whose release the Soviets have demanded.

Daniloff had earlier rejected a swap, but his position appears to have softened after a week of KGB interrogation.

"The quickest solution would be if the two cases could be looked at on an equal basis," he said in today's call, according to Gretchen Trimble.

But he also told Jeff Trimble in the same call that he personally favored a solution in which the charges against him would be dropped and he would be cleared.

The Soviet Union has arrested a number of Americans on suspicion of spying in the past, but most have been diplomats who have been quickly expelled. Neither Daniloff nor Zakharov has diplomatic immunity.

Gretchen Trimble said Daniloff told her that authorities had informed him he now faces a possible six-month investigation period that could be extended by three months and would be followed by a trial before a Soviet military tribunal.

Hints of a possible swap have arisen, he said, "but I have the overwhelming sense that they are pursuing charges of espionage."

Today's announcements indicate that the original U.S. bid to gain Daniloff's freedom has been rejected in Moscow. Reagan administration officials proposed that Zakharov be released to the custody of the Soviet ambassador in Washington while awaiting trial. In exchange, Daniloff would go free, according to the proposal.

The formal charging also implies that President Reagan's appeal to Soviet leader Mikhail Gorbachev to free Daniloff, sent in a letter Friday and publicized yesterday, also was turned down.

Daniloff's arrest is widely presented in the West as a KGB setup related to the arrest of Zakharov. Reagan reportedly told Gorbachev in the letter that it could harm U.S.-Soviet relations.

An American Embassy spokesman called the Daniloff indictment "very bad news indeed," but declined to asess its immediate impact on U.S.-Soviet ties.

When asked whether Daniloff is the victim of a trumped-up charge, Gerasimov, in the U.S. televison interview, said, "He went to this particular meeting with somebody of his own will."

"He made this step and he must take the consequences," Gerasimov added.

In answer to a question, Gerasimov said he did not know whether Daniloff had paid for the material in the envelope.

In today's telephone call, Daniloff said he has reiterated to Soviet Officials that he is a journalist and not a spy. But he told Jeff Trimble, "what is looked at in the U.S. as normal journalistic activity is not seen that way here."

In a commentary on the Daniloff case, Pravda condemned the "ballyhoo" over it in the United States and in the western press, saying, "The incident has been turned into a forged pretext to stir up one more anti-Soviet campaign."

"On the Potomac," Pravda said, "they raise a frantic press hullabaloo." It said that State Department officials, including

Shultz, "do not shrink from including themselves in this farcical course."

"It is evident that the zealous supporters of the failed agent urgently need to distract the attention of the world public from the Soviet peace initiatives," Pravda said.

NOMINATION OF WILLIAM H. REHNQUIST, TO BE CHIEF JUSTICE OF THE UNITED STATES

The Senate continued with the consideration of the nomination.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The distinguished majority leader.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, what is the pending business?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The pending business is the Rehnquist nomination.

CLOTURE MOTION

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, it had been my fervent hope, based on conversations I had last Friday with a number of my colleagues on both sides, we would be able to vote on the Rehnquist nomination on Tuesday. I have now been advised by the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. KENNEDY] that he does not want to vote on Tuesday. I think that is unfortunate. But it leaves, as far as I can tell, very little recourse than to file a cloture motion because the clock is ticking and another day means it will probably make it that much more difficult to meet the October 3 adjournment date. I have had a discussion with the Senator from Massachusetts. I have asked him if cloture were filed, if we could move on, if we had the consent of the distinguished minority leader and other Members on both sides, to other business and time would not be wasted, because I do not believe there is that much more debate on the Rehnquist nomination. He did indicate he would be willing to permit us to move into appropriation bills and do other things, but he did not want to vote tomorrow and that is his right. I do not agree with him but that is his right. I mean I do not agree that we should not vote tomorrow. It seems to me this would hopefully bring this matter to a conclusion on Wednesday, although I am sure there could be a great deal of debate on Wednesday. So I am going to send a cloture motion to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislation clerk read as follows:

CLOTURE MOTION

We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of Rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close debate on the nomination of William H. Rehnquist, of Virginia, to be Chief Justice of the United States.

□ 1810

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry: When would the vote occur on this cloture motion? When would the cloture motion mature?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On Wednesday.

Mr. DOLE. One hour after we convene?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. One hour after we convene.

Mr. DOLE. I will consult with the distinguished minority leader and see if we can work out a time to accommodate all our colleagues. This is a very important vote, and I think they want to be here.

Again, if we can do additional work tomorrow on a couple of appropriation bills, that will be helpful. I regret that some of our colleagues have made plans on the fervent hope that we would vote tomorrow. They may have to modify those plans. But this is it. There is no way we can force a vote tomorrow. We had hoped that by accommodating our colleagues, we would be permitted to vote tomorrow. That is not going to happen. I hope we can invoke cloture and that shortly after cloture is invoked, we can proceed to vote on the Rehnquist nomination.

I am advised that on the Scalia nomination, there probably will be a little debate, and we could dispose of that nomination in a matter of hours or less.

So I alert my colleagues that on tomorrow we hope to fill in the blanks, the time we have, with the Interior appropriation and the D.C. appropriation. As I understand it, there is one other, Transportation.

So, with some luck, we might be able to conclude action on those three appropriation bills tomorrow and still permit Senators who wish to speak on the Rehniquist nomination to do so.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate resume the consideration of legislative business.

There being no objection, the Senate resumed the consideration of legislative business.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT RECEIVED DURING ADJOURNMENT

Under the authority of the order of the Senate of January 3, 1985, the Secretary of the Senate on September 12, 1986, during the adjournment of the Senate, received messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received on September 12, 1986 are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mrs. Emery, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session, the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

DRUG-FREE AMERICA ACT OF 1986—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 172

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with accompanying documents; which was referred to the Committee on the Judiciary:

To the Congress of the United States:

I am pleased to transmit today for your immediate consideration and enactment the "Drug-Free America Act of 1986." This proposal is one of the most important, and one of the most critically needed, pieces of legislation that my Administration has proposed. I strongly encourage the Congress to act upon this proposal before its adjournment.

Drugs are menacing our Nation. When Nancy and I spoke to the Nation last evening about what we Americans can do to win the fight against illegal drugs, we said that it is time to pull together. All Americans—in our schools, our jobs, our neighborhoods—must work together. No one level of government, no single institution, no lone group of citizens can eliminate the horror of drug abuse. In this national crusade, each of us is a critical soldier.

From the beginning of my Administration, I pledged to make the fight against drug abuse one of my highest priorities. We have taken strong steps to turn the tide against illegal drugs. To reduce the supply of drugs available in our country, we moved aggressively against the growers, producers, transporters, smugglers, and traffickers. Our spending for drug law enforcement has nearly tripled since 1981. To reduce demand, we plotted a course to encourage those who use drugs to stop and those who do not, never to begin. I am especially pleased at the success that the military has experienced, reducing drug usage by over 67 percent among our Armed Forces. And as a direct result of Nancy's leadership and commitment, over 10,000 "Just Say No" clubs have been formed throughout the United States over the past few years to discourage drug use among our youth.

Today I am announcing a set of initiatives that will build upon what we have already accomplished. This set of initiatives, totaling almost $900 million in Fiscal Year 1987 in additional resources targeted to ridding our society of drugs, brings out total Federal contribution for fighting drugs to over $3 billion. Our initiatives are composed of several separate budget amendments; a six-title bill seeking stronger authority for our law enforcement personnel, both at home and abroad, increased penalties for taking part in the sale of illegal drugs, and establishing a new program to help our schools reach our youngsters before drugs reach them; and an Executive order setting the example for our Nation's workplaces by achieving a drug-free Federal work force.

Through separate budget amendments that I will soon transmit, I will request $100 million for State grants to enhance our capacity in this country to treat drug users. We must put a stop to the tragedy of a drug user who seeks help and cannot get urgently needed treatment. I will request $34 million for increased research into the most successful rehabilitation and treatment methods. Our expanded research will include a focus on better ways to intervene with high-risk children and adolescents. I will also request $69 million for grants to communities that show they can pull together to fight the scourge in their neighborhoods. Federal matching funds will be made available to help these communities to increase education, prevention, and rehabilitation efforts. Finally, I will submit a request for additional funds for other intervention, education, and prevention assistance from the Federal Government.

Our law enforcement and interdiction efforts must be increased as well. I will propose substantial increased funding—approximately $400 million in 1987—for a major new enforcement initiative along our southwest border. A similar initiative will be proposed for our southeast border, involving at least $100 million in added funds.

I will be proposing shortly appropriate budget amendments to ensure that these necessary funds are made available. At the same time, other activities will be scaled back in order not to add to the Federal deficit.

The legislation I transmit today, the "Drug-Free America Act of 1986," is the second component of the greatly increased anti-drug abuse effort to which I have pledged my Administration. This legislation is a six-titled measure that, when enacted, will be the cornerstone of our efforts.

Title I, the "Drug-Free Federal Workplace Act of 1986," enables the Federal government, as the Nation's largest employer, to set an example in ensuring a drug-free workplace. The enactment of this title will make clear that the use of illegal drugs by current or prospective Federal employees will not be tolerated.

Title II of the bill, the "Drug-Free Schools Act of 1986," authorizes a major new grant program—at $100 million in 1987—to assist State and local governments in establishing drug-free learning environments in elementary and secondary schools.

Title III, the "Substance Abuse Services Amendments of 1986," responds to the grave health threat that the use of illegal drugs presents. It extends, from Fiscal Year 1988 through Fiscal Year 1992, the block grant under which funds are made available to the States for alcohol and drug abuse and mental health programs, and eliminates several unnecessary restrictions contained in current law that limit the flexibility of the States in putting these funds to work where they are most needed.

Title IV, the "Drug Interdiction and International Cooperation Act of 1986," emphasizes the need for increased and better international cooperation in the fight against drugs. This important set of proposals improve the procedures used in seizing the proceeds of narcotics-related crimes committed in other countries, facilitates the participation of United States law enforcement personnel in drug enforcement operations abroad, and ensures that aliens in this country who are convicted of illegal drug offenses can be deported.

Title V, the "Anti-Drug Enforcement Act of 1986," contains several measures that make available the necessary tools to our law enforcement personnel and our courts to ensure that those convicted of illegal drug offenses are both suitably punished and deprived of the fruits of their unlawful labors. This title also substantially increases penalties for drug trafficking and establishes additional penalties for persons who take advantage of and employ juveniles in drug trafficking. This title provides the tools to go after the manufacturers of "designer drugs," and hits drug traffickers in their pocketbooks by cracking down hard on money laundering, a practice widely used to conceal the illegal origin of large amounts of cash.

Finally, title VI, the "Public Awareness and Private Sector Initiatives Act of 1986," encourages the increased cooperation between the private sector and the Government in educating the public about the hazards of drug abuse.

I applaud the Congress for grappling with the drug abuse problem on a timely basis, and I urge speedy consideration of these proposals. But I do not for a moment suggest that enactment of these legislative proposals will result, by itself, in the elimination of illegal drugs in America. This can only happen when all Americans join together in the fight against drugs. Prompt enactment by the Congress of this package of our legislative proposals is an essential step in our plan to eliminate drug abuse.

Today, I underscore my commitment to this effort by signing the third component of my administration's anti-drug initiative, an Executive order that supports the objectives contained in Title I of the proposed legislation. The Executive order puts in place the policy that the use of drugs by Federal employees, either on duty or off duty, will not be tolerated. I am directing the head of each Federal agency to develop a plan to achieve a drug-free workplace and authorizing drug testing for applicants for all Federal jobs and for employees in certain sensitive positions. I am directing that programs to counsel, treat, and rehabilitate employees found to be using illegal drugs be expanded.

Over the years, our country has never hesitated to defend itself against the attack of any enemy, however formidable and whatever the odds. In many ways, the enemy facing us now—illegal drugs—is as formidable as any we have ever encountered. As a result of the combined actions of all Americans we will achieve the goal we all seek—a drug-free America for ourselves and for our children.

RONALD REAGAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, September 15, 1986.

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE

At 11:29 a.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Mr. Berry, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House agrees to the amendment of the Senate to the following bill:

H.R. 4868. An act to prohibit loans to, other investments in, and certain other activities with respect to, South Africa, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the House disagrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 4021) to extend and improve the Rehabilitation Act of 1973; it asks a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. HAWKINS, Mr. BIAGGI, Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. MARTINEZ, Mr. HAYES, Mr. ECKART of Ohio, Mr. WALDON, Mr. JEFFORDS, Mr. GOODLING, Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri, and Mr. BARTLETT as managers of the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House disagrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 4116) to extend and improve the Domestic Volunteer Service Act of 1973; it agrees to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints the following as managers of the conference on the part of the House:

For consideration of all provisions of the House bill and of the Senate amendment and modifications committed to conference: Mr. HAWKINS, Mr. ECKART of Ohio, Mr. JEFFORDS, and Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri.

For consideration of all provisions of the House bill and of the Senate amendment (except sections 3, 4, 5, 7, and 8(a) of the House bill and sections 3, 6, and 9 of the Senate amendment) and modifications committed to conference: Mr. KILDEE, Mr. OWENS, Mr. PERKINS, Mr. BRUCE, Mr. PETRI, and Mr. TAUKE.

For consideration of all provisions of the House bill and of the Senate amendment (except sections 8(b), 8(c), 8(d), and 9 of the House bill, and sections 4, 5, and 10 of the Senate amendment) and modifications committed to conference: Mr. WILLIAMS, Mr. BIAGGI, Mr. MARTINEZ, Mr. HAYES, Mr. WALDON, Mr. GOODLING, and Mr. BARTLETT.

At 3:15 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Ms. Goetz, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House has passed the following bill, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 5484. An act to strengthen Federal efforts to encourage foreign cooperation in eradicating illicit drug crops and in halting international drug traffic, to improve enforcement of Federal drug laws and enhance interdiction of illicit drug shipments, to provide strong Federal leadership in establishing effective drug abuse prevention and education programs, to expand Federal support for drug abuse treatment and rehabilitation efforts, and for other purposes.

At 3:44 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Mr. Berry, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House has passed the following bill, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 5313. An act making appropriations for the Department of Housing and Urban Development, and for sundry independent agencies, boards, commissions, corporations, and offices for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED

The message also announced that the Speaker has signed the following enrolled bills:

H.R. 3247. An act to amend the Native American Programs Act of 1974 to authorize appropriations for fiscal years 1987 through 1990;

H.R. 3443. An act to designate the Closed Basin Conveyance Channel of the Closed Basin Division, San Luis Valley Project, Colorado, as the "Franklin Eddy Canal"; and

H.R. 4868. An act to prohibit loans to, other investments in, and certain other activities with respect to, South Africa, and for other purposes.

The enrolled bills were subsequently signed by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

MEASURES REFERRED

The following bill was read the first and second times by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

H.R. 5313. An act making appropriations for the Department of Housing and Urban Development, and for sundry independent agencies, boards, commissions, corporations, and offices for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Appropriations.

MEASURES PLACED ON THE CALENDAR

The following bills were read the second time and placed on the calendar:

S. 2798. A bill to establish and implement a comprehensive policy to combat drug abuse in the United States; and

S. 2814. A bill to preserve the authority of the Supreme Court Police to provide protective services for Justices and Court personnel.

The Committee on Environment and Public Works was discharged from the further consideration of the following bill, which was placed on the calendar:

S. 1903. An act to improve the safe operation of commercial motor vehicles, and for other purposes.

MEASURES READ THE FIRST TIME

The following bill was read the first time:

H.R. 5484. An act to strengthen Federal efforts to encourage foreign cooperation in eradicating illicit drug crops and in halting international drug traffic, to improve enforcement of Federal drug laws and enhance interdiction of illicit drug shipments, to provide strong Federal leadership in establishing effective drug abuse prevention and education programs, to expand Federal support for drug abuse treatment and rehabilitation efforts, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED

The Secretary of the Senate reported that on September 12, 1986, she had presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bill:

S. 2462. A bill to provide for the awarding of a special gold medal to Aaron Copland.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. HATFIELD, from the Committee on Appropriations, with amendments:

H.R. 5162. A bill making appropriations for energy and water development for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, and for other purposes (Rept. No. 99-441).

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

The following bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first and second time by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

By Mr. BAUCUS:

S. 2819. A bill for the relief of Jon Engen; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. BIDEN (for himself and Mr. ROTH):

S. 2820. A bill to consolidate and improve Federal laws providing compensation and establishing liability for oil spills; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

By Mr. CHILES:

S. 2821. A bill to direct the Secretary of Agriculture to release a reversionary interest of the United States in certain land located in Putnam County, Florida, and to direct the Secretary of the Interior to convey certain mineral interests of the United States in such land to the State of Florida; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

By Mr. BUMPERS (for himself, Mr. MATHIAS, Mr. STENNIS, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. DOLE, Mr. CRANSTON, Mr. WEICKER, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. ZORINSKY, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. NUNN, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. PRYOR, Mr. SIMON, Mr. KERRY and Mr. GORE):

S.J. Res. 413. Joint resolution to designate the month of October 1986 as "Learning Disabilities Awareness Month"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. BIDEN (for himself and Mr. ROTH):

S. 2820. A bill to consolidate and improve Federal laws providing compensation and establishing liability for oil spills; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

OIL POLLUTION CLEANUP ACT

Mr. BIDEN. Mr. President, today I am joined by my colleague from Delaware in introducing legislation to establish a unified Federal liability and compensation program for oil spills. This bill is nearly identical to that introduced by Senator MITCHELL and others on September 9.

For over a decade, Congress has debated the establishment of a comprehensive and unified Federal oil spill program. It is now time for the Senate to act on this legislation, and go on to settling our differences with the other body, differences which should be relatively easy to reconcile.

Over 10 years ago, I introduced a comprehensive oil spill compensation and liability package. Since that time, we have debated the issue time and time again, and failed to put into law a program that is clearly needed.

While Congress has floundered on enacting appropriate legislation, proof of the need for a new program has mounted. At the time of my earlier bill, the wreck of the Torrey Canyon in 1967 provided the best evidence of the need for an effective oil pollution compensation system. The 1978 wreck of the Amoco Cadiz, which resulted in an infamous spill off the coast of France, showed how extensive the damage from an oil spill could be.

Closer to my State of Delaware, just about 1 year ago, the Panamanian-flagged Grand Eagle spilled over 435,000 gallons of oil into the Delaware River. The spill threatened several coastal areas of the State, including some fragile wetlands and wildlife refuges. Soon after the Grand Eagle spill, an additional 180,000 gallons of oil leaked into the river from a second oil tanker.

On Wednesday, September 10, another large oil spill occurred on the Delaware River. The Viking Osprey was hauling a load of 550,000 gallons of crude oil to a refinery outside of Philadelphia when it ran aground. The ship worked itself off the mud, but this was the apparent cause of a large release of oil. Early reports indicate that the crew did not even realize the ship had a problem. The Coast Guard estimates that over 300,000 gallons of oil were on the river.

The impact of a spill of this size can be quite serious and wide-ranging. Depending on its location, water supplies can be threatened and marshlands severely damaged. Even industry has to take special precautions to prevent oil-laden water from damaging its equipment and machinery.

Under existing law, the ship has roughly $6.3 million in liability coverage. This may be enough in this particular case because the cleanup operation has so far been able to contain most of the release. The fact that the ship is moored to a pier has helped the cleanup operation. However, if the proposals before the Senate, including the one I am introducing today, were law, coverage would range between $17 million and $20 million, and include payment for economic damages. Residents of my State and others should not have to continue to risk inadequate coverage for damages they may suffer from an oil spill, particularly when a solution is at hand.

We have been averaging about two major oil spills a year on the Delaware River. These are the major ones. Dozens of smaller ones take place every year. The point is that we can try to go to the root of the matter to prevent spills from occurring in the first place, but this is not going to completely eliminate them no matter how well-intentioned our efforts. Clearly, a simple and comprehensive program is needed to remedy the failures of shipping safety standards and practices and to mitigate the environmental and economic damages caused by an oil spill, no matter what its cause.

Time is the critical factor at this point of the session. The Senate Environment Committee is making progress toward reporting a bill. My goal in introducing this legislation, which does not vary greatly from the bill before the Environment Committee, is to make sure that oil spill legislation does not, once again, fall by the wayside as the end of the session approaches.

I believe the Environment Committee is well on its way to reporting a good bill. However, after 10 years of delay on this issue, I am aware that unforeseen obstacles could arise to slow its progress. My bill will provide the Senate with an alternative to achieve the goal of enactment of oil spill liability and compensation legislation this year. Should the committee bill become stalled, I am prepared to offer this bill as an amendment to other legislation.

Mr. President, we have no new issues to consider in the oil spill liability debate. It is time to put an end to the years of nonaction on this idea. We should not let this new opportunity to enact oil spill legislation pass us by.

By Mr. BUMPERS (for himself, Mr. MATHIAS, Mr. STENNIS, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. INOUYE, Mr. DOLE, Mr. CRANSTON, Mr. WEICKER, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. ZORINSKY, Mr. DECONCINI, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. LEVIN, Mr. NUNN, Mr. BRADLEY, Mr. PRYOR, Mr. SIMON, Mr. KERRY, and Mr. GORE):

S.J. Res. 413. Joint resolution to designate the month of October 1986 as "Learning Disabilities Awareness Month"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

LEARNING DISABILITIES AWARENESS MONTH

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce along with my distinguished colleague from Maryland, Senator MATHIAS and others, a joint resolution to designate October 1986 "Learning Disabilities Awareness Month." Last year, along with Representatives KEMP and BROWN in the House, Senator MATHIAS and I sponsored a similar joint resolution for October 1985, which was signed into law as Public Law 99-115. I strongly believe that the problem of learning disabilities needs the attention that such a commemorative month provides. In this light, Congress should once again work to focus attention on dealing with and understanding handicaps.

There are some 10 million children in the United States diagnosed as learning disabled. There are many more who may be suffering from these difficulties, without being so diagnosed. We simply want the families of the learning disabled to know that we care, and that we are willing to devote the attention of this country to their plight.

Great strides have been made in this country since the enactment of the Education for all Handicapped Children Act of 1975 (Public Law 94-142). The programs spawned by this legislation have brightened the lives of many children and engendered the hope that their difficulty can be overcome. These programs have enabled them to pursue their goals to the fullest potential. Under the auspices of Public Law 94-142, over 1.8 million learning disabled children have been served. Today, there are also hundreds of national and local support groups that help these children, their families, and the public to become more informed about the problems facing the learning disabled.

The term "learning disabled" did not emerge until the 1960's, but the problem had been studied extensively since the early 1800's. Because of the many misconceptions and controversies surrounding the study of the learning disabled, and in order to provide a framework for funding, legislation, and program development, Congress adopted legislation in 1968 that defined the term "learning disability." In sum, learning disabilities are neurological problems that can impair a child's ability to perform certain tasks that require accurate perceptive skills. These are physiological problems that in no way reflect a child's intellectual capacity or potential.

The learning disabled child may encounter difficulty in speech, reading, writing, math, concentration, and memory. Regulations that accompany Public Law 94-142 state that learning disabilities include "such conditions as perceptual handicaps, brain injury, minimal brain dysfunction, dyslexia, and developmental asphasia."

The learning disabled child is often mistaken as being mentally retarded or emotionally disturbed. This is one of the many misconceptions that a concerted focus on the problem can dispel. The hyperactivity and antisocial behavior often associated with learning disabilities are simply a reflection of the frustration that these children feel. The frustrations often result in a sense of failure that breeds even further failure and low self-esteem.

These feelings can also lead to delinquency problems in some children. As much as 36 percent of the children in the juvenile justice system have been diagnosed as suffering from a form of learning disabilities. But there is hope. Evidence indicates that after 40 to 60 hours of remediation the rate of recidivism by learning disabled delinquents drops drastically.

Learning disabilities are not just a problem for children. Studies by the Presidential Initiative on Adult Literacy show that 60 million men and women in this country cannot read the front page of their newspaper. A countless number of adults cannot complete a job application because of the inability to read it. The link between adult illiteracy and learning disabilities has been firmly established. Can we afford to allow the learning disabled child of today to become the illiterate adult of tomorrow?

Intelligent, gifted, and determined children can compensate for their handicaps. With early diagnosis and proper remediation, these children can develop strengths and reach goals that may never have been possible. If we can get a handle on what learning disabilities are, how to diagnose them, and we can start down the road to their treatment. The grassroots programs of awareness that will be highlighted by this resolution will be important steps toward solving the mystery of learning disabilities.

In conclusion, I wish to thank my colleagues who support and cosponsor this effort. Also, I wish to note my deep respect for the many caring organizations, such as the Arkansas Coalition for the Handicapped, the Arkansas Council of Learning Disabilities, and the Foundation for Children with Learning Disabilities, who labor selflessly on behalf of the many learning disabled children and adults in our country. With this resolution we want to supplement their efforts and their dedication, and to provide them the national recognition their work deserves.

Further, with the designation of October 1986 as "Learning Disabilities Awareness Month" we can heighten the awareness achieved during last year's commemorative month. We can further work to bring down the barriers that prevent the recognition and treatment of these problems. We can help these children lead happier and more fulfilled lives. Mr. President, I urge the Senate to adopt this joint resolution.

I ask unanimous consent to print the joint resolution in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 413

Whereas millions of Americans suffer from one or more learning disabilities;

Whereas it is estimated that ten million American children have been diagnosed as suffering from learning disabilities;

Whereas most learning-disabled persons are of normal or above normal intelligence but cannot learn to read and write in the conventional manner;

Whereas it is important for parents, educators, physicians, and learning-disabled persons to be aware of the nature of learning disabilities and the resources available to help learning disabled persons;

Whereas early disagnosis and treatment of learning-disabled children give such children a better chance for a happy and productive adult life;

Whereas the courage necessary for learning-disabled persons to meet their special challenges should be recognized;

Whereas hundreds of national and local support groups for learning-disabled persons, parents of learning-disabled children, and professionals who work with learning-disabled persons have made important contributions to the treatment of learning disabilities;

Whereas research and study have contributed to public knowledge about learning disabilities, but much remains to be learned; and

Whereas public awareness of and concern about learning disabilities may encourage the establishment of the programs necessary to promote early diagnosis and treatment of learning disabilities and to help learning-disabled persons and their families cope with their learning disabilities: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That October 1986 hereby is designated "Learning Disabilities Awareness Month", and the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon all public officials and the people of the United States to observe such month with appropriate programs, ceremonies, and activities.

Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, today I join Senator BUMPERS to introduce a joint resolution to designate October 1986 as Learning Disabilities Awareness Month.

Millions of Americans have one or more learning disabilities, and an estimated 10 million American children have been diagnosed as learning-disabled. These statistics become all the more compelling when we look at the human side of learning disabilities.

Most learning-disabled people are normal or above normal in intelligence but have a neurological impairment which makes certain types of learning difficult. When a learning disability goes undiagnosed, individuals can experience years of frustration, confusion, and low self-esteem. Ignorant of the physiological basis for their difficulties in school, learning-disabled children risk a growing sense of isolation and failure.

Happily, researchers have been developing methods of diagnosing and treating learning disabilities. The most important factor is early identification of the disability. With early diagnosis and treatment, a learning-disabled child has a better chance of leading a productive and fulfilling adult life.

Yet even with the more sophisticated methods of detection available to us today, learning disabilities are still difficult to identify. That is why it is all the more important to increase the public's awareness of learning disabilities. The joint resolution that we introduce today will help set the stage for promoting awareness and educating the public about the nature of learning disabilities. Last year, organizations and individuals throughout the Nation participated in events held in honor of Learning Disabilities Awareness Month. It is our hope that this year's efforts will prove no less successful.

I am proud of the fact that Mrs. Mathias has demonstrated what an important difference one person can make. She has worked in schools and colleges and administrative offices to gain recognition and help for the learning-disabled. Most importantly, she has shared the story of her own struggle to surmount this problem and is an example which should give courage and inspiration to others who follow in her path. This joint resolution celebrates achievements such as hers and invites us all to share it.

ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS

S. 436

At the request of Mr. HATCH, the name of the Senator from Nevada [Mr. HECHT] was added as a cosponsor of S. 436, a bill to amend section 1979 of the Revised Statutes (42 U.S.C. 1983), relating to civil actions for the deprivation of rights, to limit the applicability of that statute to laws relating to equal rights, and to provide a special defense to the liability of political subdivisions of States.

S. 1793

At the request of Mr. KENNEDY, the name of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. DECONCINI] was added as a cosponsor of S. 1793, a bill to amend the Public Health Service Act to establish a grant program to develop improved systems of caring for medical technology dependent children in the home, and for other purposes.

S. 2093

At the request of Mr. ARMSTRONG, the name of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. ABDNOR] was added as a cosponsor of S. 2093, a bill to recognize the organization known as The National Mining Hall of Fame and Museum.

S. 2454

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED

DEPARTMENTS OF COMMERCE, JUSTICE, STATE, THE JUDICIARY, AND RELATED AGENCIES APPROPRIATIONS, FISCAL YEAR 1987

HELMS AMENDMENTS NOS. 2804 THROUGH 2820

(Ordered to lie on the table.)

Mr. HELMS submitted 17 amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H.R. 5161) making appropriations for the Departments of Commerce, Justice, State, the Judiciary, and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, and for other purposes; as follows:

AMENDMENT No. 2804

On page 64, line 23, before the period insert the following: ": Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated for the Legal Service Corporation shall be used to support a recipient or grantee that does not—

"(1) submit an annual report to the Legal Services Corporation which complies with the accounting and reporting guidelines contained in Statement of Position (78-10), 'Accounting Principles and Reporting Practices for Certain Nonprofit Organizations', issued by the Accounting Standards Subcommittee on Nonprofit Organizations of the American Institute of Certified Public Accountants (AICPA) and dated December 31, 1978; and

"(2) institute a system of timekeeping consistent with the Legal Services Corporation's requirements as established by a majority of the Board of Directors of the Corporation. The annual report shall detail the number and types of cases handled, and the amount and types of legal training and legal technical assistance provided by the recipient. No information contained in the report shall identify or enable the identification of any person served by the recipient or in any way breach client confidentiality under applicable State law. With respect to a recipient's legislative activities, the report shall also document all direct and indirect expenses; the sources of all supporting funds, regardless of the sources of the funds employed; and all employee time. The system of timekeeping shall, at a minimum, provide, for any work done or service performed by a paralegal or an attorney the following information:

"(A) the date work is performed or service is provided;

"(B) the name of the attorney or paralegal performing the work or providing the service; and

"(C) a file number or other means of identifying the matter or case on which the work is performed or the client to whom service is provided. Recipients and grantees shall require all employees who are registered lobbyists or who devote any of their time to legislative activities, except for adjudicatory proceedings, to maintain time logs accounting for all working hours".

AMENDMENT No. 2805

On page 64, line 23, before the period insert the following: ": Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated for the Legal Services Corporation shall be used to initiate or support the formation of, act as an organizer of, or advocate that anyone join, any association, federation, labor union, coalition, network, alliance, or any similar entity".

AMENDMENT No. 2806

On page 64, line 23, before the period insert the following: ": Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated for the Legal Services Corporation shall be used to prepare, produce, or disseminate any communication that provides directions on how to lobby".

AMENDMENT No. 2807

On page 64, line 23, before the period insert the following: ": Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated for the Legal Services Corporation shall be used to pay any dues to any organization, other than a bar association, a purpose or function of which is to engage in such political or legislative activities. For purposes of this proviso, the term—

" 'legislative activities' means lobbying and other activities designed to facilitate lobbying, including, but not limited to, attendance at legislative sessions or committee hearings, or the gathering of information or the analysis of pending legislation; and

" 'political activities' means those activities intended either to influence the electoral process or the making, as distinguished from the administration of, public policy, including favoring or opposing current or proposed public policy and also includes lobbying".

AMENDMENT No. 2808

On page 64, line 23, before the period insert the following: ": Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated for the Legal Services Corporation shall be used to maintain separate offices for the sole purpose of engaging in legislative or political activities. For purposes of this proviso, the term—

" 'legislative activities' means lobbying and other activities designed to facilitate lobbying, including, but not limited to, attendance at legislative sessions or committee hearings, or the gathering of information or the analysis of pending legislation; and

" 'political activities' means those activities intended either to influence the electoral process or the making, as distinguished form the administration of, public policy, including favoring or opposing current or proposed public policy and also includes lobbying".

AMENDMENT No. 2809

On page 64, line 23, before the period insert the following: ": Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated for the Legal Services Corporation shall be used knowingly to assist others to engage in political or legislative activities. For purposes of this proviso, the term—

" 'legislative activities' means lobbying and other activities designed to facilitate lobbying, including, but not limited to, attendance at legislative sessions or committee hearings, or the gathering of information or the analysis of pending legislation; and

AMENDMENT No. 2810

On page 64, line 23, before the period insert the following: ": Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated for the Legal Services Corporation shall be used to attend meetings of coalitions, networks, alliances, or any other groups formed to engage in political or legislative activities. For purposes of this proviso, the term—

" 'legislative activities' means lobbying and other activities designed to facilitate lobbying, including, but not limited to, attendance at legislative sessions or committee hearings, or the gathering of information or the anaylsis of pending legislation; and

" 'political activities' means those activities intended either to influence the electoral process or the making, as distinguished from the administration of, public policy, including favoring or opposing current or proposed public policy and also includes lobbying".

AMENDMENT No. 2811

On page 64, line 23, before the period insert the following: ": Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated for the Legal Services Corporation shall be used by other groups to pay, in whole or in part, for the conduct of, or transportation to, an event if a primary purpose of the event is to facilitate political or legislative activites or any activity which would be prohibited if conducted with funds made available by the Legal Services Corporation".

AMENDMENT No. 2812

On page 64, line 23, before the period insert the following: ": Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated for the Legal Services Corporation shall be used to pay, arrange, or provide transportation to legislative or administrative proceedings persons other than employees of recipients, witnesses entering appearances in proceedings on behalf of clients, and clients".

AMENDMENT No. 2813

On page 64, line 23, before the period insert the following: ": Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated for the Legal Services Corporation shall be used to prepare, produce, or disseminate any article, newsletter, or other publication or written matter or other form of mass communication which contains any reference to proposed or pending legislation if—

"(1) the communication contains a direct suggestion, or, when taken as a whole, an indirect suggestion to the public at large or to persons outside of the recipient program (other than a client or group of clients currently represented by a recipient with regard to a matter directly related to the legislation, or their counsel or co-counsel) to contact public officials in support of or in opposition to legislation, or to contribute to or participate in any demonstration, march, rally, fundraising drive, lobbying campaign, letter writing, or telephone campaign for the purpose of influencing the course of such legislation; or

"(2) the publication contains directions on how to lobby generally or on particular legislation".

AMENDMENT No. 2814

On page 64, line 23, before the period insert the following: ": Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated for the Legal Services Corporation shall be used to solicit a client for the purpose of making legislative or administrative representation possible".

AMENDMENT No. 2815

On page 64, line 23, before the period insert the following: ": Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated for the Legal Services Corporation shall be used to support grassroots lobbying".

AMENDMENT No. 2816

On page 64, line 23, before the period insert the following: ": Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated for the Legal Services Corporation shall be used, directly or indirectly, to solicit or arrange a request from any official to testify or otherwise make representations in connection with legislation".

AMENDMENT No. 2817

On page 64, line 23, before the period insert the following: ": Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated for the Legal Services Corporation shall be used to support a recipient that expends non-Federal funds or funds received from a source other than the Corporation for purposes prohibited by the Legal Services Corporation Act or this Act".

AMENDMENT No. 2818

On page 64, line 23, before the period insert the following: ": Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated for the Legal Services Corporation shall be used to pay for administrative or related costs, including transportation costs, associated with any activity prohibited by the Legal Services Corporation Act or this Act".

AMENDMENT No. 2819

At an appropriate place in the bill, add the following:

"SEC. . None of the funds appropriated or otherwise made available by this Act shall be used by the Department of Justice to bring or maintain any sort of action to require directly or indirectly the transportation of any student to a school other than the school which is nearest the student's home, except for a student requiring special education as a result of being mentally or physically handicapped.".

AMENDMENT No. 2820

At an appropriate place in the bill, add the following:

"SEC. . Section 223(b) of the Communications Act of 1934 is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1)(A), by striking out 'under eighteen years of age or to any other person without that person's consent';

(2) by striking out paragraph (2);

(3) in paragraph (4), by striking out 'paragraphs (1) and (3)' and inserting in lieu thereof 'paragraphs (1) and (2)'; and

(4) by redesignating paragraphs (3), (4), and (5) as paragraphs (2), (3), and (4), respectively.".

NATIONAL AIR AND SPACE MUSEUM

GARN (AND GLENN) AMENDMENT NO. 2821

Mr. DOLE (for Mr. GARN, for himself and Mr. GLENN) submitted an amendment to the bill (S. 1311) to authorize the Smithsonian Institution to plan, design, and construct facilities for the National Air and Space Museum; as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following:

SEC. . (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) the crew of the space shuttle Challenger was dedicated to stimulating the interest of American children in space flight and science generally;

(2) the members of the crew gave their lives trying to benefit the education of American children;

(3) a fitting tribute to that effort and to the sacrifice of the Challenger crew and their families is needed; and

(4) an appropriate form for such tribute would be to expand educational opportunities in science by the creation of a center that will offer children and teachers activities and information derived from American space research.

(b) It is the sense of the Congress that—

(1) a Children's Challenger Center for Space Science should be established in conjunction with the Smithsonian Institution as a living memorial to the seven Challenger astronauts who died serving their country and to other individuals who gave their lives in exploration of the space frontier; and

(2) the Federal Government should, along with the Smithsonian Institution, public and private organizations, and persons, cooperate in the establishing of such a Center.

NOTICES OF HEARINGS

SELECT COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I would like to announce that the Select Committee on Indian Affairs has scheduled a business meeting for Wednesday, September 17, 1986, at 2 p.m., in room S205 of the Capitol, to mark up the following bills:

H.R. 1920, to establish Federal standards and regulations for the conduct of gaming activities on Indian reservations and lands;

S. 2676, to provide for the settlement of water rights claims of the La Jolla, Rincon, San Pasqual, Pauma, and Pala Bands of Mission Indians in San Diego County, California, and for other purposes;

S. 1452, to settle Indian land claims in the town of Gay Head, Massachusetts, and for other purposes;

S. 2564, to provide for the proper administration of justice within the Salt River Pima-Maricopa Indian Reservation by granting jurisdiction to the Salt River Pima-Maricopa Indian Community Court over certain criminal misdemeanor offenses;

S. 2107, to provide for the settlement of certain claims of the Papago Tribe of Arizona arising from the construction of Tat Momolikot Dam, and for other purposes;

S. 2504, to authorize certain transfers affecting the Pueblo of Santa Ana in New Mexico, and for other purposes.

Mr. President, I would like to announce that the Select Committee on Indian Affairs has set an oversight hearing on the Indian Trust Fund, the transmittal and investment of the money in the fund and the proposed request for proposal issued by the Treasury Department pertaining to the Indian Trust Fund. The hearing will be held in room 385 in the Russell Building on the 23d of September, 1986, from 10 a.m. until 12 noon.

AUTHORITY FOR COMMITTEES TO MEET

SUBCOMMITTEE ON MILITARY CONSTRUCTION

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Subcommittee on Military Construction, of the Committee on Armed Services, be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Monday, September 15, 1986, in order to mark up H.R. 1202, dealing with Fish and Wildlife on Military Reservations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

COUNTERING SOVIET PROPAGANDA

● Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. President, virtually since the day America embarked on a program to rebuild its defenses, which had been irresponsibly neglected during the 1970's, the Soviet Union has engaged in a major peace offensive in the hope of derailing America's defense modernization program. The main themes of the Soviet peace offensive are the peace-loving nature of the Soviet Union, the threat to peace posed by weapons of mass destruction, and America's intransigence and aggressive designs.

The most recent edition of the quarterly Newsletter Soviet Disinformation Forecast, contains an article written by Adam Ulam entitled "Countering Soviet Propaganda." Mr. Ulam's article deals with the Soviet peace offensive and how America should respond to Soviet propaganda.

Adam B. Ulam is a recognized expert on the Soviet Union and Soviet foreign policy. He is currently director of the Russian Research Center at Harvard University. He has written extensively on the Soviet Union. His books on Soviet foreign policy include "Expansion and Coexistence, Dangerous Relations," and "The Rivals: America and Russia since WWII."

I think the Daniloff case has given many Americans occasion to again ask some basic questions about the Soviet Union's commitment to peace and the rule of law. Ulam points out in his essay that arms control, though enormously important and desirable, is not in itself the key to peace. The real key to peace is in the policies pursued by the United States and the Soviet Union. Ulam points out that the U.S.S.R. is the main catalyst of troubles on the international scene.

Mr. President, I ask that Adam Ulam's article "Countering Soviet Propaganda" be inserted in the RECORD.

The article follows:

COUNTERING SOVIET PROPAGANDA

(By Adam B. Ulam)

"Friends in peace, enemies in war"—that was what the Founding Fathers believed should be America's attitude towards other nations. An eminently sensible formula, and it served the Republic well, until the world in which it could work reasonably well was irretrievably shattered in 1914. But the legacy of so many years, during which the average American could afford to and did give but scant attention to the world outside the Western hemisphere has lingered on in the national consciousness, and hence our dilemma and puzzlement in the wake of World War II as to how to deal with the Soviet Union.

Here we can concentrate on only one aspect of that neither peace or war situation that has existed between the two superpowers virtually since V-J day: the propaganda campaign waged by the Kremlin against the United States. And to anticipate an immediate rejoinder from the Soviet side, and for that matter from many in the West, let us say: yes, the United States, at least in more recent years, has not been laggard in what is described grandiloquently as the struggle for the hearts and minds of mankind, or to call it more prosaically, the propaganda contest.

But it would be masochistic self-deception to maintain that in this contest both sides observe the same rules. To put it simply, even if it wanted to, the U.S. government could not take the kind of liberties with the fact that the USSR does when it comes to justifying its policies and denouncing those of its rival; Washington cannot match the stridency and persistence of the Kremlin's threats, cajoleries or enticements. Under our system, the voice of the Executive is invariably scrutinized, often criticized, and occasionally denounced by its political opponents, the media, and others. Moscow is entirely free from such scruples and constraints. How then can a democracy remain true to its principles and rules and yet counter the flagrant distortions of its policies and aims that emanate to often from the USSR?

The question is especially acute in the present phase of Soviet-American relations. By the dint of a persistent and well-orchestrated propaganda campaign, Gorbachev and Co. have persuaded many in the West, including the US, that the Soviet Union is genuinely ready to engage in a veritable nuclear "striptease," and that it is the US which because of its goal of achieving nuclear superiority through the SDI, is keeping the world on the brink of a nuclear holocaust. It is clear that the US government's reactions to the Soviet enticements fail to be convincing to many in our own society. It would serve both the interests of truth and of better understanding of the American position if instead of bald asseverations that the Soviet proposals must be a ruse, American spokesmen would try patiently to set the problem in a perspective.

First, as to the proposals themselves: let us examine their detail before we accept them as genuine. Let us not forget that in the past Moscow's tactics on nuclear weapons were clearly intended to establish or enhance its nuclear superiority. It was the USSR which in 1961 broke abruptly the nuclear test moratorium. And soon after SALT I was sealed and signed, they began what might be called an end around play by building and deploying SS-20s. We must heed the lessons of the past—hence the need to scrutinize carefully not only what the Soviets are saying, but also what they are doing.

Then the United States should patiently try to educate world public opinion that nuclear arms control, though enormously important and desirable, is not in itself the key to peace. This key lies in the policies of the two superpowers—weapons themselves don't make wars. No American is losing sleep because of the knowledge that Britain and France dispose of nuclear weapons that could bring death to tens of millions in this country. For all of American's sins of omission and commission, the fact remains that it is the USSR that is the main catalyst of troubles on the international scene, and it is local crises abetted by the Kremlin that at times threaten to escalate into a nuclear confrontation between the two superpowers. If Gorbachev wants to demonstrate that a new spirit prevails in the Soviets' councils, he should remove the Soviet military presence in Afghanistan and/or stop giving weapons and diplomatic support to regimes such as Qaddafi's. Then the Soviets' proposal about arms control would be much more credible and welcome.

The litmus test of the Soviets' intention to seek the lowering of tension in international affairs lies precisely in what they do about such "regional" issues. It is understandable that they concentrate their propaganda campaign on the question of weapons—fear of a nuclear holocaust is deeply ingrained in all of us. But the danger of war comes not primarily from the quantitative aspect of the weapons question, it comes from the expansionist thrust of Soviet foreign policy and from the aggressive and terrorist activities of some of the regimes which are clients and dependents of the USSR.

As the above demonstrates, the most effective antidote to the exaggerations and, to put it mildly, inaccuracies of Soviet official propaganda, does not lie in trying to complete with Moscow in vituperation and stridency. The cause of democracy gains and the Kremlin's hopes are confounded when the counter-arguments offered by the West are their own people. A literal translation of the page of Pravda devoted to foreign countries could not but make the reader reflect whether a regime licensing such streams of vituperation and misstatement of facts about the non-Communist countries is really seeking a stable world and a reduction in international tension.

In brief, it is a mistake to assume that the U.S. must be always the loser when it comes to the diplomatic and propaganda game with the USSR or, conversely, that in order to complete it should imitate the latter's tactics and rhetoric. The Soviets can recognize and respect when their opponents display tenacity of purpose, and when their tone is firm but not abusive. Absence of effective public criticism seemingly affords the Kremlin much more freedom of action than is possible for a democracy. At the same time the lack of criticism at times leads the Soviet leaders to serious errors of judgment from a public relations point of view. They did not realize that their pledges concerning human rights in the Helsinki Declarations would be taken seriously and would continue to embarrass them at home and abroad. They have displayed gross insensitivity to the national feelings of the Japanese by refusing even to negotiate about a few small islands. Instead of being content with a Finland-type relationship with Afghanistan, they embraced the Communist coup there in 1978 and have incurred a lot of trouble since.

Perhaps, even though dimly, some Soviet leaders may be beginning to perceive that in the search for expansion the USSR has overextended itself, and that its policies in Ethiopia, Libya, Angola, and elsewhere do not contribute to the security of the Soviet state and regime—if anything, the opposite. But such perceptions will not be transmuted into actual policies, unless the West for its part displays a tenacity of purpose and the ability to educate world public opinion about the real prerequisits for a real peace.●

ABORTION AND INFORMED CONSENT: ARKANSAS

● Mr. HUMPHREY. Mr. President, I am continuing my presentation of letters which I have received from women across the Nation who profoundly regret the decision to abort their unborn children. I am presenting them in alphabetical order by State.

Cindy in Arkansas describes another example of the myopic counseling women receive in abortion clinics. She expresses fear for other women who will be submitted to the same ideological indoctrination she received without ever knowing the facts about abortion. She poignantly related the pain she felt when she discovered that she had killed a child. Indeed, she attributes part of the soaring teenage suicide rate to abortion.

When this young woman became pregnant she was lonely and unable to share her burden. She needed compassion, candor and honesty. Instead, she received nonsensical euphemisms. No one gave her enough information to make an intelligent decision for herself. As a result, she was grossly unprepared to live with the consequences of this momentous decision. Many women have had this experience and so will many more, as long as these so-called counselors are allowed to demean women in this fashion.

Mr. President, I am appalled by the superficiality of the counseling which most women receive prior to an abortion. I am amazed by the lack of preparation most of them recount. And I am outraged by the stifling of truth which I see among abortionists, and their support staffs. This is why I believe a legal requirement for informed consent is necessary for the well-being of women in this Nation. I am convinced that fewer women would choose this alternative if they knew more about the true consequences.

I urge my colleagues to reflect carefully upon this young woman's complaint. If we are to avoid further abuses of this sort I hope they will join me in cosponsoring S. 2791.

The letter follows:

MAY 22, 1986.

DEAR SIR: I am Cindy Case, 31, of Little Rock, Arkansas. This letter is written in support of your action concerning "Informed Consent" in reference to the abortion issue.

I was raised in the generation when most parents never talked about sex and never let their children talk about it either. Therefore, I grew up sheltered from the reality of getting pregnant in the first place. When I was 25 years old, I got pregnant out of wedlock. I wasn't promiscuous. I was searching for love but got into trouble in the process. I did not want to tell my close friends because we were all sitting on the same church pew. I had made a mistake and I thought the church would ask me to leave if they found out.

I had to tell someone. Finally, I told an acquaintance. She told me I could have an abortion and no one would ever have to know. I didn't even know what an abortion was. All I knew was I wouldn't be pregnant anymore. I thought I could forget about it and continue my life and hopefully not make the same mistake again.

I called the number she gave me and the nurse said they have a simple procedure that only takes around five minutes of your time. "We remove the tissue that was formed at conception and you don't leave here with the same problem you had when you came in."

I felt a lot of guilt after that but it was mainly because I had done wrong in the eyes of God by getting pregnant out of wedlock, not because I had commited murder. I found that out three-and-a-half years later when I saw the babies in the trash can on TV. I didn't really know what I had done until then.

I want everyone to know the truth, the whole truth. I know we can make a difference if we can get into the schools and reach the girls before they get pregnant. I know drugs, peer pressure, unhappy home life and many other things cause teen-age suicides, but I feel it is one of the more serious aftermaths of abortion.

Someday, I hope to have the support of our two Senators from Arkansas.

Sincerely,

CINDY.

KELLYE CASH CHOSEN TO BE MISS AMERICA 1987

● Mr. SASSER. Mr. President, I would like to take this opportunity to join with the citizens of Tennessee in congratulating Miss Kellye Cash upon winning the title of Miss America 1987. Miss Cash was selected last Saturday night at the annual Miss America Pageant in Atlantic City, NJ, among contestants from all 50 States and the District of Columbia.

Kellye Cash exemplifies the ideal young American woman that the Miss America Pageant honors every year. She is exceptionally bright, hardworking, and talented. A senior at Memphis State University, Miss Cash is majoring in communications and public relations. She has helped pay for her education by working two part-time jobs. Her tremendous musical talent was clearly evident when she brought the audience at the Miss America Pageant to its feet after playing the piano and singing the pop-blues song, "I'll Be Home."

I am confident that Miss Cash will be an excellent representative of the Miss America Pageant during the course of her 1-year reign and in the years after. It is extremely refreshing to hear a young woman say today, as Miss Cash does, that she wants to maintain that "girl-next-door" image. At a time when we are becoming increasingly concerned about drug abuse among young people, I believe she will serve as a positive role model for all young Americans.

Kellye Cash makes all Tennesseans proud but I am sure none are more proud than her parents, Billie and Roy Cash, Jr. Her mother and father also deserve special credit for raising such an outstanding young woman. The Cash family is already legendary in Tennessee, and Kellye now joins her granduncle, country music star Johnny Cash, and his daughter, singer Roseanne Cash, as entertainment celebrities.

I am pleased, Mr. President, that such an energetic and talented young woman has been chosen as Miss America. Her selection is richly deserved.●

BUDGET SCOREKEEPING REPORT

● Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I hereby submit to the Senate the budget scorekeeping report for this week, prepared by the Congressional Budget Office in response to section 308(b) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, as amended. This report also serves as the scorekeeping report for the purposes of section 311 of the Budget Act.

The report follows:

CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET OFFICE,
U.S. CONGRESS,
Washington, DC, September 15, 1986.

Hon. PETE V. DOMENICI,
Chairman, Committee on the Budget, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The attached report shows the effects of congressional action on the budget for fiscal years 1986 and 1987. The estimated totals of budget authority, outlays, and revenues for each fiscal year are compared to the appropriate or recommended levels contained in the most recent budget resolutions, Senate Concurrent Resolution 32 for fiscal year 1986, and Senate Concurrent Resolution 120 for fiscal year 1987. This report meets the requirements for Senate scorekeeping of section 5 of Senate Concurrent Resolution 32 and is current through September 12, 1986. The report is submitted under section 308(b) and in aid of section 311 of the Congressional Budget Act, as amended.

No changes have occurred since my last report.

With best wishes,

Sincerely,

RUDOLPH G. PENNER.
Director.

CBO WEEKLY SCOREKEEPING REPORT FOR THE U.S. SENATE, 99TH CONGRESS, 2d SESSION, AS OF SEPTEMBER 12, 1986

ARTHUR DORMAN

● Mr. SARBANES. Mr. President, I want to bring to our colleagues' attention the record of distinguished service of Maryland State senator for Prince Georges County, Arthur Dorman, O.D. On Saturday, September 20, Beth Torah Congregation is honoring Senator Dorman as "Man of the Decade" for his dedication to the community and for 26 years as a member of its congregation. It gives me great pleasure to join with members of his family and of Beth Torah in honoring Senator Dorman, for in addition to being a strong and effective leader in the Maryland General Assembly, the Beth Torah Congregation, and the Prince Georges community, he is a close friend.

One of the joys and rewards of politics and public service is the opportunity to make friends with those individuals who care deeply about the public interest. By anyone's definition, Arthur Dorman fits the roles of "public servant" and "citizen" as well as being a strong leader in the Beth Torah Congregation since joining in 1960.

I had the privilege of serving with Arthur Dorman during my 4 years in the Maryland General Assembly and since that time we have continued to work on issues of mutual concern. There is no question that his distinguished record of service to the State and community has been characterized by commitment to the highest standards of integrity and leadership and his receiving the "Man of the Year" award is testimony to this.

Since coming to Maryland when Dr. Dorman began his optometry practice in 1953, our fellow citizens have benefitted from over three decades of his active participation in the community as a member and leader in organizations too numerous to list. Throughout his 22 years as a legislator Senator Dorman has worked hard and effectively, particularly on health and education issues. He was primarily responsible for mental health coverage by private insurance companies and helped to start the National Vision Institute of America, one of the first prepaid vision insurance plans. He has demonstrated a particular interest in educating our youth, whether as executive board member of the Southern Regional Education Board—coordinating higher education activities among 14 Southern States—or as Senator Dorman teaching history class for a day in his local high school.

Arthur Dorman has not only been a skillful legislator, dedicated to fairness and opportunity, and a respected optometrist, having been voted both Maryland and National Optometrist of the Year, he has also given selflessly to his synagogue, where he has held various offices through the years and presently serves as a trustee and substitute rabbi. He has been instrumental in the growth and financial stability of Beth Torah Congregation and in promoting interdenominational learning experiences on both the youth and adult levels. He does not limit his generosity to Beth Torah but assists other synagogues in the community as well.

Arthur Dorman's contributions as a religious, community, and public leader are eloquent testimony to the dedication and ability he has brought to Prince Georges County and to the State. The "Man of the Decade" award justifiably pays tribute to his hard work and genuine commitment to his fellow man. Again, I am pleased to join in honoring him for his many years of devoted service both to the highest ideals of Beth Torah Congregation and, on a broader level, to the community.●

HAPPY 100TH BIRTHDAY TO THE TIMES-ADVOCATE

● Mr. WILSON. Mr. President, I am delighted to join with admirers of first-class journalism everywhere in congratulating the Times-Advocate of Escondido, CA, on its 100th birthday.

The world has turned over many times since a four-page sheet called the Escondido Times first circulated through a frontier settlement of 1,500 people. The gasoline-powered linotype on grand avenue has long since given way to state-of-the-art equipment. Escondido has grown to include over 60,00 residents, expecting—and receiving—the widest possible range of information, entertainment, and opinion.

Before city hall, before the railway, even before Escondido was incorporated as a city, there was the Escondido Times. And although the Times began as an organ of the Escondido Land & Town Co. to lure folks to the new town of Escondido, the Times-Advocate in its recent history has established a reputation for independent news coverage of high quality.

A good newspaper, it's been said, is a community talking with itself. The Times-Advocate has become as vital to Escondido's civic life as water is to the region's economy. And just as the city it serves is no longer "hidden" between the mountains and the sea, so the paper has won repeated and deserved recognization for the quality of its news coverage and photojournalism.

Escondido sits in the shadow of Mt. Palomar. The Escondido Times-Advocate is in no one's shadow.

I wish the Times-Advocate and its employees all the best, on the occasion of the publication of this centennial celebration issue, and for all the issues to come.●

REHABILITATION ACT AMENDMENTS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on H.R. 4021.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives:

Resolved, That the House disagree to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 4021) entitled "An Act to extend and improve the Rehabilitation Act of 1973", and ask a conference with the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon.

Ordered, That Mr. Hawkins, Mr. Biaggi, Mr. Williams, Mr. Martinez, Mr. Hayes, Mr.

Eckart of Ohio, Mr. Waldon, Mr. Jeffords, Mr. Goodling, Mr. Coleman of Missouri, and Mr. Bartlett be the managers of the conference on the part of the House.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move that the Senate insist on its amendment and agree to the conference requested by the House and that the Chair be authorized to appoint conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the motion was agreed to.

Mr. BYRD. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The Chair appointed Mr. HATCH, Mr. WEICKER, Mr. STAFFORD, Mr. NICKLES, Mr. THURMOND, Mr. KERRY, Mr. SIMON, Mr. KENNEDY, and Mr. DODD conferees on the part of the Senate.

COLORADO RIVER FLOODWAY PROTECTION ACT

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 886, S. 1696, dealing with the Colorado River.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1696) to establish a federally declared floodway for the Colorado River below Davis Dam.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceed to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Environment and Public Works, with amendments, as follows:

(The parts of the bill intended to be stricken are shown in boldface brackets, and the parts of the bill intended to be inserted are shown in italics.)

S. 1696

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Colorado River Floodway Protection Act".

FINDINGS AND PURPOSES

SEC. 2. (a) FINDINGS.—The Congress finds that—

(1) there are multiple purposes established by law for the dams and other control structures administered by the Secretary of the Interior on the Colorado River;

(2) the maintenance of the Colorado River Floodway established in this Act is essential to accomplish these multiple purposes;

(3) developments within the Floodway are and will continue to be vulnerable to damaging flows such as the property damage which occurred in 1983 and may occur in the future;

(4) certain Federal programs which subsidize or permit development within the Floodway threaten human life, health, property, and natural resources; and

(5) there is a need for coordinated Federal, State, and local action to limit Floodway development.

(b) PURPOSE.—The Congress declares that the purposes of this Act are to—

(1) establish the Colorado River Floodway, as designated and described further in this Act, so as to provide benefits to river users and to minimize the loss of human life, protect health and safety, and minimize damage to property and natural resources by restricting future Federal expenditures and financial assistance, except public health funds, which have the effect of encouraging development within the Colorado River Floodway; and

(2) establish a task force to advise the Secretary of the Interior and the Congress on establishment of the Floodway and on managing existing and future development within the Floodway, including the appropriateness of compensation in specified cases of extraordinary hardship.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 3. (a) The term "Committees" refers to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the U.S. House of Representatives and the Committee on Environment and Public Works and the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the U.S. Senate.

(b) The term "financial assistance" means any form of loan, grant, guaranty, insurance, payment, rebate, subsidy, or any other form of direct or indirect Federal assistance other than—

(1) general revenue-sharing grants made under section 102 of the State and Local Fiscal Assistance Amendments of 1972 (31 U.S.C. 1221);

(2) deposit or account insurance for customers of banks, savings and loan associations, credit unions, or similar institutions;

(3) the purchase of mortgages or loans by the Government National Mortgage Association, the Federal National Mortgage Association, or the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation;

(4) assistance for environmental studies, plans, and assessments that are required incident to the issuance of permits or other authorizations under Federal law; and

(5) assistance pursuant to programs entirely unrelated to development, such as any Federal or federally assisted public assistance program or any Federal old-age, survivors, or disability insurance program.

Such term also includes flood insurance described in sections 1322 (a) and (b) of the National Flood Insurance Act of 1968, [as amended (42 U.S.C. 4028)] Public Law 90-448, title XIII (82 Stat. 572) as amended, on and after the dates on which the provisions of those sections become effective.

(c) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Interior.

(d) The term "water district" means any public agency providing water service, including water districts, county water districts, public utility districts, and irrigation districts.

(e) The term "Floodway" means the Colorado River Floodway established in section 5 of this Act.

COLORADO RIVER FLOODWAY TASK FORCE

SEC. 4. (a) To advise the Secretary and the Congress there shall be a Colorado River Floodway Task Force, which shall include [representatives] one representative of—

(1) each State (appointed by the Governor) and Indian reservation in which the Floodway is located;

(2) each county in which the Floodway is located;

(3) [one] a law enforcement [representative] agency from each county in which the Floodway is located; and

(4) each water district in which the Floodway is located;

(5) the cities of Needles, Parker, Blythe, Bullhead City, Yuma, Laughlin, Lake Havasu City, Nevada (if and when incorporated), and Mojave County, Arizona Supervisor District No. 2 (chosen by, but not a member of the Board of Supervisors);

(6) [one representative] of the Chamber of Commerce from each county in which the Floodway is located;

(7) the Colorado River Wildlife Council;

[(7)] (8) the Army Corps of Engineers;

[(8)] (9) the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA);

[(9)] (10) the Department of Agriculture;

[(10)] (11) the Department of the Interior; and

[(11)] (12) the Department of State.

(b) The task force shall be chartered and operate under the provisions of the Federal Advisory Committee Act (Public Law 92-463; 5 U.S.C. App. I) and shall prepare recommendations concerning the Colorado River Floodway, which recommendations shall deal with:

(1) the means to restore and maintain the Floodway specified in section 5 of this Act, including, but not limited to, specific instances where land transfers or relocations, or other changes in land management, might best effect the purposes of this Act; and

(2) the necessity for additional Floodway management legislation at local, tribal, State, and Federal levels;

(3) the development of specific design criteria for the creation of the Floodway boundaries;

(4) the review of mapping procedures for Floodway boundaries; [and]

(5) whether compensation should be recommended in specific cases of [extraordinary] economic hardship resulting from impacts of the 1983 flood on property outside the Floodway which could not reasonably have been foreseen; and

(6) the potential application of the Floodway on Indian lands and recommended legislation or regulations that might be needed to achieve the purposes of the Floodway taking into consideration the special Federal status of Indian lands.

(c) The task force shall exist for at least one year after the date of enactment of this Act, or until such time as the Secretary has filed with the Committees the maps described in subsection 5(b)(2). The task force shall file its report with the Secretary and the Committees within nine months after the date of enactment of this Act.

COLORADO RIVER FLOODWAY

SEC. 5. (a) There is established the Colorado River Floodway as identified and generally depicted on maps that are to be submitted by the Secretary.

(b)(1) Within eighteen months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary, in consultation with the seven Colorado River Basin States, represented by persons designated by the Governors of those States, [(including, in the Governor's discretion, members of the Colorado River Floodway Task Force),] the Colorado River Floodway Task Force, and any other interested parties shall:

(i) complete a study of the tributary floodflows downstream of Davis Dam;

(ii) define the specific boundaries of the Colorado River Floodway so that the Flood-way can accommodate either a one-in-one hundred year river flow consisting of controlled releases and tributary inflow, or a flow of forty thousand cubic feet per second (cfs), whichever is greater, from below Davis Dam to the Southerly International Boundary between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico.

(2) As soon as practicable after the determination of the Floodway boundary pursuant to this subsection, the Secretary shall prepare and file with the Committees maps depicting the Colorado River Floodway, and each such map shall be considered a standard map to be adhered to by all agencies and shall have the same force and effect as if included in this Act, except that correction of clerical and typographical errors in each such map may be made. Each such map shall be on file and available for public inspection in the Office of the Commissioner of the Bureau of Reclamation, Department of the Interior, and in other appropriate offices of the Department.

(3) The Secretary shall provide copies of the Colorado River Floodway maps to (A) the chief executive officer of each State, county, municipality, water district, Indian tribe, or equivalent jurisdiction in which the Floodway is located, (B) each appropriate Federal agency, including agencies which regulate Federal financial institutions, and (C) each federally insured financial institution which serves the geographic area as one of its primary markets.

(c)(1) The Secretary shall conduct, at least once every five years, a review of the Colorado River Floodway and make, after notice to and in consultation with the appropriate officers referred to in paragraph (3) of subsection (b), and others, such minor and technical modifications to the boundaries of the Floodway as are necessary solely to reflect changes that have occurred in the size or location of any portion of the floodplain as a result of natural forces, and as necessary pursuant to subsection (c) of section (7) of this Act.

(2) If, in the case of any minor and technical modification to the boundaries of the Floodway made under the authority of this subsection, an appropriate chief executive officer of a State, county, municipality, water district, Indian tribe, or equivalent jurisdiction, to which notice was given in accordance with this subsection files comments disagreeing with all or part of the modification and the Secretary makes a modification which is in conflict with such comments, the Secretary shall submit to the chief executive officer a written justification for his failure to make modifications consistent with such comments or proposals.

LIMITATIONS ON FEDERAL EXPENDITURES AFFECTING THE FLOODWAY

SEC. 6. (a) Except as provided in section 7, no new expenditures or new financial assistance may be made available under authority of any Federal law for any purpose within the Floodway established under section 5 of this Act.

(b) An expenditure or financial assistance made available under authority of Federal law shall, for purposes of this Act, be a new expenditure or new financial assistance if—

(1) in any case with respect to which specific appropriations are required, no money for construction or purchase purposes was appropriated before the date of the enactment of this Act; or

(2) no legally binding commitment for the expenditure or financial assistance was made before such date of enactment.

EXCEPTIONS

SEC. 7. Notwithstanding section 6, the appropriate Federal officer, after consultation with the Secretary, may make Federal expenditures or financial assistance available within the Colorado River Floodway for—

(a) any dam, channel or levee construction, operation or maintenance for the purpose of flood control, water conservation, power or water quality;

(b) other remedial or corrective actions, including but not limited to drainage facilities essential to assist in controlling adjacent high ground water conditions caused by flood flows;

(c) the maintenance, replacement, reconstruction, repair, and expansion, of [federally assisted and publicly] publicly or tribally owned or [publicly] operated roads, structures (including bridges), or facilities; Provided, That, no such expansion shall be permitted unless—

(1) the expansion is designed and built in accordance with the procedures and standards established in section 650.101 of title 23, Code of Federal Regulations, and the following as they may be amended from time to time; and

(2) the boundaries of the Floodway are adjusted to account for changes in flows caused, directly or indirectly, by the expansion;

(d) military activities essential to national security;

(e) any of the following actions or projects, but only if the Secretary finds that the making available of expenditures or assistance therefor is consistent with the purposes of this Act:

(1) Projects for the study, management, protection and enhancement of fish and wildlife resources and habitats, including, but not limited to, acquisition of fish and wildlife habitats and related lands, stabilization projects for fish and wildlife habitats, and recreational projects.

(2) The establishment, operation, and maintenance of air and water navigation aids and devices, and for access thereto.

(3) Projects eligible for funding under the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965 (16 U.S.C. 4601-4 through 11).

(4) Scientific research, including but not limited to aeronautical, atmospheric, space, geologic, marine, fish and wildlife and other research, development, and applications.

(5) Assistance for emergency actions essential to the saving of lives and the protection of property and the public health and safety, if such actions are performed pursuant to sections 305 and 306 of the Disaster Relief Act of 1974 (42 U.S.C. 5145 and 5146) and are limited to actions that are necessary to alleviate the emergency. Disaster assistance under other provisions of the Disaster Relief Act of 1974 (Public Law 93-288, as amended) may also be provided with respect to persons residing within the Floodway, or structures or public infrastructure in existence or substantially under construction therein, on the date ninety days after the date of enactment of this Act: Provided, That, such persons, or with respect to public infrastructure the State or local political entity which owns or controls such infrastructure, had purchased flood insurance for structures or infrastructure under the National Flood Insurance Program, if eligible, and had taken prudent and reasonable steps, as determined by the [Secretary,] Director of the Federal Emergency Management Agency, to minimize damage from future floods or operations of the Floodway established in the Act.

(6) Other assistance for public health purposes, such as mosquito abatement programs.

(7) Nonstructural projects for riverbank stabilization that are designed to enhance or restore natural stabilization systems.

(8) Publicly or tribally financed, owned and operated compatible recreational developments such as regional parks, golf courses, docks, [and] boat [landing] launching ramps (including steamboat and ferry landings), including compatible recreation uses and accompanying utility or interpretive improvements which are essential or closely related to the purpose of restoring the accuracy of a National Historical Landmark and which meet best engineering practices considering the nature of Floodway conditions.

(9) Compatible agricultural uses that do not involve permanent crops and include only a minimal amount of permanent facilities in the Floodway.

CERTIFICATION OF COMPLIANCE

SEC. 8. The Secretary of the Interior shall, on behalf of each Federal agency concerned, make written certification that each agency has complied with the provisions of this Act during each fiscal year beginning after September 30, 1985. Such certification shall be submitted on an annual basis to the U.S. House of Representatives and the U.S. Senate on or before January 15 of each fiscal year.

PRIORITY OF LAWS

SEC. 9. Nothing contained in this Act shall be construed to alter, amend, repeal, modify, interpret, or be in conflict with the provisions of the Colorado River Compact (45 Stat. 1057), the Upper Colorado River Basin Compact (63 Stat. 31), the Water Treaty of 1944 with the United Mexican States (Treaty Series 944, 59 Stat. 1219), the Flood Control Act of 1944 (58 Stat. 887), the decree entered by the Supreme Court of the United States in Arizona v. California, and others (376. U.S. 340), the Boulder Canyon Project Act (45 Stat. 1057), the Boulder Canyon Project Adjustment Act (54 Stat. 774; 43 U.S.C. 618a), the Colorado River Storage Project Act (70 Stat. 105; 43 U.S.C. 620), the Colorado River Basin Project Act (82 Stat. 885; 43 U.S.C. 1501). Furthermore, nothing contained in this Act shall be construed as indicating an intent on the part of the Congress to change the existing relationship of other Federal laws to the law of a State, or a political subdivision of a State, or to relieve any person of any obligation imposed by any law of any State, tribe, or political subdivision of a State. No provision of this Act shall be construed to invalidate any provision of State, tribal, or local law unless there is a direct conflict between such provision and the law of the State, or political subdivision of the State or tribe, so that the two cannot be reconciled or consistently stand together. Inconsistencies shall be reviewed by the task force, and the task force shall make recommendations concerning such local laws. This Act shall in no way be interpreted to interfere with a State's or tribe's right to protect, rehabilitate, preserve, and restore lands within its established boundary.

SEPARABILITY

SEC. 10. If any provision of this Act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, the remainder of the Act and the application of such provision to other persons not similarily situated or to other circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

REPORTS TO CONGRESS

SEC. 11. Within one year after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall prepare and submit to the Committees a report regarding the Colorado River Floodway, the task force's report, and the Secretary's recommendations with respect to the objectives outlined in section 4(b) of this Act. In making his report, the Secretary shall analyze the effects of this Act on the economic development of the Indian tribes whose lands are located within the Floodway.

AMENDMENTS REGARDING FLOOD INSURANCE

SEC. 12. (a) The National Flood Insurance Act of 1968, [(42 U.S.C. 4028)] Public Law 90-448, title XIII (82 Stat. 572), as amended, is amended by adding the following section:

"Sec. 1322. (a) Owners of existing National Flood Insurance Act policies with respect to structures located within the Floodway established under section 5 of the Colorado River Floodway Protection Act shall have the right to renew and transfer such policies. Owners of existing structures located within said Floodway on the date of enactment of the Colorado River Floodway Protection Act who have not acquired National Flood Insurance Act policies shall have the right to acquire policies with respect to such structures for six months after the Secretary of the Interior files the Floodway maps required by section 5(b)(2) of the Colorado River Floodway Protection Act and to renew and transfer such policies.

"(b) No new flood insurance coverage may be provided under this title on or after a date six months after the enactment of the Colorado River Floodway Protection Act for any new construction or substantial improvements of structures located within the Colorado River Floodway established by section 5 of the Colorado River Floodway Protection Act. New construction includes all structures that are not insurable prior to that date.

"(c) The Secretary of the Interior may by rule after notice and comment pursuant to 5 U.S.C. 553 establish temporary Floodway boundaries to be in effect until the maps required by Section 5(b)(2) of the Colorado River Floodway Protection Act are filed, for the purpose of enforcing subsections (b) and [(c)] (d) of this section.

"(d) A federally supervised, approved, regulated or insured financial institution may make loans secured by structures which are not eligible for flood insurance by reason of this section; Provided, That prior to making such a loan, such institution determines that the loans or structures securing the loan are within the Floodway."

FEDERAL LEASES

SEC. 13. (a) No lease of lands owned in whole or in part by the United States and within the Colorado River Floodway shall be granted after the date of enactment of this Act unless the Secretary determines that such lease would be consistent with the operation and maintenance of the Colorado River Floodway.

(b) No existing lease of lands owned in whole or in part by the United States and within the Colorado River Floodway shall be extended beyond the date of enactment of this Act or the stated expiration date of its current term, whichever is later, unless the lessee agrees to take reasonable and prudent steps determined to be necessary by the Secretary to minimize the inconsistency of operation under such lease with the operation and maintenance of the Colorado River Floodway.

(c) No lease of lands owned in whole or part by the United States between Hoover Dam and Davis Dam below elevation 655.0 feet on Lake Mohave shall be granted unless the Secretary determines that such lease would be consistent with the operation of Lake Mohave.

(d) The provisions of subsections (a) and (b) of this section shall not apply to lease operations on Indian lands pursuant to a lease providing for activities which are exempted under section 7 of this Act.

(e) Subsections (a) and (b) of this section shall not apply to lands held in trust by the United States for the benefit of any Indian tribe or individual with respect to any lease where capital improvements, and operation and maintenance costs are not provided for by Federal financial assistance if the lessee, tribe, or individual has provided insurance or other security for the benefit of the Secretary sufficient to insure against all reasonably forseeable, direct, and consequential damages to the property of the tribe, private persons, and the United States, which may result from the proposed lease.

NOTICES AND EXISTING LAWS

SEC. 14. (A)(1) Nothing in this Act shall alter or affect in any way the provisions of section 702c of title 33, United States Code.

(2) The Secretary shall provide notice of the provisions of section 702c of title 33, United States Code, and this Act to all existing and prospective lessees of lands leased by the United States and within the Colorado River Floodway.

(b) Except as otherwise specifically provided in this Act, all provisions of the National Flood Insurance Act of 1968, as amended, and requirements of the National Flood Insurance Program ("NFIP") shall continue in full force and effect within areas wholly or partially within the Colorado River Floodway. Any maps or other information required to be prepared by this Act shall be used to the maximum extent practicable to support implementation of the NFIP.

(c) The Secretary shall publish notice on three successive occasions in newspapers of general circulation in affected communities of the provisions of section 12(a), (a) of this Act.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 15. There is authorized to be appropriated to the Department of the Interior $600,000, through the end of fiscal year 1990, in addition to any other funds now available to the Department to discharge its duties to implement sections 4 through 14 of this Act[; Provided, however,]: Provided, That by mutual agreement, such funds shall be made available to the Federal Emergency Management Agency to discharge its duties under section 12 of this Act: Provided further, That the provisions of sections 6 and 7 of this Act shall not be affected by this section*: And Provided further, in addition, Indian tribes may be eligible under Public Law 93-638 to contract for studies of Indian lands required under the provisions of this Act.*

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. President, I am very pleased to bring before the Senate today, S. 1696, the Colorado River Floodway Protection Act.

There are very few bills that almost everyone can agree are good government legislation. I believe that S. 1696 is one of those.

S. 1696 has two basic purposes: First, it is intended to save Federal dollars by getting the U.S. Government out of the business of subsidizing development in the floodplain below Davis Dam on the Colorado River; and second, it will help to diffuse a potential dispute between those who wish to retain present levels of water storage behind the federally operated dams on the Upper Colorado River and those who would prefer to see the dams provide a higher level of flood control.

Mr. President, the Colorado River is one of the most highly regulated river systems in the Nation. The numerous dams on the Colorado River system represent a multibillion dollar Federal and State investment. These dams yield enormous flood control, water supply, and hydroelectric benefits.

Following the construction of the Bureau's Glen Canyon Dam in 1963, a temporary, 17-year flow regime of highly controlled water supply releases was experienced along the Lower Colorado River as Lake Powell was filled. This condition seems to have provided a false sense of security which allowed local residents and businesses to ignore the repeated warnings of the Bureau of Reclamation and the Corps of Engineers not to build in the floodplain downstream of Hoover Dam.

However, when the filling of Lake Powell was completed in 1980, the river returned to its previous flow regime of frequent flood control releases. The serious flooding that occurred during 1983, 1984, and 1985 is ample demonstration of this fact.

Despite these flood control releases and despite the best efforts of the Bureau of Reclamation to discourage it, development within the flood plain continues. Testimony received by the Committee on Environment and Public Works indicated that this development presents a serious problem with respect to the Bureau's ability to operate the upstream reservoir system.

One of the reasons for this situation is the fact that numerous Federal grants, subsidies, and programs which encourage development are available within the floodway. These include such things as Federal flood insurance, sewer and highway grants, Federal property leases, and loans to small businesses.

Furthermore, in the event of flooding, many of the residences and businesses in the floodway are eligible for Federal disaster relief or flood insurance payments.

For example, in 1983, 1984, and 1985, flooding on the lower Colorado River caused millions of dollars of damage to homes, businesses, and public facilities. During 1983 alone, the Federal Government paid $3 million in flood insurance claims and $4.9 million in other forms of disaster relief for flood-related damages in the floodway area. If the development of the floodplain continues, Federal expenditures due to flooding in the area can be expected to increase.

Perhaps more importantly, if the development of the floodplain continues, it can be expected that pressure to increase the flood storage capacity of the upstream dams will mount. Such an increase of flood storage capacity can only be obtained at the expense of the water supply storage behind the dams. The Bureau of Reclamation has calculated that to provide the flood control storage necessary to prevent the flood flows of 1983, water supply storage valued well in excess of $1 billion would have to be foregone. Since the resulting flood control benefits would in no way approach this level of magnitude, such a reallocation of resources is clearly unacceptable.

Mr. President, as I stated earlier, the main purpose of S. 1696 is to withdraw Federal assistance for new development within the Colorado River floodplain. The bill requires the establishment of a federally declared floodway after an extensive study and public participation process. Within the floodway, most forms of Fedral development-related assistance would be prohibited for new development.

The bill is more than fair to those who have already built within the floodplain. For them, Federal flood insurance—within certain limits—and many forms of Federal disaster relief would remain available.

Although Federal leasing would be required to be consistent with protection of the floodway, the bill contains no zoning or restrictions on the use of private land. That remains the responsibility of local governments. Residents of the affected areas will be allowed to build anywhere they could legally build under existing law, and to obtain traditional forms of bank financing for such construction, as well as any available private flood insurance.

Furthermore, the bill does not tell the Bureau of Reclamation or the Corps of Engineers how to manage the Colorado River. If management changes are necessary or desirable, they can be made in the same manner in which they would be made now. Section 9 of S. 1696 specifically preserves all necessary legal authority for both agencies, and generally protects the existence and operation of the law of the river.

S. 1696 has the unanimous support of all of the States in the Colorado River Basin and enactment of the bill will accomplish several important objectives: First, it will protect existing conservation storage along the Colorado River, thus reducing the need for new water project construction in a growing area of the country. Second, maintenance of the floodway as specified in this legislation will decrease future flood damages. Third, because a more natural flood flow regime can be assured, downstream riparian fish and wildlife habitat is likely to be enhanced.

Further, implementation of S. 1696 will require a very small Federal expenditure, and if the benefits which are expected from this legislation are realized, the Federal Government will actually save tens of millions of dollars over the next several decades.

Mr. President, the committee reported version of S. 1696 which is before the Senate today is a carefully crafted compromise bill. It is legislation that provides great benefits to the Federal Government and local water users while at the same time doing little if any harm to those who live downstream of Davis Dam and currently benefit from Federal development subsidies.

When it approved the Coastal Barriers Resources Act during the 97th Congress, Congress gave explicit recognition to the idea that in certain areas of high risk, Federal development assistance and incentives should be withdrawn. The Committee on Environment and Public Works again recommends this approach to the Senate as the best way to address the serious problems caused by the continued development of the Lower Colorado River floodplain.

Finally, Mr. President, I would like to express my appreciation for the farsightedness of Senator GOLDWATER who originally introduced this measure, I would also like to thank Senators SIMPSON and DECONCINI who, along with Senator GOLDWATER, went well beyond the call of duty to insure that the committee bill is an excellent one. In addition, I would also like to thank our colleagues on the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources who have worked with us at every stage in perfecting the bill which is now before the Senate.

Mr. President, as I stated at the beginning of my remarks, this is truly a piece of good Government legislation and I urge my colleagues to give it their full support.

I ask unanimous consent that the section-by-section analysis from the committee report on S. 1696 be produced at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS S. 1696

Section 1. The Short Title.

Section 2. Congressional Findings and Purposes. Congress finds that maintenance of the Colorado River Floodway is essential to accomplish the multiple purposes of the dams and other control structures on the Colorado River. Congress finds that certain federal programs which subsidize or permit development within the Floodway threaten human life, health, property, and natural resources. Congress finds further that coordinated Federal, State and local action is necessary to limit floodway development.

The purposes of the Act are to: "establish the Colorado River Floodway . . . to provide benefits to river users . . ." and to "estabish a Task Force to advice the Secretary of the Interior and the Congress on establishment of the Floodway and on managing existing and future development within the Floodway . . ."

Section 3. Definitions. The definition of the term "financial assistance" is virtually identical to the definition contained in the Coastal Barrier Resources Act, P.L. 97-348.

Section 4. Colorado River Floodway Task Force. This section establishes a Colorado River Floodway Task Force and specifies its membership and functions. The Task Force is to consider and make recommendations to the Secretary of the Interior and to the Congress concerning "the means to restore and maintain the Floodway . . ." including any necessary additional legislation; "the necessity for additional Floodway management legislation . . ."; "design criteria for the creation of the floodway boundaries . . ."; "the review of mapping procedures"; the possibility of "compensation . . . in specific cases of economic hardship resulting from impacts of the 1983 flood on property outside the Floodway which could not reasonably have been foreseen"; and, "The potential application of the Floodway on Indian lands and recommended legislation or regulations needed . . .". The Task Force membership will contain representatives of a wide variety of local, State and Federal interests. The Committee anticipates that federal agencies will actively participate in Task Force activities, so that local and State views will receive a full hearing.

Section 5. Colorado River Floodway. This section requires the Secretary of the Interior, in consultation with the seven Colorado River Basin States, the Colorado River Floodway Task Force, and other interested parties, to

(1) complete a study of the tributary floodflows downstream of Davis Dam; and

(2) define the specific boundaries of the Colorado River Floodway so that the Floodway can accommodate either a one-in-one hundred year river flow consisting of controlled releases and tributary inflow, or a flow of forty thousand cubic feet per second (cfs), whichever is greater, from below Davis Dam to the Southerly International Boundary between the United States of America and the Republic of Mexico.

The standard level of protection that has been adopted in the administration of the National Flood Insurance Act is the one-in-one hundred year frequency flood. The Corps of Engineers has determined that 40,000 cubic feet per second (cfs) is the maximum release rate that historically would have inflicted a minimum level of downstream damages and has incorporated this flow level in its Hoover Dam flood control regulations continually since 1935. Consequently, the boundaries of the Colorado River Floodway should be capable of accommodating a one-in-one hundred year river flow or a 40,000 cfs flow, whichever is greater, from Davis Dam to the Southerly International Boundary between the United States and Mexico.

It is the Committee's judgment that the Secretary's analysis of the one-in-one hundred-year river flow should represent a realistic one-in-one hundred-year probability of such flow occurring in any reach of the river at a given time, and should not arbitrarily assume that flood inflows from all tributaries occur simultaneously. It is the nature of weather events along the Lower Colorado River, a desert region, that most rain storms are intense, localized thunder showers that would produce floods from only a few tributaries at a time, and the Secretary's study should reflect this.

Section 6. Limitations on Federal Expenditures Affecting the Floodway. This section states that, except as provided in Section 7, no new expenditures or new financial assistance may be made available under authority of any Federal law for any purpose within the Floodway.

Section 7. Exceptions. There are several functions and uses of the floodway that serve the public interest, and are generally compatible with floodway operation. This section recognizes those functions and uses by providing limited exceptions, generally subject to Secretarial discretion, to the prohibition on federal expenditures. These exception are enumerated as public and tribal roads, military activities, fish and wildlife enhancement projects, navaigation aids, emergency action assistance, public health assistance, public and Tribal recreational developments, and compatible agricultural uses that do not involve permanent crops and include only a minimal amount of permanent facilities in the floodway.

In general, the term "permanent crops" is to mean those crops which have a normal life of five years or more or which would be an obstruction to river flood flows. In this regard, crops such as alfalfa, grains such as wheat, barley, oats, etc., asparagus, cotton, lettuce, cauliflower, melons, tomatoes, carrots, etc., should not be considered "permanent crops" for the purposes of this bill. However, date, citrus, pistachio, or pecan trees would be examples of "permanent crops".

Similarly, "permanent facilities" are those improvements that would obstruct river flood flows. Therefore, facilities such as canals, laterals, etc., should not be regarded as "permanent facilities" for the purposes of this Act.

In addition, river control structures and related works are also exempted under this section. Attention should be given to the control of tributary flows, and erosion problems. The Secretary has authority to review tributary inflow systems both on and off reservation lands. Additionally, the Secretary can review progress on the bank stabilization program on the reservations along the Lower Colorado and determine whether additional work is necessary in this regard.

This section also includes language which makes permissible federal funding of certain aspects of the proposed Yuma Crossing Park development. Specifically, the bill will permit federal funds to be used for restoration activities at National Historic Landmarks, and utility or interpretive improvements which are essential or closely related to the purpose of restoring these National Historic Landmarks. The utility improvements must be floodproofed in accordance with sound engineering practice wherever and whenever possible. The Committee has been informed that the cost of improvements which are permissible under this section will not exceed $225,000 (1986 dollars).

Section 8. Certification of Compliance. This section requires that the Secretary of the Interior certify to Congress on an annual basis that federal agencies are in compliance with this Act.

Section 9. Priority of Laws. Section 9 contains a series of provisions to make certain that current law and regulations governing the operation of the Colorado River, often referred to as the "Law of the River," are not affected by the Act. Since the River and reservoir management programs currently in effect are established under current laws and regulations, these programs will be unaffected as well.

Section 10. Separability.

Section 11. Reports to Congress. This provision requires the Secretary of the Interior to report to Congress within one year after the date of enactment of the Act with respect to: (1) the Colorado River Floodway, (2) the report of the Colorado River Floodway Task Force, and (3) his further recommendations concerning Floodway matters.

Section 12. Amendments regarding Flood Insurance. Section 12 conforms certain provisions of the National Flood Insurance Act to this Act. Specifically, it grandfathers flood insurance coverage for existing development, and limits its availability for future development. This provision is modeled on the comparable provisions of the Coastal Barrier Resources Act ("CBRA"), P.L. 97-348. The definition of "new construction" is based on Federal Emergency Management Administration ("FEMA") regulations defining the term "insurable building" promulgated in implementing the CBRA.

Section 13. Federal leases. This section sets forth provisions controlling federal leasing within the Floodway. Leases of lands owned in whole or part by the United States (including Indian and other trust lands of the United States) are required to be consistent with the operation and maintenance of the Floodway. It also contains a separate, and parallel, provision for Lake Mohave.

This section also clarifies that, with respect to Indian lands held in trust by the United States within the floodway, leasing may take place if one or both of the following conditions are met: (1) if the activities for which the lands are leased are exempted under section 7 of this act, or (2) if no federal money for construction or operation and maintenance is provided and if the lessee, tribe, or individual has provided sufficient insurance or security to insure against all reasonably foreseeable, direct, and consequential damages to the property of the tribe, private persons, and the United States, which may result from the proposed lease.

Section 14. Notices and Existing Laws. Section 14 requires notice of certain provisions of existing law and of this Act to be given to residents of areas in the Floodway and to federal lessees. It provides for the continuation in the floodway area of the National Flood Insurance Program (except as specifically altered by the Act) and its integration with the requirements, including the mapping provisions, of this Act. The Department of the Interior, in carrying out its responsibilities under this Act, should work closely and on a cooperative basis with representatives of the Federal Emergency Management Agency ("FEMA") to ensure that existing programs, such as the National Flood Insurance Program, can be supplemented as inexpensively and effectively as possible.

Section 15. Authorization of Appropriations. Section 15 authorizes a total of $600,000 over a five year period, in addition to any other funds now available to the Department, for implementation of the Department's and FEMA's responsibilities under the Act. It also provides that Sections 6 and 7 are not affected by the provisions of this section. In addition, this section clarifies that Indian tribes may be eligible under Public Law 93-638 to contract for studies of Indian lands required under the provisions of this Act.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. President, as chairman of the Committee on Environment and Public Works, I am proud to recommend S. 1696 to my colleagues in the Senate.

As the distinguished chairman of the Water Resources Subcommittee, Senator ABDNOR, has said, S. 1696 is truly a good government piece of legislation.

The essence of the Colorado River Floodway Protection Act is to remove Federal development subsidies from an area which by its very nature should not be being developed.

The floodplain below the Davis Dam is itself an important part of the upstream dams on the Colorado River; it serves as an escape valve for the flood control releases from these dams. It, therefore, makes no sense for the Federal Government to continue to provide development assistance for those who want to locate in this floodplain.

This bill does not forbid development on private land in the floodplain; it merely assures that those who do wish to build there will assume the risk themselves.

Mr. President, S. 1696 is a very fair piece of legislation. It insures that there will be ample local representation during the actual delineation of the floodway boundaries, and it contains extensive protections for those who already live and earn their living within those boundaries.

Mr. President, S. 1696 is strongly supported by all of the Colorado River Basin States and I urge its adoption.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, the Colorado River Floodway Protection Act is very important legislation for my State of Arizona. The Colorado River is a major source of water for Arizona as it is to a greater or lesser extent for the six other Colorado River Basin States, New Mexcio, Wyoming, Colorado, Utah, California, and Nevada.

Over 18 million people from Denver to San Diego use the waters from this majestic river to literally make the desert bloom. Colorado River water is used to irrigate over 1 million acres for agriculture and to supply the water needs for thousands of people in their homes and in their work places from major cities, such as Phoenix and, in the future, Tucson, to small towns from Vernal, UT, to Parker, AZ.

The dams on the Colorado River are a major source of energy and the lakes formed behind them provide wonderful recreational opportunities. Fish and wildlife are enhanced by the river and the wildlife refuges along its banks. Important flood control benefits have resulted from the construction of Flaming Gorge, Glen Canyon, Hoover, Davis, and Parker Dams.

Because of the river's location in the arid Western part of our Nation and its flow through parts of seven Western States, there is already greater allocation of Colorado River water than can be supplied in a normal rainfall year. Therefore, it is of the utmost importance that the river be managed in a manner which will result in the greatest conservation of water.

In order to control development in the river's flood plain, I introduced this bill, which is a companion bill to H.R. 1246 introduced by Congressman CHENEY. H.R. 1246 has passed the House. The purpose of my bill is to establish a Federal floodway of at least 40,000 cubic feet per second from below Davis Dam to the United States-Mexican border, a distance of 250 miles, or a 1 in 100 year river flow, whichever is greater.

This legislation is modeled after the Coastal Barriers Resources Act, which eliminates Federal assistance programs within fragile coastal areas, and the same would be the case for land in the designated floodway. Certain activities, such as agriculture and recreation, would continue, but no permanent structures could be built which would have any type of Federal aid in the form of flood insurance loans or grants. All present structures within the designated floodway will be grandfathered.

All the Governors and water resources directors of the seven basin States support this bill, which will provide flood protection and maximum water storage and conservation.

I want to express my appreciation to Senator STAFFORD, chairman of the Environment and Public Works Committee, and Senator JAMES ABDNOR, chairman of the Subcommittee on Water Resources, for their outstanding efforts in bringing this bill before the Senate.

● Mr. SIMPSON. Mr. President, the Colorado River Floodway Protection Act is a very important piece of legislation that will affect all of the States along the lower Colorado River Basin. This includes my State of Wyoming. I extend my appreciation to Senators ABDNOR and MOYNIHAN for moving this legislation through the subcommittee hearing process. Furthermore, I appreciate the efforts of Senators GOLDWATER and DECONCINI in framing a workable compromise on some of the very difficult issues contained in the original legislation. My fine sidekick in the House, DICK CHENEY, is to be richly praised for his perseverance.

The headwaters of the Green River—a river which is a major tributary of the Colorado River—are found in the western portion of Wyoming. This legislation, however, focuses on the Colorado River and its unusually high river flows from Davis Dam, located on the Arizona-Nevada State line, south to the United States-Mexico border, some 250 miles downstream.

This legislation recognizes the natural fact that the Colorado River will periodically flood, despite the major river control provided by existing dams all along the stretch of the Colorado. This flooding potential was graphically illustrated during 1982 and 1983. As a result of these floods, local residences and businesses were wiped out. This destruction was followed by appeals for Federal assistance through Federal flood insurance, Federal emergency assistance, and the like. After these major floods, development continued anew. This development actually and blatantly occurred between the Bureau of Reclamation's flood control levees.

Because of the very real potential for future flooding and the attendant loss of life and property, it is now necessary to withdraw most forms of Federal assistance to new development within the area along the Colorado River. This legislation will achieve that goal and place the risk of development squarely upon those who choose to take that risk.

By enacting this legislation, the Senate will simply establish a course of conduct which says that if an individual wishes to place a business or residence within the floodway, that individual may do so at his or her own risk. He or she should not expect that risk to be insured by the Federal Government.

Mr. President, this legislation makes ultimate good sense and will make good law. I do earnestly urge my colleagues to favorably consider S. 1696.●

(By request of Mr. DOLE, the following statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD:)

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I have worked with members of the Environment and Public Works Committee and sponsors of the Colorado River Floodway legislation in both bodies to insure that the actions of the Federal Government in establishing a permanent floodway for the Colorado River do not create unforeseen difficulties for communities and individuals along the river. I commend my colleagues for their efforts in addressing the concerns which have been raised by Indian tribes whose reservations are located in the floodway as well as the concerns of communities on both sides of the river. I think the modifications agreed to will ease some of the greatest fears and prevent Federal intrusions which really have no bearing on the intent of this legislation. I want to take this opportunity to express my appreciation to the chairman of the Water Resources Subcommittee, Mr. ABDNOR, the ranking minority, Mr. BENTSEN, and their staffs for their responsiveness and diligent efforts to improve his legislation.

The amendments we have drafted to S. 1696 make clear that the Secretary of the Interior will take into consideration the task force recommendations prior to drawing up the boundaries of the floodway. This is a very important modification, Mr. President. It gives the task force a valid role to play in the formulation of the floodway boundaries.

Other changes to the bill which are addressed by the amendments relate to the continued development of a historical park area known as the Yuma crossing and associated sites in the Yuma area. The provision included in the Senate reported bill insures that development consistent with floodway management can be undertaken in the future. On the subject of tributary inflows, language has been included in the committee report which recognizes the need for close attention to the tributary waters flowing into the Colorado. A great deal of concern was expressed by communities along the river that tributary inflows need to be monitored to insure that much greater than 1 in 100 year flows in the Colorado would not occur because of unknown or unexpected flows into the Colorado from its tributaries. It is my hope that the Secretary of the Interior will review the tributary inflow control system to insure that large releases are not occurring simultaneously with large releases from below Davis Dam on the Colorado River.

Mr. President, even with the modifications incorporated in the committee bill, I cannot support S. 1696. I continue to believe we should seek the input from all affected parties prior to taking final actions on a permanent floodway for the Colorado. I do not disagree with the need to establish a clear and decisive policy for the management of the criteria for the operation of Bureau of Reclamation structures on the Colorado River, which S. 1696 will do. However, I do have concerns about the way in which we are undertaking this management. I sponsored alternative legislation on this issue establishing a task force to determine what the proper management of the floodway should be. My legislation would create a task force, consisting of Federal, State, and local governmental officials, which would be charged with reviewing past operations of the dams which regulate the flow of water in the Colorado, examining damage from floods created by the 1983 releases, and making recommendations to the President and the Congress on the future size of the floodway, construction, Federal expenditures, and need for additional legislation. S. 1696, on the other hand, establishes a federally recognized floodway to accommodate either a 1 in 100 year flood or a flow of 40,000 cubic feet per second. A task force is created to make recommendations to the Secretary of the Interior and the Congress on management of the river.

This legislation has enormous ramifications for communities and individuals along the Colorado River. I would feel much more comfortable if we adopted legislation directing a task force to review all consequences first. However, I understand there is considerable support for this legislation both by the administration and among my colleagues. For this reason, I will let the legislation go with the modifications made and hope that potential future problems that may occur as a result of the legislation can be dealt with legislatively at that time.

Mr. President, again I thank my distinguished colleagues on the Environment and Public Works Committee. I commend Senator GOLDWATER, Congressman UDALL, and Congressman CHENEY for all of their efforts on this legislation.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, this bill is made necessary by a curious set of circumstances. Following the construction of Glen Canyon Dam in 1963, releases into the lower Colorado River were limited for the following 17 years as Lake Powell began to fill. Despite warnings from the Bureau of Reclamation and the Corps of Engineers that greater flood control releases would eventually be necessary, local residents and businesses began building on the floodplain of the river. This development continues today and threatens the Bureau's ability to operate the upstream reservoir system. Part of the problem is that numerous Federal grants, subsidies, and programs that encourage development are available within the floodplain.

The principal purpose of S. 1696 is to withdraw Federal assistance for development within the floodway. At the same time, currently existing development would be grandfathered. The bill has other provisions, but this is the crux of it.

Because of the Bureau of Reclamation's involvement in managing the Colorado River and because of the responsibilities of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources in overseeing the Bureau's programs, the committee was given sequential referral of S. 1696 following its consideration by the Committee on Environment and Public Works. The Committee on Energy and Natural Resources supports S. 1696, as reported by the Committee on Environment and Public Works, and for this reason elected not to mark up the bill separately.

Mr. President, I believe this bill represents a wise solution to a difficult problem, and I urge its immediate passage.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Environment and Public Works Committee be discharged from further consideration of H.R. 1246, the House companion bill, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 1246) to establish a federally declared Floodway for the Colorado River below Davis Dam.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to strike all after the enacting clause and insert the text of S. 1696, as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Kansas.

The motion was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The bill (H.R. 1246), as amended, was passed.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

PLAN AND DESIGN OF THE NATIONAL AIR AND SPACE MUSEUM

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate turn to Calendar No. 863, S. 1311, dealing with the Smithsonian Institution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1311) to authorize the Smithsonian Institution to plan, design, and construct facilities for the National Air and Space Museum.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Rules and Administration, with an amendment to strike out all after the enacting clause, and insert the following:

That the Smithsonian Institution is authorized to plan, design, and construct facilities for the National Air and Space Museum at Washington Dulles International Airport.

SEC. 2. (a) The Smithsonian Institution is authorized to develop a master plan for expansion of the National Air and Space Museum at Washington Dulles International Airport as will not interfere with the operations of such airport.

(b) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated for fiscal years 1987 and 1988 a total of $1,000,000 to the Smithsonian Institution for master planning activities as provided in subsection (a).

SEC. 3. No Federal funds are authorized for the construction of any facilities provided for by section 1 of this Act.

SEC. 4. (a) The Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution is authorized to construct the Charles McC. Mathias, Jr. Laboratory for Environmental Research.

(b) The Charles McC. Mathias, Jr. Laboratory for Environmental Research shall be located at the Smithsonian Environmental Research Center, a bureau of the Smithsonian Institution, located at Edgewater, Maryland.

(c) Effective October 1, 1986, there is authorized to be appropriated to the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution $1,000,000 to carry out the purposes of this section.

(d) Any portion of the sums appropriated to carry out the purposes of this section may be transferred to the General Services Administration which, in consultation with the Smithsonian Institution, is authorized to enter into contracts and take such other action, to the extent of the sums so transferred to it, as may be necessary to carry out such purposes.

AMENDMENT NO. 2821

(Purpose: To express the sense of the Congress on recognition of the contributions of the seven Challenger astronauts by supporting establishment of a Children's Challenger Center for Space Science)

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk on behalf of Senator GARN to the committee substitute.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kansas [Mr. DOLE] for Mr. GARN and Mr. GLENN proposes an amendment numbered 2821.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the bill, add the following:

SEC. . (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) the crew of the space shuttle Challenger was dedicated to stimulating the interest of American children in space flight and science generally;

(2) the members of the crew gave their lives trying to benefit the education of American children;

(3) a fitting tribute to that effort and to the sacrifice of the Challenger crew and their families is needed; and

(4) an appropriate form for such tribute would be to expand educational opportunities in science by the creation of a center that will offer children and teachers activities and information derived from American space research.

(b) It is the sense of the Congress that—

(1) a Children's Challenger Center for Space Science should be established in conjunction with the Smithsonian Institution as a living memorial to the seven Challenger astronauts who died serving their country and to other individuals who gave their lives in exploration of the space frontier; and

(2) the Federal Government should, along with the Smithsonian Institution public and private organizations and persons, cooperate in the establishing of such a Center.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment (No. 2821) was agreed to.

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, S. 1311 authorizes the Smithsonian Institution to add a facility for the National Air and Space Museum at Washington Dulles International Airport. It also recognizes the significant achievement of our colleague, CHARLES MCC. MATHIAS, by authorizing the construction of a new research lab at the Smithsonian Environmental Research Center at Edgewater, MD, in his honor and by providing $1 million for this facility.

The legislation authorizes $1 million for master planning for the National Air and Space Museum expansion, but provides that all the funds for construction shall come from the private sector or other non-Federal sources. No appropriations are authorized to construct the buildings for any part of the project.

In 1983 the Regents of the Smithsonian Institution voted to expand the National Air and Space Museum at Dulles. This expansion at an active airport was necessary due to the difficulty of delivering and displaying large modern air and spacecraft at the Institution's facility on The Mall in Washington.

At its meeting of September 16, 1985, the Regents of the Smithsonian unanimously endorsed the purposes of S. 1311 specifically including the construction authority.

As you may know the space shuttle Enterprise is now sitting at Washington Dulles awaiting a permanent home. It and other large artifacts can only be displayed at a facility which has sufficient ramp space to allow movement of the craft and access to a runway.

At present, more than 10 million people a year visit the National Air and Space Museum on The Mall. Only 25 percent of the National Air and Space collection can be viewed by the public and the existing Mall facility is just not large enough to cope with either more exhibits or more visitors. Moreover, the new facility at Dulles will give visitors an opportunity to see outstanding craftmen and artisans at work restoring historically significant airplanes.

Mr. President, I am very confident that the Smithsonian can raise the full amount of construction funds through grassroots donations from all over the world, business contributions, and through some State and local support. In fact the cost of the first stage building can likely be repaid through concessions revenues and parking once the facility is in operation.

The National Air and Space Museum has a history of sucessfully raising funds for film productions, seminars, and research, and it has the greatest visitation of any museum in the world. I have the utmost confidence that this project can be completed successfully without Federal funds and I am urging your support for the authorization of this project and development of a master plan to assist in the fundraising effort.

The air and space sciences touch every part of our daily lives. They affect the way we communicate, travel, enjoy our leisure time, and do business. Air and space is at the cutting edge for new technology and technology has replaced territorial expansion as the essence of world power and economic health. Space is our new frontier. Transportation will be key to unlocking that new frontier in space as it is on Earth. America's standard of living and that of other Western nations will be dependent upon our ability to continue to lead in air and space technology.

It has been our great fortune to live in the early years of the age of flight and at the dawn of the space age. The dream of flying has stirred the soul of man for hundreds, perhaps thousands, of years, but only during this century have we developed the principles of man-made flight materials, technology, fuels, and resources to shrink our world and even our solar system. Flight has given us new perspectives on our daily lives. We have soared from man's first powered flight a few feet above the North Carolina sand to the Moon, to untethered walks in outer space and to automated exploration of the planets in the span of just eight decades.

The Smithsonian Institution, clearly recognizing the tremendous impact that air travel and space exploration has had on our lives, wisely developed the National Air and Space Museum here in Washington. On July 2 of this year we celebrated the museum's 10th anniversary, and in its first decade over 100,000,000 people have been helped to better understand aviation and our world at the new National Air and Space Museum on The Mall. That is an astounding statistic and a clear indication that the people of America appreciate the importance of air and space. I hope all of my colleagues in this body will join me in helping to stimulate the interest in air and space and to further the dissemination of knowledge about modern technology by approving S. 1311 and authorizing this new facility as an adjunct to the existing National Air and Space Museum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on agreeing to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

So the bill (S. 1311) was passed, as follows:

S. 1311

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Smithsonian Institution is authorized to plan, design, and construct facilities for the National Air and Space Museum at Washington Dulles International Airport.

SEC. 2(a) The Smithsonian Institution is authorized to develop a master plan for expansion of the National Air and Space Museum at Washington Dulles International Airport as will not interfere with the operations of such airport.

(b) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated for fiscal years 1987 and 1988 a total of $1,000,000 to the Smithsonian Institution for master planning activities as provided in subsection (a).

SEC. 3. No Federal funds are authorized for the construction of any facilities provided for by section 1 of this Act.

SEC. 4. (a) The Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution is authorized to construct the Charles McC. Mathias, Jr. Laboratory for Environmental Research.

(b) The Charles McC. Mathias, Jr. Laboratory for Environmental Research shall be located at the Smithsonian Environmental Research Center, a bureau of the Smithsonian Institution, located at Edgewater, Maryland.

(c) Effective October 1, 1986, there is authorized to be appropriated to the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution $1,000,000 to carry out the purposes of this section.

(d) Any portion of the sums appropriated to carry out the purposes of this section may be transferred to the General Services Administration which, in consultation with the Smithsonian Institution, is authorized to enter into contracts and take such other action, to the extent of the sums so transferred to it, as may be necessary to carry out such purposes.

SEC. 5. (a) The Congress finds that—

The crew of the space shuttle Challenger was dedicated to stimulating the interest of American children in space flight and science generally;

(2) the members of the crew gave their lives trying to benefit the education of American children;

(3) a fitting tribute to that effort and to the sacrifice of the Challenger crew and their families is needed; and

(4) an appropriate form for such tribute would be to expand educational opportunities in science by the creation of a center that will offer children and teachers activities and information derived from American space research.

(b) It is the sense of the Congress that—

(1) a Children's Challenger Center for Space Science should be established in conjunction with the Smithsonian Institution as a living memorial to the seven Challenger astronauts who died serving their country and to other individuals who gave their lives in exploration of the space frontier; and

(2) the Federal Government should, along with the Smithsonian Institution, public and private organizations and persons, cooperate in the establishing of such a Center.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

ORDERS FOR TUESDAY, SEPTEMBER 16, 1986

RECESS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that once the Senate completes its business today, it stand in recess until the hour of 9:30 a.m. on Tuesday, September 16, 1986.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF CERTAIN SENATORS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, following the recognition of the two leaders under the standing order, I ask unanimous consent that the following Senators be recognized for special orders not to exceed 5 minutes each: Senators HAWKINS, PROXMIRE, LEVIN, DURENBERGER, BUMPERS, KASSEBAUM, and GORE.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, following the special orders just identified, I ask unanimous consent that there be a period for the transaction of routine morning business not to extend beyond the hour of 10:30 a.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein for not more than 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROGRAM

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, at the conclusion of routine morning business, it would be the intention of the majority leader to turn to the conference report to accompany defense reorganization. As I understand it, that can be disposed of without a rollcall and would take about 20 minutes. It is a matter that the Presiding Officer, the distinguished Senator from Arizona, Senator GOLDWATER, has an interest in, along with the distinguished ranking member of that committee, Senator NUNN from Georgia, and they will be here at 10:30.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, we will be here.

Mr. DOLE. And it will be the intention of the majority leader—and we will work this out with those who wish to speak on the Rehnquist nomination—to then try to take up some appropriation bills to fill in any gaps that we have.

As I understand it, there are two or three speakers and there is a very important memorial service that will take away many of our colleagues tomorrow morning. So we will probably go back and forth into legislative and executive sessions and hopefully wrap up the unfinished business on H.R. 5234, the Interior appropriations bill, and also the D.C. appropriations bill and perhaps the DOT appropriations bill.

I assume that may be all we can do, but I would also hope we might be able to turn to the highway bill sometime this week.

The vote on cloture will occur on Wednesday. Hopefully, shortly after that vote, if it is in the affirmative, we will be able to vote on the nomination, followed by the Scalia nomination.

ERADICATION OF ILLICIT DRUG CROPS

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I alerted the distinguished majority leader to my desire to clear rule XIV with respect to H.R. 5484.

Is there a House bill at the desk with that number, H.R. 5484?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Yes, there is.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask for its first reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will report.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 5484) to strengthen Federal efforts to encourage foreign cooperation in eradicating illicit drug crops, and in halting international drug traffic to improve enforcement of Federal drug laws, and enhance interdiction of illicit drug shipments to provide strong Federal leadership in establishing effective drug abuse prevention and education programs, to expand Federal support for drug abuse treatment and rehabilitation efforts, and for other purposes.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask for second reading of the bill.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I object to further consideration of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

The bill will be held at the desk.

RECESS UNTIL TOMORROW AT 9:30 A.M.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, there being no further business to come before the Senate, I move the Senate stand in recess until the hour of 9:30 a.m., Tuesday, September 16, 1986.

The motion was agreed to and the Senate, at 6:29 p.m., recessed until Tuesday, September 16, 1986, at 9:30 a.m.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules Committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Any changes in committee scheduling will be indicated by placement of an asterisk to the left of the name of the unit conducting such meetings.

Meetings scheduled for Tuesday, September 16, 1986, may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Tuesday, September 16, 1986

The House met at 12 noon and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. WRIGHT].

DESIGNATION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker:

WASHINGTON, DC,
September 12, 1986.

I hereby designate the Honorable JIM WRIGHT to act as Speaker pro tempore on Tuesday, September 16, 1986.

THOMAS P. O'NEILL, Jr.,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

PRAYER

The Reverend Edward Bucia, St. Joseph's Church, Camden, NJ, offered the following prayer:

O God, our Father, Creator and Ruler of all nations that come together to form our universe. You, who have placed Your fingerprint on the history of mankind; so that no one who examines it can question that it is of God. You who have always blessed us with an abundance. We beg You to bless and guide our destiny, especially today, as we begin this session of the House of Representatives.

Ruler of the universe, as our guided missiles and space shuttles soar high up almost to the very threshold of Your heavenly throne; we are ever mindful that we can only do so by Your grace and that it is our failures and successes that also give You praise.

May Your divine countenance shine upon us and grant to our Nation and to the world the peace, justice, and freedom which we long for in these moments when the world seems to stand on the brink of disaster.

Be mindful that You are the God of our fathers whose almighty hand has made and preserved our Nation and the world. We pray that You will provide for the healing of our land. That You will bring our Nation and every nation lying under Your rule back to the moral principles upon which they were founded and so that each may do their part and not be discouraged nor misled in his quest for peace, justice, and freedom which only You can give to the world through Your benevolence. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Hallen, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested, bills and a joint resolution of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 3002. An act to provide for the establishment of an experimental program relating to the acceptance of voluntary services from participants in an executive exchange program of the Government;

H.R. 5073. An act to amend the Toxic Substances Control Act to require the Environmental Protection Agency to promulgate regulations requiring inspection for asbestos-containing material in the Nation's schools, development of asbestos management plans for such schools, response actions with respect to friable asbestos-containing material in such schools, and for other purposes;

H.R. 5233. An act making appropriations for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, and related agencies, for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, and for other purposes; and

H.J. Res. 60. Joint resolution to designate the week beginning September 1, 1985, as "National School-Age Child Care Awareness Week."

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendments to the bill (H.R. 5233) "An act making appropriations for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, and related agencies, for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, and for other purposes," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. WEICKER, Mr. HATFIELD, Mr. STEVENS, Mr. ANDREWS, Mr. RUDMAN, Mr. SPECTER, Mr. MCCLURE, Mr. DOMENICI, Mr. PROXMIRE, Mr. BYRD, Mr. HOLLINGS, Mr. CHILES, Mr. BURDICK, Mr. INOUYE, and Mr. HARKIN to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate recedes from its amendment numbered 4 to the amendment of the House to the bill (S. 720) "An act to establish a permanent boundary for the Acadia National Park in the State of Maine, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills and joint resolutions of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 2250. An act to strengthen the prohibition of kickbacks relating to subcontracts under Federal Government contracts;

S. 2271. An act for the relief of Jens-Peter Berndt.

S.J. Res. 406. Joint resolution to designate October 4, 1986, as "National Outreach to the Rural Disabled Day."

WELCOMING FATHER EDWARD H. BUCIA

(Mr. FLORIO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to welcome to the House of Representatives Father Edward H. Bucia of Camden, NJ, who was designated to give the opening prayer today. Father Bucia was accompanied to Washington by a group of his parishioners and I hope my colleagues will join me in welcoming them today.

I also would like to highlight for my colleagues Father Bucia's many accomplishments and the valuable contributions he has made to his parish and to my district. Having served at St. Joseph's Church in Camden, NJ, for a number of years, Father Bucia has demonstrated concern for his fellow man as well as a deep sense of pride in his heritage as a Polish-American. He has the distinction of serving as pastor to the only Polish parish in the entire diocese.

Born in Philadelphia, Father Bucia has spent his career serving the New Jersey area having been ordained in Camden 24 years ago. He has since demonstrated a concern for the youth of his parish through his involvement with youth activities as diocesan Scout chaplain for both boys and girls. He has taught at St. Joseph's High School in Camden. His important efforts were recognized when he was granted an award from the Chapel of the Four Chaplains in Philadelphia. He is also a recipient of the Knight of St. George in Scouting.

He has a long history of involvement in civic affairs and a deep commitment to furthering an understanding of the Polish heritage. He was instrumental in organizing the Polish-American Association of South Jersey and is the chaplain to the Polish Army Veterans Association. He has worked with the mayor of Atlantic City in organizing the annual Polish Heritage Day celebration and has helped to promote the cultural interests of the community as well as to provide scholarships for the community's youth.

He has twice visited Poland and this has enhanced his commitment to his parish and to his heritage. For his efforts, he received the "Man of the Year" Award in 1982 from the Polish American Congress. He has worked tirelessly to help restore and revive the south Camden area and this remains his life's ambition.

Later today, Father Bucia and his parishioners will join me for a seminar on Poland and United States-Polish relations. The session, which will include speakers from the U.S. State Department, the Polish Embassy, the Congressional Research Service, the Senate Foreign Relations Committee and the AFL-CIO, promises to be a useful and informative event. I welcome Father Bucia and his parishioners to Washington and extend to them my best wishes for success in their endeavors.

PRIVATE CALENDAR

The SPEAKER pro tempore. This is Private Calendar day. The Clerk will call the first individual bill on the Private Calendar.

STEVEN McKENNA

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 1598) for the relief of Steven McKenna.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill, as follows:

H.R. 1598

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. (a) Notwithstanding the time limitations of section 2401 of title 28, United States Code, and the exception contained in section 2680(k) of such title, Steven M. McKenna of Wickliffe, Ohio, may, during the one-year period beginning on the date of enactment of this Act, present to the appropriate Federal agency for administrative adjustment in the manner provided in section 2672 of such title, a claim for money damages against the United States for the conditions described in subsection (b).

(b) The conditions referred to in subsection (a) are certain congenital malformations suffered by Steven McKenna alleged to have occurred as a result of ingestion of the drug thalidomide by his mother during her prenatal care at the United States Army Dispensary at the Giessen, Germany, military facility during 1960. Such drug is alleged to have been dispensed by such Army Dispensary pursuant to the prescription instructions of a physician performing services under contract with the Department of th Army.

SEC. 2. Notwithstanding section 1402(b) of title 28, United States Code, the United States District Court for the Northern District of Ohio shall have jurisdiction to hear, determine, and render judgment on the claim described in the first section if an action on such claim is instituted in such court within the six-month period beginning on the date that such claim is finally denied, or deemed to be finally denied, by such Federal agency.

SEC. 3. Proceedings for the determination of the claim described in the first section, determination of damages, and review and payment of any judgment on such claim, shall be had in the same manner as if—

(1) the act or omission complained of occurred in the State of Ohio; and

(2) the court referred to in section 2 had jurisdiction under section 1346(b) of title 28, United States Code.

CONSENT CALENDAR

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House of Friday, September 12, 1986, this is Consent Calendar day. The Clerk will call the first bill on the Consent Calendar.

CONVEYANCE OF CERTAIN PUBLIC LANDS IN OCONTO AND MARINETTE COUNTIES, WI

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 4062) to provide for the conveyance of certain public lands in Oconto and Marinette Counties, WI.

There being no objection, the Clerk will read the bill as follows:

H.R. 4062

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. AUTHORIZATION OF CONVEYANCE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of the Interior (hereinafter in this Act referred to as the "Secretary") may convey any portion of the land described in subsection (b) to any citizen of the United States who claims and demonstrates possession of such portion of land.

(b) DESCRIPTION OF LAND.—The land referred to in subsection (a) consists of parcels of public lands constituting a survey hiatus in township 29 north, range 21 1/2 east, fourth principal meridian, Oconto and Marinette Counties, Wisconsin, which contain approximately 200 acres.

(c) PRELIMINARY DETERMINATIONS.—No conveyance may be made under authority of this Act until the Secretary determines that—

(1) such conveyance—

(A) is in the public interest, and

(B) will serve objectives which outweigh public objectives and values which would be served by retaining such lands in Federal ownership; and

(2) no other statutory authority exists whereby the Secretary may afford the appropriate relief.

SEC. 2. PROCEDURE FOR CONVEYANCE.

(a) DETERMINATION OF PRICE.—In determining the price for which land may be conveyed, the Secretary—

(1) shall appraise the land on the basis of its fair market value at the time of appraisal;

(2) shall deduct the value of improvements or development made by the person claiming possession or his predecessors in interest; and

(3) may further discount the price according to equitable considerations that exist with respect to each conveyance, including but not limited to—

(A) the amount originally paid for a parcel by the person claiming possession of such parcel, and

(B) any taxes that have been paid with respect to a parcel by the person claiming possession of such parcel.

(b) DESCRIPTION OF LAND CONVEYED AND CONVEYANCE THROUGH TRUSTEE.—(1) Land conveyed under this Act shall be described according to the rectangular system of survey, as reflected on the Federal plat of survey.

(2) In the event that an individual tract of land does not conform to such survey—

(A) the Secretary may convey such tract to a trustee acting on behalf of more than one claimant for purposes of conforming the legal description to such plat, and

(B) such trustee shall thereafter convey the appropriate interests to the respective claimants.

SEC. 3. TIME LIMIT FOR INITIATION OF IMPLEMENTATION.

The Secretary shall initiate action to implement this Act within 120 days of the date of the enactment of this Act.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, first, I want to thank Chairman UDALL of the Interior Committee, and the chairman of the Public Lands Subcommittee, Mr. SEIBERLING, for bringing this measure to the floor.

I rise in support of H.R. 4062, a bill to provide for the conveyance of certain public lands in Oconto and Marinette Counties in Wisconsin.

I introduced H.R. 4062 on January 28 of this year to correct a longstanding problem. An inaccurate survey of public lands, discovered in 1870, "106 years," resulted in a hiatus of unpatented land in Oconto and Marinette Counties. For many years, the unpatented land has been occupied and used by adjoining landowners for agriculture and a variety of other pursuits.

In 1983, the adjacent landowners requested a resurvey of the land, and the study verified the existence of a hiatus. Many of the affected landowners asked the Bureau of Land Management to help resolve the problem. At a public meeting attended by the landowners and BLM officials last October, various options for resolving the hiatus problem were discussed. The only viable and fair solution, clearly, is special legislation of this type.

The hiatus in question is relatively small—about 6 miles long and 197 acres in total area. At its widest point, the hiatus is 500 feet wide. About 20 families own adjacent property and are using hiatus land, and many are paying taxes on it.

H.R. 4062 simply allows the Department of the Interior to sell the land at fair market value, minus the value of developments or improvements made by the applicants, or any other equitable considerations, such as the payment of taxes.

I would ensure my colleagues that the Secretary may approve a conveyance only if it is in the public interest and if it will serve objectives that outweigh public values which would be served by keeping the land in Federal ownership.

Further, this legislation requires that all claimants must demonstrate clear possession of the land in question. The bill also establishes precise procedures for conveyance in a timely manner.

This is a fair, yet limited, approach to resolving a longstanding survey error. H.R. 4062 is consistent with similar legislation which has been enacted in the past and I urge its approval.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DIRECTING THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR TO CONVEY A CERTAIN PARCEL OF LAND LOCATED NEAR OCOTILLO, CA

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 1891) to direct the Secretary of the Interior to convey a certain parcel of land located near Ocotillo, CA.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

H.R. 1891

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) the Secretary of the Interior shall convey, without consideration, to Imperial Valley College Barker Museum of El Centro, California, all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the parcel of real property located near Ocotillo, California, and described in subsection (b). It is intended that such parcel be used for the purpose of constructing and maintaining a public museum.

(b) The parcel described in this subsection is: Township 16 south, range 9 east, San Bernardino Basin Meridian, tract 70, parcels 1 and 2.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 2, strike lines 5 through 7 and insert the following:

(b) Lands to be conveyed pursuant to this Act are the lands generally depicted on the map entitled "Transfer to Imperial Valley College Barker Museum," dated August 1986 and available for inspection in the office of the California State Director, Bureau of Land Management.

(c) The lands conveyed under this Act shall continue to be reserved, maintained, and utilized for public park (including museum) and recreational purposes. If any of such lands is used for any other purpose, the title to such land, together with all improvements thereon, shall revert to the United States.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

MODIFYING THE BOUNDARY OF THE UINTA NATIONAL FOREST, UT

The Clerk called the bill (H.R. 2499) to modify the boundary of the Uinta National Forest, UT, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Clerk read the bill as follows:

H.R. 2499

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. PURPOSES.

The purposes of this Act are—

(1) to modify the boundary of the Uinta National Forest; and

(2) to provide for more efficient management of certain land which is part of the Bonneville Unit, Central Utah Water Reclamation Project, located in Wasatch County, Utah, and is administered by the Bureau of Reclamation, Department of the Interior.

SEC. 2. BOUNDARY MODIFICATION OF UINTA NATIONAL FOREST.

(a) MODIFICATION AND ADMINISTRATION OF ADDED LANDS.—The exterior boundary of the Uinta National Forest is hereby modified as generally depicted on a map entitled "Boundary Modification, Uinta National Forest", dated June 1984. Those lands encompassed by the modified boundary (as generally depicted by legend A of such map) and comprising approximately 32,400 acres, are hereby added to the Uinta National Forest and shall be administered as part of such National Forest.

(b) MAP AND LEGAL DESCRIPTION.—Such map and legal description of the boundary modification of the National Forest shall be on file and available for public inspection in the office of the Chief, Forest Service, Department of Agriculture, and the Director, Bureau of Reclamation, Department of the Interior.

(e) VALID EXISTING RIGHTS.—The boundary modification made by subsection (a) shall not affect valid existing Federal or non-Federal rights or interests in existing land use authorizations; including, but not limited to, those of the Strawberry Water Users Association.

SEC. 3. LAND ACQUISITION FOR PURPOSES OF LAND AND WATER CONSERVATION FUND.

For purposes of section 7 of the Land and Water Conservation Fund Act of 1965 (16 U.S.C. 4601 9), the boundary of the Uinta National Forest, as modified by section 2, shall be treated as if it were the boundary of such National Forest as of January 1, 1965.

SEC. 4. BUREAU OF RECLAMATION TO CONTINUE TO OPERATE PROJECT.

(a) GENERAL AUTHORITY TO CONTINUE OPERATION.—Nothing in this Act shall affect or interfere with the authority of Bureau of Reclamation to operate in accordance with the purposes of the Bonneville Unit, Central Utah Water Reclamation Project, within the Reclamation Zone as generally depicted on the map entitled "Boundary Modification, Uinta National Forest", dated June 1984. The administration of the lands described in section 2 by the Forest Service shall not prevent the Bureau of Reclamation from accomplishing the purposes of such project.

(b) ACCESS TO RECLAMATION ZONE.—The Bureau of Reclamation shall have access to the Reclamation Zone at such locations and times as are mutually agreed to with the Forest Service.

SEC. 5. TRANSFER OF FUNDS.

Nothing in this Act shall be construed to interfere with the Memorandum of Understanding (contract No. 2097 40 1 3016) between the Bureau of Reclamation and the Forest Service, dated February 2, 1982. Funds may continue to be appropriated or otherwise made available to the Bureau of Reclamation for recreational purposes in accordance with plans dated August 1, 1978. With respect to the lands described in section 2, the Bureau of Reclamation may spend appropriated funds in accordance with such Memorandum of Understanding.

With the following committee amendment in the nature of a substitute:

Strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

SECTION 1. BOUNDARY MODIFICATION OF UINTA NATIONAL FOREST.

(a) MODIFICATION.—The exterior boundary of the Uinta National Forest is hereby modified as generally depicted on a map entitled "Boundary Modification, Uinta National Forest" dated July 1986.

(b) MAP AND LEGAL DESCRIPTION.—Such map and the legal description of the boundary modification of the National Forest shall be on file and available for public inspection in the offices of the Chief of the Forest Service, Department of Agriculture, the Director of the Bureau of Reclamation, Department of the Interior, and appropriate field offices of each such Department.

SEC. 2. OPERATION OF LANDS WITHIN EXTENDED BOUNDARY.

Nothing in this Act shall be construed to interfere with the authority, or valid existing rights and privileges of any Federal, State, or private interests, including (but not limited to) those of the Strawberry Users Association.

SEC. 3. TRANSFER OF FUNDS.

Nothing in this Act shall be construed to interfere with the Memorandum of Understanding (contract No. 2097-40-1-3016) between the Bureau of Reclamation and the Forest Service, dated February 2, 1982. Funds may continue to be appropriated or otherwise made available to the Bureau of Reclamation for recreational purposes in accordance with plans dated August 1, 1978. With respect to the lands subject to that memorandum, the Bureau of Reclamation may spend appropriated funds in accordance with that memorandum.

SEC. 4. LAND EXCHANGE.

(a) AUTHORIZATION.—(1) The Secretary of Agriculture may exchange the National Forest System lands described in paragraph (2) (including any improvements thereon) located in or near Heber City, Wasatch County, Utah, for a building to be constructed on Federal lands at a location in Wasatch County, Utah, to be specified by the Secretary.

(2) The lands referred to in paragraph (1) are those lands which are depicted on a plat entitled "Heber City Administrative Site", dated July 1986. The plat shall be on file and available for public inspection in the office of the Chief of the Forest Service, Department of Agriculture, and appropriate field offices.

(b) REQUIREMENT OF EQUAL VALUE.—The values, as determined by the Secretary, of the lands and building to be exchanged under this section shall be equal, or if not equal, shall be equalized by the payment of money to the grantor or the Secretary as the circumstances require so long as the payment does not exceed 25 percent of the total value of the land (including any improvements thereon) transferred out of Federal ownership. The Secretary shall try to reduce the amount of payment to as small an amount as possible.

Mr. NIELSON of Utah (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. NEILSON OF UTAH TO THE COMMITTEE AMENDMENT IN THE NATURE OF A SUBSTITUTE

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. NIELSON of Utah to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute: On page 4, line 21 delete "July" and insert in lieu thereof "September".

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, this is a change of the map to conform with the agreement made with the Forest Service and the Fish and Wildlife Division and the State of Utah, and it is agreed to by all parties.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Utah [Mr. NIELSON] to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The amendment to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Utah?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL SPECIAL OPERATIONS AGENCY ACT

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Armed Services be discharged from the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 5109) to establish a National Special Operations Agency within the Department of Defense to have unified responsibility for all special operations forces and activities within the Department, and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will not object, but I yield to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL] for the purpose of explaining this request.

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

This bill was passed as a part of the Defense authorization bill on August 15. It simply reorganized the special operations forces, an extension of the proposal offered by the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. NICHOLS] on the Defense reorganization bill.

Mr. SPENCE. Mr. Speaker, I support my colleague, the gentleman from Virginia, and I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

H.R. 5109

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "National Special Operations Agency Act".

SEC. 2. ESTABLISHMENT OF NATIONAL SPECIAL OPERATIONS AGENCY.

(a) AGENCY CHARTER.—Chapter 8 of title 10, United States Code, is amended—

(1) by redesignating section 191 as section 192; and

(2) by inserting after the table of sections the following new section:

"§ 191. National Special Operations Agency

"(a) ESTABLISHMENT.—(1) There is hereby established in the Department of Defense the National Special Operations Agency (hereinafter in this section referred to as the 'Agency'). The head of the Agency shall be a Director, who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate. The Director may not be an officer of the armed forces on the active-duty list.

"(2) The Director reports directly to the Secretary of Defense and has rank in the Department of Defense equivalent to that of an Assistant Secretary of Defense. The Director is the principal adviser to the Secretary of Defense and the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff for all matters pertaining to special operations forces and activities.

"(b) AUTHORITY OF DIRECTOR.—Subject to the authority, direction, and control of the President and the Secretary of Defense, the Director—

"(1) shall exercise command and operational control of all special operations forces (including reserve component forces) of the Department of Defense (other than those forces assigned or allocated to a unified combatant command); and

"(2) shall be responsible for—

"(A) all training, exercises, plans, and doctrine of the Department of Defense relating to special operations, including professional military education and preparation for joint staff assignments; and

"(B) all special operations activities (including special operations missions) assigned to elements of the Department of Defense by the President or Secretary of Defense.

"(c) DEPUTY DIRECTORS.—(1) There shall be not less than three Deputy Directors of the Agency. The Deputy Directors shall include—

"(A) a Deputy Director for Policy, who shall be a civilian;

"(B) a Deputy Director for Programs, who may be a civilian or an officer on the active-duty list; and

"(C) a Deputy Director for Operations, who shall be an officer on the active-duty list and who shall serve in such position in a grade above major general or rear admiral, if appointed to such grade by the President for service in such position under section 601 of this title.

"(2) Deputy Directors shall be selected by the Director, except that officers on the active-duty list shall be selected by the Director in accordance with procedures approved by the Secretary of Defense.

"(d) ASSIGNED FORCES.—(1) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Secretary of Defense shall provide that all special operations forces shall be assigned to the Agency. The Secretary may assign or allocate such forces from the Agency to a combatant command.

"(2) Forces assigned to the Agency shall be organized as the Joint Special Operations Command. The Deputy Director for Operations of the Agency shall be the commander of the Joint Special Operations Command.

"(e) THEATER SPECIAL OPERATIONS FORCES.—(1) The director shall assign to each unified combatant command an officer to serve as the theater special operations commander. Such officer shall also be the liaison of the Agency to the commander of the command. The theater special operations commander assigned to a unified combatant command is under the command of the commander of that command, and the assignment of an officer to a position as theater special operations commander is subject to the approval of the commander of the command.

"(2) The commander of a unified combatant command exercises command and operation control of special operations forces assigned or allocated to that command. Except in the case of elements of the Navy assigned to fleet operations, such operational control shall be exercised through the theater special operations commander.

"(f) BUDGET MATTERS.—(1) The Secretary of Defense shall provide that the budget justification documents of the Department of Defense for any fiscal year shall be prepared so that the presentation of major force programs in those documents sets out funding for all activities and elements of the Agency as a separate major force program category.

"(2) The responsibility for preparation, justification, and execution of budgets for the Agency shall be vested solely in the Director. The Director shall carry out such functions in accordance with guidance furnished by the Secretary of Defense and, in carrying out such functions, shall consider the views and recommendations of the commanders of the combatant commands.

"(g) PERSONNEL.—(1) The Director shall have the authority to select, train, and assign military and civilian personnel of the Agency (including personnel of forces assigned to the Agency).

"(2) The Secretary of Defense may by regulation establish a personnel system for civilian personnel of the Agency. The Secretary may make applicable to such system any of the provisions of chapter 83 of this title (relating to Defense Intelligence Agency civilian personnel).

"(h) UNAUTHORIZED ACTIVITIES.—This section does not constitute authority to conduct any activity which, if carried out as an intelligence activity by the Department of Defense, would require—

"(1) a finding under section 662 of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2422); or

"(2) a notice to the intelligence committees under section 501(a)(1) of the National Security Act of 1947 (50 U.S.C. 413).

"(i) REGULATIONS.—The Secretary of Defense shall prescribe regulations for the activities of the Agency. Those regulations shall include provisions authorizing the Director to provide for operational security of special operations forces and activities. The regulations may not authorize the Agency to engage in clandestine foreign intelligence collection or (except in time of war) in covert action activities.

"(j) SPECIAL OPERATIONS FORCES DEFINED.—(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the term 'special operations forces', for the purposes of this section, means those forces of the armed forces that—

"(A) are identified as core forces or as augmenting forces in the Joint Chiefs of Staff Joint Strategic Capabilities Plan, Annex E, dated December 17, 1985;

"(B) are described in the Terms of Reference and Conceptual Operations Plan for the Joint Special Operations Command, as in effect on April 1, 1986; or

"(C) are designated as special operations forces by the Secretary of Defense.

"(2) Subject to paragraph (3), the term 'special operations forces' does not include forces identified, described, or designated under paragraph (1) that the Director (in conjunction with the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff) determines—

"(A) are augmenting forces (rather than core forces); and

"(B) are not necessary to the performance of nonpriority special operations activities.

"(3) When required by the Director, forces described in paragraph (2)—

"(A) shall immediately be assigned or otherwise made available to the Director; and

"(B) shall be considered to be special operations forces for the purposes of this section. The Secretary of Defense shall ensure that this paragraph is implemented so as to give the Director clear and unambiguous authority under the preceding sentence.

"(k) SPECIAL OPERATIONS ACTIVITIES DEFINED.—In this section, the term 'special operations activities' includes each of the following insofar as it relates to special operations:

"(1) Direct action.
"(2) Strategic reconnaissance.
"(3) Unconventional warfare.
"(4) Foreign internal defense.
"(5) Civil affairs.
"(6) Psychological operations.
"(7) Counterterrorism.
"(8) Drug interdiction (including coordination with other Government agencies).
"(9) Humanitarian assistance.
"(10) Theater search and rescue.
"(11) Such other matters as may be specified by the President or Secretary of Defense.".

(b) CLERICAL AMENDMENTS.—The table of sections at the beginning of such chapter is amended—

(1) by redesignating the item relating to section 191 to conform to the redesignation made by paragraph (1)(A); and

(2) by inserting before such item the following new item:

"191. National Special Operations Agency.".

SEC. 3. IMPLEMENTATION.

(a) DIRECTOR.—The nomination of an individual for appointment as Director of the National Special Operations Agency shall be made by the President not later than 30 days after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(b) AGENCY.—The establishment of the National Special Operations Agency, including the assignment of forces to the Agency, shall be completed not later than six months after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(c) INITIAL FUNDING.—The Secretary of Defense may spend unobligated funds appropriated to the Department of Defense for fiscal years before fiscal year 1987 in such sums as necessary in order to carry out this section and section 191 of title 10, United States Code, as added by section 2.

(d) PERSONNEL.—The Secretary of Defense shall provide that the initial assignment of personnel to the Agency (including military and civilian personnel) shall, to the maximum extent practicable, be made from among personnel assigned to the headquarters staffs of the Department of Defense, military departments, and military services (including the Joint Staff) whose functions are rendered redundant by the establishment of the Agency.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. DANIEL

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 6, strike out lines 1 through 5.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. DANIEL].

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Virginia?

There was no objection.

PRESIDENT'S SPEECH ON DRUGS

(Mr. RICHARDSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, the President's statement on drug abuse was eloquent and persuasive, but it lacked specifics and necessary commitment in resources to do the job. We cannot talk the drug problem away. Our law enforcement officials cannot shoot down low-flying aircraft carrying cocaine as it crosses our borders. They need electronic equipment, training, and more people to do the job.

Let us emphasize law enforcement to catch drug traffickers rather than spending needlessly on drug-testing programs for Federal employees, a threat to the civil liberties of many individuals. In addition, the process is scientifically flawed.

There is no question we must change attitudes about drugs in this country. But that attitudinal change must be accompanied by stiffer penalties for drug traffickers, better international cooperation, more education, and more resources for our law enforcement officials.

To that skeptical audience that always asks how much will it cost, I say, whatever it takes.

□ 1220

Mr. Speaker, the $1.5 billion House bill is a positive start. Anything less in terms of resources and commitment strikes me as just political rhetoric.

THE PARENTAL AND MEDICAL LEAVE ACT WOULD HAVE ADVERSE EFFECTS ON SMALL BUSINESS

(Mr. COMBEST asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. COMBEST. Mr. Speaker, this House will soon be asked to consider a bill that would wreak havoc on our Nation's small businesses by imposing federally mandated employee benefits on any employer of 15 or more employees.

H.R. 4300, the Parental and Medical Leave Act of 1986, provides leave for a child's birth, adoption, or serious illness and also to employee's with a serious health condition. Although this leave is unpaid, the bill would set up a commission to study paid leave. Small businesses must still incur the cost of lost manhours and pay for any health benefits employees were eligible to receive.

During the White House conference on small business, small business leaders from my district and every other district represented in this body decided that federally mandated benefits were the No. 2 threat to small business, the insurance liability crisis being No. 1.

Most small businesses have neither the resources nor the flexibility to be able to afford the loss of employees for months at a time, and I ask Members to consider the adverse effects this legislation will have on small businesses in their districts.

I believe employers should be held responsible for recognizing the importance of their employee's family life, and they should not penalize employees for taking time off for maternity leave or caring for a sick child. This responsibility, however, should not be convoluted into an inflexible congressionally mandated benefit for all employees that would be imposed regardless of circumstance.

I ask you to join me in opposing this bill.

AMERICAN FARMERS AND FARM WORKERS ARE PAYING THE PRICE FOR REVITALIZING LATIN AMERICA

(Mr. DURBIN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, as Congress grapples with the challenge of the arm crisis and the loss of American jobs, the recent visit by Brazilian President Jose Sarney was especially timely.

Thanks to a decision by the United States in 1983 to protect major American banks from default by Brazil and other Latin American debtor nations, President Sarney last week rightfully claimed economic recovery in his country; but this administration's Latin American strategy had its losers as well.

As Brazil dramatically increased its exports, reduced its imports, and erected trade barriers against worldwide products including American goods, the United States economy in general, and the American farmers and workers in particular paid the price. Falling commodity prices, declining U.S. farm exports, agricultural overproduction and U.S. farm bank failures are the Farm Belt legacy of this administration's strategy to revitalize Latin America.

Brazil's trade barriers to United States products are stark evidence that many American workers have given their jobs so that Brazil can enjoy some prosperity.

As we recall President Sarney's praise of our friendship, we should not forget that the American people still bear the burden of solving the problems created by this administration's rescue of Brazil and its American creditor banks.

IS DRUG USE IN AMERICA REALLY A SURPRISE?

(Mr. DANNEMEYER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, on Sunday night President and Mrs. Reagan delivered a very important message on the seriousness of drugs in our society. Last week Congress overwhelmingly passed a tough comprehensive law which hopefully will slow down the availability of drugs in our country.

The question we Americans should ask ourselves is should we really be surprised by the extensive use of drugs in America?

In the last generation in our public schools, our young people have received mixed signals on whether we have moral absolutes in our society. Our court system has driven prayer out of our schools and, incredible as it seems, the Ten Commandments which are the basis of our Judeo-Christian heritage.

Do we really expect kids to say no to drugs, or no to anything, harmful as it may be, when all we have furnished them in the way of a moral compass or standard to judge anything is a variable one?

Do we really expect the American people to live by a fixed standard of yes or no on drugs when the U.S. Government, since 1971, has itself adopted a variable standard for so basic a commodity as the U.S. dollar?

REVIEWING OFFICIAL CALLS BY INSTANT REPLAY

(Mrs. SCHROEDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I clearly am not part of the "jockocracy," but I am one of the rabid sports fans in America, and I probably represent a city with more rabid sports fans than any other in America.

Last night I must say our patience was really tried. We heard that there was going to be this new football rule; a wonderful new rule so that if the officials made a mistake, by instant replay it could be changed if they found out the call was wrong.

All of us who watched that game said "Oops, what happened?" The call was clearly wrong; the replay showed it was wrong; the officials viewing the replay said it's wrong; and yet Denver did not get the score.

We Denverites do not understand the fairness of that kind of rule, and we certainly hope they straightened it out before the next game. Thank goodness the Broncos won anyway, and I also must say thank goodness, the game was not held in Denver, because our south stand fans would have gone up and changed the score in the scoreboard by themselves.

We understand justice out West; we do not understand those kinds of rules. They can stop the play for commercials but not for corrections.

TAKE THE "TAX REFORM PLEDGE"

(Mr. PETRI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, Congress is getting ready to pass a major tax reform bill. But even before the bill has been voted into law, numerous protax, prospending interests have started working for tax increases—both through higher rates, and a scaling back in the number of remaining deductions and credits.

Tax reform must not be allowed to become a tax increase in disguise.

Accordingly, I am making a tax reform pledge as follows:

I, Thomas E. Petri, pledge to the taxpayers of the Sixth District of the State of Wisconsin and to the American people that I will—

One, oppose any effort to increase marginal tax rates from the 15 and 28 percent rates for individuals and the 34 percent top rate for businesses; and

Two, oppose any further reduction or elimination of deductions and credits, unless matched dollar for dollar by further reducing tax rates.

Mr. Speaker, I have taken the tax reform pledge, and I urge my colleagues to do likewise.

FRANCE'S NEW VISA RESTRICTIONS FOR AMERICAN TOURISTS IS THE WRONG WAY TO FIGHT TERRORISM

(Mr. LANTOS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, the focus of Arab terrorism has shifted from Karachi and Istanbul to Paris; and the hearts of all of us go out to the innocent men, women, and children in the City of Lights who have been killed and maimed by terrorism in the last few days.

At the same time, Mr. Speaker, we are appalled that the French Government is about to impose visa restrictions on American tourists and other travelers to France. That is the wrong way to fight terrorism.

It was bad enough when the French Government denied our aircraft the right of overflight when we moved on Libya. This adds insult to injury.

Today I am introducing a resolution calling on the Government of France to reconsider its decision and to allow Americans to visit France without visas. The previous invasions of Americans took place in World Wars I and II, when we liberated France.

It ill-behooves the Government of France to impose visa restrictions on American citizens in a misguided attempt to fight terrorism.

THE FAMILY LEAVE ACT—AN INSUFFICIENTLY CONSIDERED PIECE OF LEGISLATION

(Mr. TAUKE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TAUKE. Mr. Speaker, Members of the House, within the next few days there will be an attempt to bring to the floor a bill known as the Family Leave Act. This legislation is well-intentioned, but we are not prepared to consider this legislation yet in Congress.

Although there have been hearings held on this issue, the only people invited to the hearings were those who supported the legislation. There was no effort to gather any evidence from the other side.

As a result, we have legislation which is well-intentioned but is very poor. I think that it would be inappropriate for us, at this late hour, to take up this bill.

Let me just mention two points. First, this measure establishes a new precedent in labor-management relations. For the first time we will be mandating employee benefits.

Second, this legislation does not help those whom it alleges to assist. Instead, it provides assistance to what are commonly known as the Yuppies in our society, but not those who most need the kind of assistance that this bill purports to give.

I urge the leaders of the House to reject consideration of this bill in this session of Congress.

CONGRESS' FUNDING OF LAW ENFORCEMENT FOR DRUG ABATEMENT PURPOSES

(Mr. WRIGHT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. WRIGHT. Mr. Speaker, my purpose in taking this time is simply to set the record straight with respect to the amounts of money appropriated by Congress for the purpose of law enforcement funding and particularly funding of law enforcement relating to abatement of drug abuse.

□ 1230

Yesterday morning on the "CBS News," the Attorney General, Mr. Meese, made the statement that we would make a good beginning in our war on drugs if Congress would only give what the administration had asked in the way of money for law enforcement. The somewhat gratuitous implication was that Congress had failed to do so.

Now, the fact is that from the day the Reagan administration took office until today, 5½ years, the Congress has provided exactly $953 million more for Federal law enforcement than the Reagan administration has requested, and in every single year of this administration Congress has provided more money for Federal law enforcement activities than the administration has asked.

I present a table provided to me by the staff of the House Committee on the Budget.

FEDERAL LAW ENFORCEMENT

	1982	1983	1984	1985	1986	1982–86
Congress	2.658	3.061	3.433	3.709	3.738	.....
Reagan request	2.470	2.671	3.348	3.505	3.652	.....
Total	188	390	85	204	86	[1] 953

[1] In millions of dollars.

Increases over President's budget request by House action law enforcement activities in Treasury bill

	Millions
Federal Law Enforcement Training Center	+$8.6
Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms	+12.0
U.S. Customs Service	+115.5
Internal Revenue Service	+150.0
U.S. Secret Service	+9.7
Total	+295.8

In this next fiscal year, fiscal year 1987, for which appropriation are currently being acted upon, the House has passed the Treasury Department appropriation bill already. This has not passed the other body, but the House-passed bill provided funding for law enforcement activities in the Federal Law Enforcement Training Center, the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms, U.S. Customs Service, Internal Revenue Service, and the U.S. Secret Service to a total of almost $296 million more than the President had requested in this year's budget.

So that should set the record straight, not that we want to quarrel about it but rather that the Congress not be made the butt of unfair invidious comparisons.

The House has acted in a bipartisan manner to attack this grave problem. The other body likely will do the same, and I urge all of my colleagues to continue in that same spirit. At the same time I urge those in the administration not to try to cast unfair aspersions upon the Congress.

A TRIBUTE TO SENATOR JAKE GARN

(Mr. NIELSON of Utah asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take a moment today to wish my friend and colleague, Senator JAKE GARN, a speedy recovery.

Senator GARN and I are natives of the same town, Richfield, UT, perhaps the most over represented community in the world. JAKE served as a city councilman and mayor prior to his election in 1974. A former test pilot JAKE is a brigadier general in the Utah National Guard.

JAKE has been an inspiration to us all. He has experienced many personal trials and successes, including the death of his first wife in an automobile accident. As a nation we watched him triumph as he became the first Senator to fly aboard the space shuttle, and again as he suffered through the tragic loss of many dear friends aboard the space shuttle Challenger last winter.

This week he has once again demonstrated his courage and sterling character.

JAKE is now in the Georgetown University Hospital after an operation to donate his kidney to his daughter, Susan, who has been suffering complications of diabetes. Of all the many heroic things JAKE has done, to me, this outshines them all. His courage and unselfish love for his daughter are truly inspirational. Both father and daughter are doing very well, I'm happy to report.

I just spent some time with JAKE in Utah and as always was impressed with his abilities and willingness to work hard on his constituents' behalf. JAKE told me that originally, the operation was scheduled for November after the legislative session and elections were over. But when it became clear that the transplant operation was needed more urgently, JAKE set aside his many other commitments to come to his daughter's aid.

Susan must have inherited her father's courage and tenacity because she has suffered a great deal in combating her diabetes. She's a girl with a lot of gumption.

I wish both JAKE and Susan the best and pray for them God's blessings and a speedy recovery.

VETERANS FAST FOR LIFE

(Mr. DOWNEY of New York asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DOWNEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, as I speak today, four men are fasting outside the Capitol. Who are these men?

They are veterans. Duncan Murphy, Brian Willson, Charlie Liteky, and George Mizo. One served in the Second World War, and the others served in Vietnam. One of these men, Charlie Liteky, received the Congressional Medal of Honor for his heroic effort in rescuing 20 men under fire.

Why are these men fasting?

They are fasting as an expression of their desire to bring an end to the war in Nicaragua. Three of these men have traveled there. They have seen with their own eyes the pain and the suffering of the people of Nicaragua.

They intend that their fast call attention to the effect of the $100 million in aid for the Contras. They believe that the administration does not act in the interests of the American people when it prosecutes a war against the people of Nicaragua. By conducting their fast here in Washington, they hope to lead us to think about the consequences of congressional action to fund the Contras.

Mr. Speaker, I have met these men and talked with them. I was deeply moved by their commitment to lay their own lives on the line in an open-ended fast to try to save lives of others in Central America. I urge my colleagues to meet these men, to listen to what they have to say and to reconsider what we are about to do in the name of the American people in Nicaragua. Their voice may be only a whisper now, but it will become a shout heard round the world as their fast continues.

ORPHANS AND FOSTER CARE YOUTH MONTH

(Mr. WORTLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WORTLEY. Mr. Speaker, today, I am introducing a joint resolution which calls upon the Congress to designate the coming month of October as "Orphans and Foster Care Youth Month," and for the President to issue a proclamation that calls upon the people of the United States to observe that month with appropriate activities.

It is most fitting that the coming month bear this designation for it marks the fifth anniversary of the founding of the national Orphan Foundation, headquartered here in our Nation's Capital.

The national, nonprofit Orphan Foundation epitomizes what is best about the tradition of volunteerism in America. The foundation pairs adult volunteers with orphans and foster care youth who confront the prospect of independent living without the support of natural parents. The orphans are given counsel on how to find a job, to manage their finances, and to avoid drug abuse.

The foundation maintains an emergency aid fund. Each year, it offers incentives and motivation to over 130,000 orphans to pursue college educations, and provides college scholarships to orphans in 6 regions of our country. These regions encompass all 50 States and the District of Columbia.

The founder and president of the Orphan Foundation is Mr. Joseph Rivers, who works full time at the Department of Agriculture. He grew up in Syracuse, NY, in a succession of orphanages and foster care homes. On his own, he managed to win a B.A. at LeMoyne College in New York State and a B.S. at Morgan State in Baltimore. In short, Joseph Rivers knows what it is to struggle as an orphan. He knows, firsthand, how volunteer assistance can change the lives of abandoned children and young men and women without parents.

Mr. Speaker, I urge my colleagues to support my resolution to recognize the laudable efforts of the Orphans Foundation and to bring public attention to worthy volunteer activities for orphans throughout America.

PRESIDENT SHOULD PROTECT AMERICANS FLYING OVERSEAS

(Mr. GLICKMAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks).

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, the hijacking in Karachi last week underscores the urgency of intensifying efforts to bolster security for American air travelers overseas. To prod action in this direction, I offered an amendment to the defense authorization bill which was accepted, which urges the President as Commander in Chief to utilize U.S. troops, with the cooperation of foreign governments, to protect U.S. citizens and air carriers at airports outside the United States. Specifically, this amendment would have, if utilized, allowed U.S. troops to guard the Pan American plane on the tarmac of the Karachi airport and probably would have prevented the attempted hijacking.

We need to find a better system to enhance security for our airlines as they travel around the world. They carry our constituents and U.S. passengers on them. My amendment offers a cost-effective tool to accomplish this goal. We have in place throughout western Europe and elsewhere over 300,000 of the world's finest security forces, the American military.

Why not use a few of our American forces to prevent a catastrophe rather than relying on our Delta Force to minimize a tragedy once occurred?

I say let us put these troops on the front line in airports around the world where our American carriers fly, in a battle against terrorism so that all of us can once again feel that we can travel without fear.

I would hope that our conferees in the defense authorization bill would keep this provision in this bill and that the President would follow the instruction of the Congress.

LET'S PUT THE BLAME WHERE IT BELONGS

(Mr. LUNGREN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LUNGREN. Mr. Speaker, the gentlewoman from Colorado referred to something which occurred on the national network TV last night, and that was where the instant replay was supposed to work. Everybody saw what happened. The problem was not that the people up in the booth made a mistake in reviewing the particular play, the problem was they did not get the information down in time. They ran out of time. That is why the play was not corrected.

Unfortunately, that is probably the best metaphor that I can come up with to describe what is happening on the immigration bill. There is a very controversial aspect of it called the Schumer amendment.

Now some of us are being told that even though we have some severe concerns about the Schumer amendment, there is no time to deal with it. We will have to accept it or we will be responsible for stopping immigration reform in this Congress.

Mr. Speaker, that is total nonsense. As you know, Mr. Speaker, and as you have told us on many occasions, the Speaker's right is the right to tell us when legislation will come to the floor.

We have had 2 long years to deal with this bill, and now to tell us that we do not have time to deal with a controversial aspect of it or we are responsible for not getting an immigration bill through is worse than what happened last night.

After all, what happened last night was only a game; immigration reforms deal with this country and its people.

TRIBUTE TO DR. FREEMAN CARY

(Mr. DANIEL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DANIEL. Mr. Speaker, yesterday Adm. Freeman Cary concluded his service as an active duty physician.

For 15 years he served the House and the other body well as the physician. Dr. Cary was not only a cardiologist well known throughout the world but also an excellent teacher. He was conscientious and caring in looking after the people of this House and this Congress. He was a personal friend and one who beat me on the golf course most of the time.

I wish he and his wife Sarah much happiness in their new endeavors.

PARENTAL LEAVE: THE REAL ISSUES AT HAND

(Mr. DELAY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DELAY. Mr. Speaker, once again we are hearing the rumblings of social engineering stirring within the walls of Congress. Some Members are not happy because they can't snap their fingers and produce changes that they feel have to happen—right now. Of course I'm talking about the so-called parental leave bill, which I would rather refer to as the yuppie bill.

Let's be honest here—will 18 weeks away from work magically make a child grow up to be a model citizen? Will 18 weeks away from work—and incidentally that's within the first 2 years of having a child—will 18 weeks bond a parent to a child—of course not. Will 18 weeks have no effect on American business? Of course it will effect business. Do we know how it will effect business—no, but some Members want to do it anyway to try to achieve their social agenda.

Let's open our eyes—let's realize that Congress cannot fix all the perceived social ills. Where we intrude we usually find a way to make the situation worse. Let's have faith in the people of our great Nation—they can spot when things are not right and they will take steps—as they have through our history—to right the wrongs. H.R. 4300 is the wrong bill at the wrong time. If we bring this to the floor, let's give it what it deserves—a resounding defeat.

CAPITOL HILL TENNIS CLUB, ONE OF THE BEST TEAMS IN WASHINGTON, DC

(Mr. MONTGOMERY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, my colleague PAT SCHROEDER talked about a sports team in her 1-minute speech this morning.

I would like to talk about a sports team, the Capitol Hill Tennis Club, which operates here on the Hill.

Mr. Speaker, this team is made up of Members of the Congress and staff members who serve in the House and in the Senate.

This club does not interfere with work time. We play tennis early in the morning, and we play on Saturdays at Haines Point.

I am proud to announce, Mr. Speaker, that for the first time in a number of years the Capitol Hills Tennis Club has won a trophy as being one of the best teams in Washington, DC.

We congratulate our team, all of us are proud of their victory and the credit they have brought the Capitol Hill Tennis Club.

I am listing our team players who have brought this recognition to Capitol Hill:

Dennis Holland, Bill Schmidt, Andrew Vermilye, Jim Feeley, Tim McDulin, Bobby Okun, Peter Gold, Alex Wohl, Kerry Knott, Alan Kahan, Joe Reeder, and Peter Lu, coach.

MANDATORY DRUG TESTING: UNCONSTITUTIONAL AND INACCURATE

(Mr. SCHUMER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, there is good reason to resist the headlong rush into mandatory nationwide drug testing. The tests are devastatingly inaccurate.

About 1 in 20 people tested who never use drugs at all will come out positive and will have an undeserved scarlet letter forever attached to their names. Then there is the Constitution. Are people innocent until proven guilty? And they have been in America for 200 years.

Or, when it comes to drugs, are they now guilty until proven innocent?

The President was at least aware of some of these problems when he yesterday announced his drug testing plan. He rejected his commission's call for mandatory testing of all Federal employees and limited testing to those in sensitive positions, perhaps only 1 out of 6 Federal employees. His guidelines at least would allow agency heads to require the far more accurate but more expensive gaseous diffusion test than the standard inaccurate $15 urinalysis test.

□ 1245

But, Mr. Speaker, there is no such restraint in the private sector. While we focus on testing for Federal employees, much larger drug testing programs are quietly but surely being created throughout the private sector. These plans are more intrusive, involve millions of Americans, and do far more damage to the Constitution and to people's reputations than anything the White House envisions for Federal workers.

Just recently, General Electric and Kodak unveiled plans to test every applicant.

Today I am introducing legislation to ensure that the proper cautions are in place. My bill will limit public and private sector drug testing to those whose work involves public health and safety and national security. It will require that public and private employers confirm every positive test with a second, more accurate confirmation test.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House of Representatives:

WASHINGTON, DC, September 15, 1986.

H.R. 3443. An act to designate the closed basin conveyance channel of the closed basin division, San Luis Valley project, Colorado, as the "Franklin Eddy Canal"; and

H.R. 4868. An act to prohibit loans to, other investments in, and certain other activities with respect to, South Africa, and for other purposes.

COMMUNICATION FROM THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Clerk of the House of Representatives:

WASHINGTON, DC, September 15, 1986.
Hon. THOMAS P. O'NEILL, Jr.,
The Speaker, House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Pursuant to the permission granted in Clause 5, Rule III of the Rules of the U.S. House of Representatives, I have the honor to transmit a sealed envelope received from the White House at 12:45 p.m., on Monday, September 15, 1986 and said to contain a message from the President wherein he transmits legislation entitled, "Drug-Free America Act of 1986".

With kind regards, I am,
Sincerely,

BENJAMIN J. GUTHRIE,
Clerk, House of Representatives.

DRUG FREE AMERICA ACT OF 1986—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES (H. DOC. NO. 99-266)

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following message from the President of the United States; which was read and, together with the accompanying papers, without objection, referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union and ordered to be printed:

(For message, see proceedings of the Senate of yesterday, Monday, September 15, 1986, at page 23336.)

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5 of rule I, the Chair announces that he will postpone further proceedings today on each motion to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote or the yeas and nays are ordered, or on which the vote is objected to under clause 4 of rule 15.

Such rollcall votes, if postponed, will be taken after completion of the conference report on H.R 4421.

SENATE CONFIRMATION OF COMMISSIONER OF FOOD AND DRUGS

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4754) to amend the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act to require the appointment of the Commissioner of Food and Drugs to be subject to Senate confirmation.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 4754

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER.

Chapter IX of the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act is amended by adding at the end the following:

"FOOD AND DRUG ADMINISTRATION

"SEC. 903. The Food and Drug Administration is an agency of the Department of Health and Human Services.

"APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONER

"SEC. 904. The Food and Drug Administration shall be headed by a Commissioner of Food and Drugs who shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.".

SEC. 2. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendment made by section 1 shall apply to appointments of Commissioners of Food and Drugs made after the date of the enactment of this Act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADIGAN] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN].

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this legislation is simple and straight forward. It was reported by the Energy and Commerce Committee with broad bipartisan support.

The bill would subject the Commissioner of the Food and Drug Administration [FDA] to Presidential appointment and Senate confirmation.

The FDA is an agency of the Department of Health and Human Services. When it comes to protecting the public health, there is no more important position than Commissioner of the FDA.

The responsibilities of the office are great. The FDA represents the only line of defense between the public and unhealthy foods, unsafe drugs, ineffective medical devices or unfounded health claims.

Ironically the FDA Commissioner is alone among major regulatory agency heads not subject to Presidential appointment or Senate confirmation. The head of every major Federal health and safety agency is currently subject to Presidential appointment and Senate confirmation. The list of agencies include the: Federal Aviation Administration, Environmental Protection Agency, Occupational Safety and Health Administration, National Highway Traffic and Safety Administration, Consumer Product Safety Commisison, and the Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

Furthermore, within the Department of Health and Human Services, the appointment of a number of individual agency heads requires Senate confirmation. In addition to the Secretary, these offices include the: Director, National Institutes of Health; Administrator, Alcohol, Drug Abuse and Mental Health Administration; Director, National Cancer Institute, and the Surgeon General, Public Health Service.

Mr. Speaker, Senate confirmation is a constructive and worthwhile process. It is a procedure that should apply to persons appointed to serve as Commissioner of the FDA.

I urge support for the legislation.

Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5754, legislation that will require the Commissioner of Food and Drugs to be subject to Presidential appointment and Senate confirmation. The role of the Commissioner is as important or more important than that of other members of the executive branch responsible for protecting our health and safety who are currently required to be confirmed by the Senate. These include the Commissioners of the Consumer Product Safety Commission, the National Highway Traffic Safety Administration, and the Federal Mine Safety and Health Review Commission.

I want to emphasize that this legislation was not precipitated because of Congress' concern about the quality of recent FDA Commissioners. We are satisfied with the quality of the incumbent Commissioner and do not expect any problems with future appointees.

I know of no opposition to this legislation and urge its adoption.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4754.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AUTHORIZATIONS FOR CHILDHOOD IMMUNIZATIONS

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 5230) to amend the Public Health Service Act to extend the program of childhood vaccinations and to require the Secretary of Health and Human Services to maintain a 6-month stockpile of vaccines, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 5230

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. EXTENSION OF PROGRAM.

Section 317(j)(1) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 247b(j)(1)) is amended by striking out all after "1986," and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "and $78,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987.".

SEC 2. STOCKPILE.

The Secretary of Health and Human Services, acting through the Centers for Disease Control, shall acquire and maintain an amount of vaccines sufficient to provide vaccinations over a 6-month period. There is authorized to be appropriated to carry out this section $6,000,000 for fiscal year 1987.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADIGAN] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN].

□ 1255

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this legislation, is to increase the amount of funds available to help States purchase vaccines that are used to prevent childhood diseases such as polio and measles. Such increases in authority are needed to respond to the rise in vaccine prices that continues to force States to cut back on immunization programs and to reduce the number of children being served. In the last 2 years alone, we have seen the price that CDC pays for some vaccines soar from $2 per dose to $12 per dose. That is an increase of 500 percent. H.R. 5230 would help alleviate this problem by authorizing an additional $13 million in fiscal year 1987 for the CDC program.

H.R. 5230 also establishes a specific authority under which the Secretary of HHS is required to maintain a 6 month supply of vaccines. According to CDC, such a stockpile is necessary to ensure that in times of market shortages, there is always an adequate supply of vaccines available to protect our children against preventable diseases. H.R. 5230 would authorize $6 million in fiscal year 1987 to maintain such a stockpile.

It should be noted that this legislation is limited to an increase in authorization levels for only fiscal year 1987. Given the uncertainty of vaccine prices and the vaccine market, the Committee on Energy and Commerce thought it best to address this year's needs alone and to revisit the issue again next year.

H.R. 5230 is supported by the ranking Republican member of the Subcommittee on Health and the Environment, Mr. MADIGAN. It was reported out of the full Energy and Commerce Committee without debate and on a voice vote. The administration does not oppose the legislation. A similar bill has been reported out of the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee and is scheduled to go to the Senate floor shortly.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation involves an issue of great importance and urgency for our children and for the States. I ask Members to suspend the rules and pass H.R. 5230.

Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5230, legislation that will increase the authorization for grants to States for the purchase of childhood vaccines.

H.R. 5230 increases the authorization for grants to purchase vaccines for fiscal year 1987 from $65 million, a figure adopted several years ago, to $78 million. This authorization increase is necessary because the costs of liability insurance have increased dramatically over the last several years. This has occurred because the incidence of suits filed and the size of awards and settlements involving vaccines have increased significantly.

While I am hopeful that the gentleman from California and I can reach agreement on a long-term solution to the vaccine injury problem, there is a need to address the short-term financing problem. H.R. 5230 does that.

H.R. 5230 also authorizes $6 million for the establishment of a stockpile of vaccines for emergencies. Such an emergency occurred in December 1984, when pediatricians were unable to obtain DPT vaccine through private sources and had to defer the administration of vaccines to older infants until the shortage abated.

I know of no opposition to this legislation and urge its adoption.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5230, legislation which increases authorization for grants to States for purchase of vaccines for children who cannot obtain them through private sources. This measure increases the authorization for fiscal year 1987, from $65 to $78 million and additionally authorizes $6 million in fiscal year 1987 for the Department of Health and Human Services to acquire and maintain a 6-month stockpile of vaccines.

I commend the gentleman from California, the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Health and the Environment, Mr. WAXMAN, for his continued work on behalf of those who suffer from childhood diseases and for his effort in bringing this measure to the floor. I also thank the gentleman from Illinois, the ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Health and the Environment Mr. MADIGAN, for his generous efforts with regard to this legislation.

As our children return to school, we are faced with the spectre of increasing difficulty in financing their vaccination. In an effort to guard against a range of dangerous childhood diseases, our children are mandatorily vaccinated before entering school. There has been a modest increase in the U.S. birth rate which has, in turn, precipitated a modest increase in the funding required under this program to purchase such vaccination.

However, our manufacturers have strewn a caveat across our paths, as vaccine liability claims and insurance have made such manufacture prohibitively expensive. The price of two major vaccines have increased precipitously. The polio vaccine price nearly doubled between 1984 and 1985, and the price of the diptheria-pertussis-tetanus [DPT] vaccine has quadrupled since 1984.

These increases, concomitant to expanding vaccine related liability, strongly indicate a required increase in authorization through H.R. 5230, lest we have our children exposed to the unnecessary and inhumane risks of childhood diseases which can be curbed only through adequate vaccination. These concerns strongly suggest that an increased Federal role be explored, which I am pleased to note are being addressed through the Energy and Commerce Committee.

Accordingly, I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting H.R. 5230 and demonstrating a firm commitment toward maintaining adequate safeguards against childhood diseases which, unless vaccinated against at acceptable manufacturing costs, threaten the very lives of our children.

Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 5230, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

ALCOHOL, DRUG ABUSE, AND MENTAL HEALTH AMENDMENTS OF 1986

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 5259) to amend the Public Health Service Act to revise the authorities of the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 5259

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE AND REFERENCE.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Amendments of 1986".

(b) REFERENCE.—Whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of the Public Health Service Act.

SEC. 2. TECHNICAL REVISION OF ADAMHA.

Section 501 (42 U.S.C. 290aa) is amended to read as follows:

"ALCOHOL, DRUG ABUSE, AND MENTAL HEALTH ADMINISTRATION

"SEC. 501. (a) The Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration is an agency of the Service.

"(b) The following national research institutes are agencies of the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration:

"(1) The National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism.

"(2) The National Institute on Drug Abuse.

"(3) The National Institute of Mental Health.

"(c)(1) The Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration shall be headed by an Administrator (hereinafter in this title referred to as the 'Administrator') who shall be appointed by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate.

"(2) The Administrator, with the approval of the Secretary, may appoint a Deputy Administrator and may employ and prescribe the functions of such officers and employees, including attorneys, as are necessary to administer the activities to be carried out through the Administration.

"(d) The Secretary, acting through the Administrator—

"(1) shall supervise the functions of the National Institute of Mental Health, the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism, and the National Institute on Drug Abuse in order to assure that the programs carried out through each such Institute receive appropriate and equitable support and that there is cooperation among the Institutes in the implementation of such programs; and

"(2) shall assure that research at or supported by the Alcohol, Drug Abuse and Mental Health Administration and each of its national research institutes is subject to review in accordance with section 507 and is in compliance with section 509.

"(e)(1) There shall be in the Administration an Associate Administrator for Prevention to whom the Administrator shall delegate the function of promoting the prevention research programs of the National Institute of Mental Health, the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism, and the National Institute on Drug Abuse and coordinating such programs between the Institutes and between the Institutes and other public and private entities.

"(2) The Administrator, acting through the Associate Administrator for Prevention, shall annually submit to the Congress a report describing the prevention activities (including preventive medicine and health promotion) undertaken by the Administration, the National Institute of Mental Health, the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism, and the National Institute on Drug Abuse. The report shall include a detailed statement of the expenditures made for the activities reported on and the personnel used in connection with such activities.

"(f) The Administrator shall establish a process for the prompt and appropriate response to information provided the Administrator respecting (1) scientific fraud in connection with projects for which funds have been made available under this title, and (2) incidences of violations of the rights of human subjects of research for which funds have been made available under this title. The process shall include procedures for the receiving of reports of such information from recipients of funds under this title and taking appropriate action with respect to such fraud and violations.

"(g) The Secretary, acting through the Administrator, shall make grants to schools of the health professions and schools of social work to support the training of students in such schools in the identification and treatment of alcohol and drug abuse. Grants under this subsection shall be made from funds available under this title and section 303.

"(h) To educate the public with respect to the health hazards of alcoholism, alcohol abuse, and drug abuse, the Administrator shall take such actions as may be necessary to ensure the widespread dissemination of current publications of the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism and the National Institute on Drug Abuse relating to the most recent research findings with respect to such health hazards.

"(i)(1) The Administrator may obtain (in accordance with section 3109 of title 5, United States Code, but without regard to the limitation in such section on the number of days or the period of service) the services of not more than 20 experts or consultants who have scientific or professional qualifications. Such experts and consultants shall be obtained for the Administration and for each of the research institutes under the Administration.

"(2)(A) Experts and consultants whose services are obtained under paragraph (1) shall be paid or reimbursed for their expenses associated with traveling to and from their assignment location in accordance with sections 5724, 5724a(a)(1), 5724a(a)(3), and 5726(c) of title 5, United States Code.

"(B) Expenses specified in subparagraph (A) may not be allowed in connection with the assignment of an expert or consultant whose services are obtained under paragraph (1), unless and until the expert or consultant agrees in writing to complete the entire period of assignment or one year, whichever is shorter, unless separated or reassigned for reasons beyond the control of the expert or consultant that are acceptable to the Secretary. If the expert or consultant violates the agreement, the money spent by the United States for the expenses specified in subparagraph (A) is recoverable from the expert or consultant as a debt of the United States. The Secretary may waive in whole or in part a right of recovery under this subparagraph.

"(j) The Administrator may, without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, and without regard to the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title, relating to classification and General Schedule pay rates, establish such technical and scientific peer review groups as are needed to carry out the requirements of section 507 and appoint and pay members of such groups, except that officers and employees of the United States shall not receive additional compensation for service as members of such groups. The Federal Advisory Committee Act shall not apply to the duration of a peer review group appointed under this subsection.

"(k)(1) The Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Advisory Board (hereinafter in this subsection referred to as the 'Board') shall—

"(A) periodically assess the national needs for alcoholism, alcohol abuse, drug abuse, and mental health services and the extent to which those needs are being met by State, local, and private programs and programs receiving funds under this title and part B of title XIX, and

"(B) provide advice to the Secretary and the Administrator respecting activities carried out under this title and part B of title XIX.

"(2)(A) The Board shall consist of 15 members appointed by the Secretary and such ex officio members from the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism, the National Institute on Drug Abuse, and the National Institute of Mental Health as the Secretary may designate. Of the members appointed to the Board, at least 6 members shall represent State and private, nonprofit providers of prevention and treatment services for alcoholism, alcohol abuse, drug abuse, and mental illness, at least 6 members shall be individuals with expertise in public education and prevention services for alcoholism, alcohol abuse, drug abuse, and mental illness, and at least 3 members shall be appointed from members of the general public who are knowledgeable about alcoholism, alcohol abuse, drug abuse, and mental illness.

"(B) The term of office of a member appointed to the Board is 4 years, except that of the members first appointed to the Board—

"(i) 5 shall serve for terms of 1 year,

"(ii) 5 shall serve for terms of 2 years,

"(iii) 5 shall serve for terms of 3 years, as designated by the Secretary at the time of appointment. Any member appointed to fill a vacancy occurring before the expiration of the term for which the predecessor of such member was appointed shall be appointed only for the remainder of such term. A member may serve after the expiration of the member's term until the successor of the member has taken office.

"(3)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), members of the Board shall (i) be paid not more than the daily equivalent of the annual rate of basic pay in effect for grade GS-18 of the General Schedule for each day (including traveltime) during which they are engaged in the actual performance of duties vested in the Board, and (ii) while away from their homes or regular places of business and while serving in the business of the Board, be entitled to receive transportation expenses as prescribed by section 5703 of title 5, United States Code.

"(B) Members of the Board who are full-time officers or employees of the United States shall receive no additional pay, allowances, or benefits by reason of their service on the Board.

"(4) The Board may appoint such staff personnel as the Board considers appropriate.

"(5) The Secretary shall designate the chairman of the Board.

"(6) The Board shall meet at least 3 times each calendar year.

"(7) The Board shall report annually to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Labor and Human Resources of the Senate on its activities during the prior year and shall include in such report such recommendations for legislation and administrative action as it deems appropriate.".

SEC. 3. NATIONAL INSTITUTE OF MENTAL HEALTH.

Section 504(c) (42 U.S.C. 290aa-3(c)) is amended by adding at the end the following: "Priority shall be given to programs for training and research on the mental health needs of the elderly."

SEC. 4. ADVISORY COUNCILS.

(a) AMENDMENT.—Part A of title V is amended by redesignating sections 505 and 506 as sections 506 and 507, respectively, and by adding after section 504 the following new section:

"ADVISORY COUNCILS

"SEC. 505. (a)(1) The Secretary shall appoint an advisory council for the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism, for the the National Institute on Drug Abuse, and for the National Institute of Mental Health. Each such advisory council shall advise, consult with, and make recommendations to the Secretary and the Director of the Institute for which it was appointed on matters related to the activities carried out by and through the Institute and the policies respecting such activities.

"(2) Each advisory council for a national research institute may recommend to the Secretary acceptance, in accordance with section 2101, of conditional gifts for study, investigation, or research respecting the diseases, disorders, or other aspect of human health with respect to which the institute was established, for the acquisition of grounds, or for the construction, equipping, or maintenance of facilities for the institute.

"(3) Each advisory council for a national research institute—

"(A)(i) may on the basis of the materials provided under section 507(d)(2) respecting research conducted at the institute, make recommendations to the Director of the institute respecting such research,

"(ii) shall review applications for grants and cooperative agreements for research or training and recommend for approval applications for projects which show promise of making valuable contributions to human knowledge, and

"(iii) may review any grant, contract, or cooperative agreement proposed to be made or entered into by the institute;

"(B) may collect, by correspondence or by personal investigation, information as to studies which are being carried on in the United States or any other country as to the diseases, disorders, or other aspect of human health with respect to which the institute was established and with the approval of the Director of the institute make available such information through appropriate publications for the benefit of public and private health entities and health professions personnel and scientists and for the information of the general public; and

"(C) may appoint subcommittees and convene workshops and conferences.

"(b)(1) Each advisory council shall consist of ex officio members and not more than twelve members appointed by the Secretary.

"(2) The ex officio members of an advisory council shall consist of—

"(A) the Secretary, the Administrator, the Director of the national research institute for which the council is established, the Chief Medical Director of the Veterans' Administration, and the Assistant Secretary of Defense for Health Affairs (or the designees of such officers), and

"(B) such additional officers or employees of the United States as the Secretary determines necessary for the advisory council to effectively carry out its functions.

"(3) The Members of an advisory council who are not ex officio members shall be appointed as follows:

"(A) Six of the members shall be appointed by the Secretary from among the leading representatives of the health and scientific disciplines (including public health and the behavioral or social sciences) relevant to the activities of the national research institute for which the advisory council is established.

"(B) Six of the members shall be appointed by the Secretary from the general public and shall include leaders in fields of public policy, law, health policy, economics, and management.

"(4) Members of an advisory council who are officers or employees of the United States shall not receive any compensation for service on the advisory council. The other members of an advisory council shall receive, for each day (including traveltime) they are engaged in the performance of the functions of the advisory council, compensation at rates not to exceed the daily equivalent of the annual rate in effect for grade GS-18 of the General Schedule.

"(c) The term of office of an appointed member of an advisory council is 4 years, except that any member appointed to fill a vacancy for an unexpired term shall be appointed for the remainder of such term and the Secretary shall make appointments to an advisory council in such manner as to ensure that the terms of the members do not all expire in the same year. A member may serve after the expiration of the member's term until a successor has taken office. A member who has been appointed for a term of 4 years may not be reappointed to an advisory council before 2 years from the date of expiration of such term of office. If a vacancy occurs in the advisory council among the appointed members, the Secretary shall make an appointment to fill the vacancy within 90 days from the date the vacancy occurs.

"(d) The chairman of an advisory council shall be selected by the Secretary from among the appointed members, except that the Secretary may select the Director of the national research institute for which the advisory council is established to be the chairman of the advisory council. The term of office of chairman shall be two years.

"(e) The advisory council shall meet at the call of the chairman or upon the request of the Director of the national research institute for which it was established, but at least three times each fiscal year. The location of the meetings of each advisory council is subject to the approval of the Director of the national research institute for which the advisory council was established.

"(f) The Director of the national research institute for which an advisory council is established shall designate a member of the staff of the institute to serve as the executive secretary of the advisory council. The Director of such institute shall make available to the advisory council such staff, information, and other assistance as it may require to carry out its functions. The Director of such institute shall provide orientation and training for new members of the advisory council to provide them with such information and training as may be appropriate for their effective participation in the functions of the advisory council.".

(b) CURRENT ADVISORY COUNCILS.—Subsections (a) through (d) of section 217 (42 U.S.C. 218(a)-(d)) are repealed. Subsection (e) of such section is amended by striking out "(e)(1)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(a)" and by redesignating paragraphs (2) through (4) as subsections (b) through (d), respectively.

SEC. 5. PUBLIC HEALTH EMERGENCIES.

Part A of title V , as amended by section 3, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"RESEARCH ON PUBLIC HEALTH EMERGENCIES

"SEC. 508. (a) If the Secretary determines, after consultation with the Administrator, the Commissioner of the Food and Drug Administration, or the Director of the Centers for Disease Control, that a disease or disorder within the jurisdiction of a national research institute of the Administration constitutes a public health emergency, the Secretary, acting through the Administrator—

"(1) shall expedite the review by advisory councils and by peer review groups of applications for grants for research on such disease or disorder or proposals for contracts for such research;

"(2) shall exercise the authority in section 3709 of the Revised Statutes (41 U.S.C. 5) respecting public exigencies to waive the advertising requirements of such section in the case of proposals for contracts for such research;

"(3) may provide administrative supplemental increases in existing grants and contracts to support new research relevant to such disease or disorder; and

"(4) shall disseminate, to health professionals and the public, information on the cause, prevention, and treatment of such disease or disorder that has been developed in research assisted under this section.

The amount of an increase in a grant or contract provided under paragraph (3) may not exceed one-half the original amount of the grant or contract.

"(b) Not later than 90 days after the end of a fiscal year, the Secretary shall report to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Labor and Human Resources of the Senate on actions taken under subsection (a) in such fiscal year.".

SEC. 6. PEER REVIEW.

Section 507(b) (42 U.S.C. 290aa-5(b)) (as redesignated by section 3 of this Act) is amended by inserting "applications made for" after "review of".

SEC. 7. NATIONAL ALCOHOL RESEARCH CENTER.

Section 511(b) is amended—

(1) by striking "or rental" before "of any land"; and

(2) by striking "rental," before "purchase,".

SEC. 8. RESEARCH AUTHORIZATION.

(a) SECTION 513.—Section 513 (42 U.S.C. 290bb-2) is amended to read as follows:

"AUTHORIZATIONS OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 513. There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this subpart such sums as may be necessary for fiscal years 1987, 1988, and 1989.".

(b) SECTION 517.—Section 517 (42 U.S.C. 290cc-2) is amended to read as follows:

"AUTHORIZATIONS OF APPROPRIATIONS

"SEC. 517. There are authorized to be appropriated to carry out this subpart such sums as may be necessary for fiscal years 1987, 1988, and 1989.".

SEC. 9. SUICIDE.

Section 504 (42 U.S.C. 290aa-3) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(h)(1) The Director shall—

"(A) develop and publish information respecting the causes of suicide and the means of preventing suicide, and

"(B) make such information generally available to the public and health professionals.

Information developed, published, and distributed under this subsection shall especially relate to suicide among individuals under the age of 21.

"(2) The Director shall report annually to the Congress on the activities undertaken under paragraph (1) during the period reported on and shall include in each such report an assessment of the effectiveness of such activities.".

SEC. 10. ANIMALS IN RESEARCH.

Part A of title V, as amended by section 4, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"ANIMALS IN RESEARCH

"SEC. 509. (a) The Secretary, acting through the Administrator, shall establish guidelines for the following:

"(1) The proper care of animals to be used in research conducted by and through agencies of the Administration.

"(2) The proper treatment of animals while being used in such research. Guidelines under this paragraph shall require—

"(A) the appropriate use of tranquilizers, analgesics, anesthetics, paralytics, and euthanasia for animals in such research; and

"(B) appropriate pre-surgical and post-surgical veterinary medical and nursing care for animals in such research.

Such guidelines shall not be construed to prescribe methods of research.

"(3) The organization and operation of animal care committees in accordance with subsection (b).

"(b)(1) Guidelines of the Secretary under subsection (a)(3) shall require animal care committees at each entity which conducts research with funds provided under this title to assure compliance with the guidelines established under subsection (a).

"(2) Each animal care committee shall be appointed by the chief executive officer of the entity for which the committee is established, shall be composed of not fewer than three members, and shall include at least one individual who has no association with such entity and at least one doctor of veterinary medicine.

"(c) Each animal care committee of a research entity shall—

"(1) review the care and treatment of animals in all animal study areas and facilities of the research entity at least semiannually to evaluate compliance with applicable guidelines established under subsection (a) for appropriate animal care and treatment;

"(2) keep appropriate records of reviews conducted under subparagraph (A); and

"(3) for each review conducted under subparagraph (A), file with the Administrator at least annually (i) a certification that the review has been conducted, and (ii) reports of any violations of guidelines established under subsection (a) or assurances required under paragraph (1) which were observed in such review and which have continued after notice by the committee to the research entity involved of the violations.

Reports filed under subparagraph (C) shall include any minority views filed by members of the committee.

"(d) The Administrator shall require each applicant for a grant, contract, or cooperative agreement involving research on animals which is administered by the Administrator or any agency of the Administration to include in its application or contract proposal, submitted after the expiration of the 12-month period beginning on the date of enactment of this section—

"(1) assurances satisfactory to the Administrator that—

"(A) the applicant meets the requirements of the guidelines established under paragraphs (1) and (2) of subsection (a) and has an animal care committee which meets the requirements of subsection (b); and

"(B) scientists, animal technicians, and other personnel involved with animal care, treatment, and use by the applicant have available to them instruction or training in the humane practice of animal maintenance and experimentation, and the concept, availability, and use of research or testing methods that limit the use of animals or limit animal distress; and

"(2) a statement of the reasons for the use of animals in the research to be conducted with funds provided under such grant or contract.

Notwithstanding subsection (a)(2) of section 553 of title 5, United States Code, regulations under this subsection shall be promulgated in accordance with the notice and comment requirements of such section.

"(e) If the Administrator determines that—

"(1) the conditions of animal care, treatment, or use in an entity which is receiving a grant, contract, or cooperative agreement involving research on animals under this title do not meet applicable guidelines established under subsection (a);

"(2) the entity has been notified by the Administrator of such determination and has been given a reasonable opportunity to take corrective action; and

"(3) no action has been taken by the entity to correct such conditions;

the Administrator shall suspend or revoke such grant or contract under such conditions as the Administrator determines appropriate.

"(f) No guideline or regulation promulgated under subsection (a) or (c) may require a research entity to disclose publicly trade secrets or commercial or financial information which is privileged or confidential.".

SEC. 11. BLOCK GRANTS.

Section 1913(a)(1)(B) (42 U.S.C. 300x–1a(a)(1)(B)) is amended by striking out "1984" and inserting in lieu thereof "1985".

SEC. 12. TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS.

(a) SECTION 504(e).—Subsection (e) of section 504 (42 U.S.C. 290aa–3) is amended by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (2)(A) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon.

(b) SECTION 504(g).—Subsection (g) of such section is amended by striking out "section 1915(e)" and inserting in lieu thereof "1916(e)".

(c) GENERAL AUTHORITY.—

(1) Such section is amended by adding at the end the following:

(i) The Secretary, acting through the Director, may make grants to and enter into cooperative agreements and contracts with public and nonprofit private entities for research on mental illness.".

(2) Section 301(a)(3) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 241(a)(3)) is amended by striking out "or, in the case of mental health" and all that follows in such section and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon.

SEC. 13. STUDY.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services, acting through the Director of the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism and in accordance with subsection (b), shall arrange for the conduct of a study to—

(1) critically review available research knowledge and experience in the United States and other countries regarding alternative approaches and mechanisms (including statutory and voluntary mechanisms) for the provision of alcoholism and alcohol abuse treatment and rehabilitative services,

(2) assess available evidence concerning comparative costs, quality, effectiveness, and appropriateness of alcoholism and alcohol abuse treatment and rehabilitative service alternatives,

(3) review the state of financing alternatives available to the public, including an analysis of policies and experiences of third party insurers and State and municipal governments, and

(4) consider and make recommendations for policies and programs of research, planning, administration, and reimbursement for the treatment and rehabilitation of individuals suffering from alcoholism and alcohol abuse.

(b) ARRANGEMENTS.—

(1) The Secretary shall request the National Academy of Sciences to conduct the study described in subsection (a) under an arrangement under which the actual expenses incurred by the Academy in conducting the study will be paid by the Secretary and with the consent of the Academy the Secretary shall enter into such arrangement.

(2) Under the arrangement entered into under paragraph (1) the National Academy of Sciences shall agree to—

(A) conduct the study in consultation with the Director of the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism, and

(B) submit to the Secretary not later than 24 months after the date the arrangement is entered into a final report on the study.

The Secretary shall transmit the final report of the Academy to Congress not later than 30 days after the date the Secretary receives the report.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADIGAN] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN].

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of H.R. 5259 is to extend for 3 fiscal years the authorization of appropriations for Federal drug and alcohol abuse research programs. These important programs are supported by the National Institute on Drug Abuse and the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism of the Department of Health and Human Services. With the National Institute of Mental Health [NIMH], these research institutes comprise the Department's Alcohol, Drug Abuse and Mental Health Administration [ADAMHA].

The legislation enjoys broad bipartisan support. It will assure continued progress in our efforts to better understand the causes of drug and alcohol abuse and improve the effectiveness of prevention and treatment programs. Funding for each activity is authorized at the level of "such funds as may be necessary" for fiscal years 1987, 1988, and 1989. The effect of this authorization is to lift what in recent years has become an arbitrary ceiling on appropriations for these vital activities.

In addition to extending expiring drug and alcohol research authorities, the legislation makes necessary technical and conforming amendments to update the statutory authority for ADAMHA and to extend research authorities recently granted to the Director of the National Institutes of Health to the ADAMHA Administrator. These new authorities include the establishment of technical and scientific peer review groups and the exemption of such groups from arbitrary renewal requirements of the Federal Advisory Committee Act.

Mr. Speaker, there are several other provisions of the legislation which should be noted. The legislation:

Encourages increased priority on Federal support of programs in training and research relating to the mental health needs of the elderly;

Provides authority for the Secretary of Health and Human Services to expedite research on public health emergencies;

Requires the Director of the National Institute of Mental Health to develop and publish information on the causes and prevention of suicide;

Requires establishment of guidelines for the proper care and treatment of laboratory animals used in research supported by the Alcohol, Drug Abuse and Mental Health Administration;

Provides for an equitable distribution among the States of future funding reductions in the Alcohol and Drug Abuse and Mental Health Services Block Grant;

Clarifies that recipients of grants under the National Alcohol Research Centers program may include the costs of rent as a reimbursable expense; and Requests a study by the National Research Council's Commission on Behavioral and Social Sciences and Education into alternative approaches and mechanisms for the provision of alcoholism and alcohol abuse treatment services.

Mr. Speaker, as reported by the Committee on Energy and Commerce, H.R. 5259 contained provisions amending the Public Health Service Act to clarify the responsibilities of recipients of Federal drug and alcohol abuse treatment funds to report instances of suspected child abuse if required to do so under State law. Provisions similar to those contained in this legislation have already been enacted into law as part of Public Law 99-401, the Children's Justice Act, which was signed by the President on August 27, 1986. Accordingly, the redundant provisions of H.R. 5259 which were contained in section 9 as reported by the committee, have not been included in the legislation now under consideration.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 5259 is a constructive bill that will promote continued research into better understanding the causes and impact of drug and alcohol abuse on the Nation.

I urge support for the legislation.

Mr. MADIGAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5259, legislation reauthorizing the research authorities of the National Institute on Alcohol Abuse and Alcoholism and the National Institute on Drug Abuse for 3 fiscal years. At the administration's request the bill's authorization levels are not specified but set at "such sums as may be necessary." The administration does not oppose House passage of H.R. 5259 under suspension of the rules.

Several of the provisions included in H.R. 5259 conform the statute of the Alcohol, Drug Abuse and Mental Health Administration with the authorizing statute of the National Institutes of Health. These include: First, the authority of the administrator to establish additional peer review groups; second, the authority of the secretary of HHS to expedite peer review and provide increases to existing grants in case of public health emergencies; and third, the establishment of guidelines for the care and treatment of animals used in research. In addition, the bill mandates two studies: one on the causes and means of preventing youth suicide and a second on the financing and effectiveness of alcoholism treatment. Finally, H.R. 5259 includes an amendment to the alcohol, drug abuse and mental health block grant, which rectifies an uneven application of Gramm-Rudman reductions in State allotments, by changing the hold harmless date to fiscal year 1985.

This bipartisan legislation was reported by the Committee on Energy and Commerce on July 29, 1986, by voice vote. I urge my colleagues to join me and the chairman of the Subcommittee on Health and the Environment, Mr. WAXMAN, in supporting this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 5259, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INDIAN YOUTH ALCOHOL AND SUBSTANCE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 1156) to coordinate and expand services for the prevention, identification, treatment, and follow-up care of alcohol and drug abuse among Indian youth, and for other purposes, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 1156

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION. 1. SHORT TITLE

This Act may be cited as the "Indian Youth Alcohol and Substance Abuse Prevention Act".

SEC. 2. CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS.

Congress finds and declares that—

(a) Alcohol and substance abuse is the most severe health and social problem facing young Indians today. Nothing is more costly to the Indian people than the consequences of alcohol and substance abuse measured in physical, mental, social, and economic terms for the individual, the family, and the tribe.

(b) The 1980 Census shows that the Indian population on Indian reservations is much younger than the general population. While 23 percent of the national population is under 15 years of age, 32 percent of the Indian population falls within that age bracket.

(c) Estimates have been made that one-third of all Indian children have used alcohol with some frequency by age 11, and the abuse of readily available inhalants such as cleaning fluids, paint thinner, and automobile antifreeze is beginning at earlier ages and now twice as prevalent among Indian children as it is among the general population.

(d) The Indian Health Service's [IHS] statistics reveal that Indians between the ages of 15 and 24 years of age are more than two times as likely to commit suicide as the general population, and approximately 80 percent of those suicides are alcohol related.

(e) Indians between the ages of 15 and 24 years of age are twice as likely as the general population to die in automobile accidents, 75 percent of which are alcohol related.

(f) Untreated alcohol and substance abusers are likely to suffer serious health problems that can be directly related to abuse of alcohol and drugs, such as chronic liver diseases, cirrhosis, alcoholic psychoses, and alcoholic dependence syndrome.

(g) The abuse of alcohol by pregnant women has created a drastic increase of Fetal Alcohol Syndrome [FAS] among newborn Indians. On some reservations, FAS may occur as frequently as 1 in 100 births, whereas its occurrence in non-Indians populations is approximately 1 in 700 births.

(h) The IHS, which is charged with treatment and rehabilitation efforts, has directed only 1 percent of its budget for alcohol and substance abuse treatment problems.

(i) The Bureau of Indian Affairs [BIA], which has responsbility for programs in the fields of education, social services, law enforcement, and other programs has assumed little responsibility for coordinating its various efforts to focus on the epidemic of alcohol and substance abuse among Indian youth.

(j) This lack of emphasis and priority continues despite the fact that BIA and IHS officials publicly acknowledge that alcohol and substance abuse among Indian youth is the most serious health and social problem facing the Indian people.

(k) The Indian tribes have the primary responsibility for protecting and ensuring the well-being of their communities and that the resources available through the actions taken under this Act will be provided in order to assist Indian tribes in meeting those responsibilities.

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

For the purposes of this Act, the term—

(1) "agency" means the local administrative entity of the Bureau of Indian Affairs serving one or more Indian tribes within a defined geographic area;

(2) "Indian tribe" means any Indian tribe, band, nation, or other organized group or community of Indians, including any Alaska Native village or regional or village corporation as defined in, or established pursuant to, the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act (43 U.S.C. 1601 et seq.), which is recognized as eligible for special programs and services provided by the United States to Indians because of their status as Indians;

(3) "prevention and treatment" may mean and include, as appropriate—

(A) efforts to identify, and the identification of, youth who are at risk with respect to, or who are abusers of, alcohol or controlled substances;

(B) intervention into cases of ongoing abuse to halt a further progression of such abuse;

(C) prevention through education and the provision of alternative activities:

(D) emergent treatment for abusers to help abstain from, and alleviate the effects of, abuse;

(E) rehabilitation to provide ongoing, specific aid, either on an inpatient or outpatient basis, to assist affected youth to reform or abstain from alcohol or substance abuse:

(F) follow-up or after-care to provide the appropriate long-term counseling and assistance on an outpatient basis; and

(G) referral to other sources of assistance or resources.

(4) "service unit" means an administrative entity within the Indian Health Service or a tribe or tribal organization operating health care programs or facilities with funds from the Indian Health Service under the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act through which the services are provided, directly or by contract, to the eligible Indian population within a defined geographic area; and

(5) "Youth" shall have the meaning given it in any particular Tribal Action Plan adopted pursuant to section 102 of this Act, except that, for purposes of statistical reporting under this Act, it shall mean a person 18 years of age or younger, or who is in attendance at a secondary school.

TITLE I—COORDINATION OF RESOURCES AND PROGRAMS

SEC. 101. INTERDEPARTMENTAL MEMORANDUM OF AGREEMENT (MOA).

(a) Not later than 180 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Interior and Secretary of the Health and Human Services (Secretaries) shall develop and enter into a memorandum of Agreement (MOA) which shall, among other things—

(1) determine and define the scope of the problem of alcohol and substance abuse among Indian youth and its financial and human costs;

(2) identify and assess—

(A) the resources and programs of the BIA and IHS; and

(B) other Federal, tribal, state and local, and private resources and programs which would be relevant to a coordinated effort to combat alcohol and substance abuse among Indian youth;

(3) develop and establish appropriate minimum standards for each agency's program responsibilities under the MOA which may be—

(A) the existing Federal or State standards in effect; or

(B) in the absence of such standards, new standards which will be developed and established in consultation with Indian tribes;

(4) coordinate the Bureau of Indian Affairs and Indian Health Service alcohol and sustance abuse programs existing on the date of the enactment of this Act with programs or efforts established by this Act;

(5) delineate the responsibilities of the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the Indian Health Service to coordinate alcohol and substance abuse-related services at the central, area, agency, and service unit levels;

(6) direct the BIA agency and education superintendents and the IHS service unit directors to cooperate fully with tribal requests made pursuant to section 102 of this Act; and

(7) provide for annual review of such agreements by the Secretaries.

(b) To the extent that there are new activities undertaken pursuant to this Act, those activities shall supplement, not supplant, activites, programs, and local actions that are ongoing on the date of the enactment of this Act and shall be made in the manner least disruptive to tribal control, in accordance with the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act (25 U.S.C. 450 et seq.) and local control, in accordance with section 1130 of the Education Amendments of 1978 (25 U.S.C. 2010).

(c) The Secretary of Interior and the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall, in developing the agreement under subsection (a), consult with and solicit the comments of—

(1) interested Indian tribes;

(2) Indian individuals;

(3) Indian organizations; and

(4) professionals in the treatment of alcohol and substance abuse.

(d) The agreement under subsection (a) shall be submitted to Congress and published in the Federal Register not later than 190 days after the date of the enactment of this Act. At the same time as publication in the Federal Register, the Secretary of the Interior shall provide a copy of this Act and the MOA to each tribe within his jurisdiction.

SEC. 102. TRIBAL ACTION PLAN (TAP).

(a) The governing body of any Indian tribe may, at its discretion, adopt a resolution providing for the establishment of a Tribal Action Plan [TAP] to coordinate available resources and programs in an effort to combat alcohol and substance abuse among its youth. Such resolution shall form the foundation for the implementation of the provision of this Act and the MOA.

(b) At the request of any Indian tribe pursuant to a resolution adopted under subsection (a) of this section, the BIA agency and education superintendents and the IHS service unit director providing services to such tribe shall cooperate with the tribe in the development of a TAP to coordinate resources and programs relevant to alcohol and substance abuse prevention and treatment. Upon the development of such plan, these officials, as directed by the MOA, shall enter into an agreement with the tribe for the implementation of the TAP.

(c) Any Tribal Action Plan entered into pursuant to subsection (b) shall provide for—

(1) the establishment of a Tribal Coordinating Committee which shall—

(A) at a minimum, have as members a tribal representative who shall serve as Chairman, the BIA agency and education superintendents, and the IHS service unit director or their representatives;

(B) have primary responsibility for the implementation of the TAP;

(C) have the responsibility for any ongoing review and evaluation of, and the making of recommendations to the tribe relating to, the TAP; and

(D) have the responsibility for designating the key personnel for training in the prevention and treatment of Indian youth affected by alcohol and substance abuse as provided under section 503(a); and

(2) the incorporation of the minimum standards for those programs and services which it encompasses which shall be—

(A) the Federal or State standards as provided in section 101(a)(3); or

(B) applicable tribal standards, if such standards are no less stringent than the Federal or State standards.

(d) Any TAP entered into pursuant to subsection (b) of this section may, among other things, provide for—

(1) an assessment of the scope of the problem of alcohol and substance abuse among the youth of the tribe;

(2) the identification and coordination of the range of available programs and resources relevant to a program of alcohol and substance abuse prevention and treatment for Indian youth;

(3) the establishment and prioritization of goals and efforts needed to meet those goals; and

(4) the identification of the community and family roles in any of the efforts undertaken as part of the TAP.

(e)(1) If any Indian tribe fails to adopt a resolution as provided in subsection (a) within 180 days after the publication of the MOA in the Federal Register as provided in section 101 of this Act, the Secretaries shall require the BIA agency and education superintendents and the IHS service unit director serving such tribe to enter into an agreement to identify and coordinate available programs and resources to carry out the purposes of this Act.

(2) Nothing in this section shall preclude such Indian tribe from adopting a resolution under subsection (a) at any time.

SEC. 103. DEPARTMENTAL RESPONSIBILITY.

(a)(1) The Secretary of the Interior, acting through the BIA, and the Secretary of Health and Human Services, acting through the IHS, shall bear equal responsibility for the implementation of the provisions of this Act in cooperation with Indian tribes.

(2) The Secretary of the Health and Human Services shall have the primary responsibility for the implementation of title V of this Act.

(b)(1) In order to better coordinate the various programs of the BIA in carrying out the provisions of this Act, there shall be established within the Office of the Assistant Secretary of the Interior for Indian Affairs a new position to be known as the Indian Youth Programs Officer.

(2) The position provided in paragraph (1) shall be established, on a permanent basis, at no less than a GS-14 as provided in section 5104 of title 5 of the United States Code.

(3) In addition to other responsibilities which may be assigned to the Indian Youth Programs Officer relating to Indian youth, such Officer shall be responsible for—

(A) monitoring the performance and compliance of programs of the BIA in meeting the goals and purposes of this Act and the MOA;

(B) serving as a point of contact within the BIA for Indian tribes and the Tribal Coordinating Committees regarding the implementation of this Act, the MOA, and the Tribal Action Plans; and

(C) providing advice and recommendations, including recommendations submitted by Indian tribes and Tribal Coordinating Committees, to the Assistant Secretary for Indian Affairs.

SEC. 104. CONGRESSIONAL INTENT.

It is the intent of Congress that—

(1) specific Federal laws, and administrative regulations promulgated thereunder, establishing the programs of the BIA, the IHS, and other Federal agencies; and

(2) general Federal laws, such as those limiting augmentation of Federal appropriations or encouraging joint or cooperative funding, shall be liberally construed and administered to achieve the purposes of this Act.

SEC. 105. FEDERAL FACILITIES, PROPERTY, AND EQUIPMENT.

(a) In the furtherance of the purposes and goals of this Act, the Secretaries shall make available for community use, to the extent permitted by law and as may be provided in a TAP, local Federal facilities, property, and equipment. Such facility availability shall include school facilities under the Secretary of Interior's jurisdiction, provided that the use of any school facilities shall be conditioned upon approval of the local school board for said school.

(b) Any additional cost associated with the use of Federal facilities, property, or equipment under this section may be borne by the Secretaries out of available funds, by other Federal funds if not otherwise prohibited by law, or by tribal, state or local, or private funds. Nothing in this section shall require the Secretaries to expend additional funds to meet the additional costs which may be associated with the use of such property as provided in this section.

(c) Subject to the availability of specific appropriations for this purpose, the Secretary of the Interior shall—

(1) establish summer recreation, employment and counseling programs for Indian youth on reservations;

(2) keep open for those weeks not within the normal school year such BIA funded or contracted schools, subject to the approval of the school board involved, and as he determines to be necessary to provide facilities for the programs established pursuant to this subsection;

(3) take all steps necessary to preserve any school property made available for any programs established pursuant to this subsection and to defray all expenses associated with these programs, including facility expenses; and

(4) provide, as needed, salaried coordinators for such programs.

TITLE II—EDUCATION PROGRAMS

SEC. 201. REVIEW OF PROGRAMS.

(a) In the development of the MOA required by section 101 of this Act, the Secretaries, in cooperation with the Secretary of Education, shall review and consider—

(1) the various programs established by Federal law providing educational services or benefits to Indian children, and

(2) tribal, state and local, and private educational resources and programs, to determine their applicability and relevance in carrying out the purposes of this Act.

(b) The results of the review conducted pursuant to this section shall be provided to every Indian tribe as soon as possible for their consideration and use in the development or modification of a TAP.

SEC. 202. AMENDMENTS TO THE INDIAN ELEMENTARY AND SECONDARY SCHOOL ASSISTANCE ACT.

Section 304 of the Indian Elementary and Secondary School Assistance Act (20 U.S.C. 241cc) is amended by—

(1) striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (1);

(2) striking out the period at the end of paragraph (2) and inserting in lieu thereof a semi-colon and the word "and"; and

(3) adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(3) the training of counselors at schools eligible for funding under this title in counseling techniques relevant to the treatment of alcohol and substance abuse.".

SEC. 203. AMENDMENTS TO THE INDIAN EDUCATION ACT.

Section 423 of the Indian Education Act (20 U.S.C. 338b) is amended by—

(a) by inserting in subsection (a) the phrase "clinical psychology" after the word "medicine"; and

(b) adding at the end of the section the following new subsection:

"(e) Not more than 10 percent of the fellowships awarded under subsection (a) shall be awarded, on a priority basis, to persons receiving training in guidance counseling with a specialty in the area of alcohol and substance abuse counseling and education.".

SEC. 204. AMENDMENTS TO THE EDUCATION AMENDMENTS OF 1978.

(a) Section 1121 of the Education Amendments of 1978 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(i)(1) All schools funded by the Bureau of Indian Affairs shall include within their curriculum a program of instruction relating to alcohol and substance abuse prevention and treatment. The Assistant Secretary shall provide the technical assistance necessary to develop and implement such a program for students in kindergarten and grades 1 through 12, at the request of—

"(A) any Bureau of Indian Affairs school (subject to the approval of the school board of such school); or

"(B) any school board of a school operating under a contract entered into under the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act (25 U.S.C. 450 et seq.).

"(2) In schools operated directly by the Bureau of Indian Affairs, the Secretary shall, not later than 120 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, provide for—

(A) accurate reporting of all incidents relating to alcohol and substance abuse; and

(B) individual student crisis intervention.

"(3) The programs requested under paragraph (1) shall be developed in consultation with the Indian tribe that is to be served by such program and health personnel in the local community of such tribe.

"(4) Schools requesting program assistance under this provision are encouraged to involve family units and, where appropriate, tribal elders and Native healers in such instructions."

(b) Section 1129 of the Education Amendments of 1978 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(e)(1) A financial plan under subsection (b) for a school may include, at the discretion of the local administrator and the school board of such school, a provision for a summer program of academic and support services for students of the school. Any such program may include activities related to the prevention of alcohol and substance abuse. The Assistant Secretary of Indian Affairs shall provide for the utilization of any such school facility during any summer in which such utilization is requested.

"(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, funds authorized under the Act of April 16, 1934 (25 U.S.C. 452 et seq.) and the Indian Education Act may be used to augment the services provided in each summer program at the option, and under the control, of the tribe or Indian controlled school receiving such funds.

"(3) The Assistant Secretary of Indian Affairs, acting through the Director of the Office of Indian Education Programs, shall provide technical assistance and coordination for any program described in paragraph (1) and shall, to the extent possible, encourage the coordination of such programs with any other summer programs that might benefit Indian youth, regardless of the funding source or administrative entity of any such program.".

SEC. 205. PUBLIC AND PRIVATE SCHOOL PROGRAMS.

(a) Notwithstanding any other law, Federal grants or other financial assistance made available to public or private schools because of the enrollment of Indian children pursuant to—

(1) the Act of April 16, 1934, as amended by the Indian Education Assistance Act, (25 U.S.C. et seq.);

(2) the Indian Elementary and Secondary School Assistance Act (20 U.S.C. 241aa et seq.); and

(3) the Indian Education Act (20 U.S.C. 3385), may be used to support a program of instruction relating to alcohol and substance abuse prevention and treatment.

SEC. 206. NEWSLETTER.

The Secretary of the Interior shall, not later than 120 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, publish an alcohol and substance abuse newsletter in cooperation with the Department of Health and Human Services and the Department of Education to report on Indian alcohol and substance abuse projects and programs. The newsletter shall—

(1) be published once in each calendar quarter;

(2) include reviews of programs determined by the Secretary of the Interior to be exemplary that provide sufficient information to enable interested persons to obtain further information about such programs; and

(3) be circulated without charge to—

(A) schools;

(B) Tribal offices;

(C) Bureau of Indian Affairs' agency and area offices;

(D) Indian Health Service area and service unit offices;

(E) Indian Health Service alcohol programs; and

(F) Other entities providing alcohol and substance abuse-related services or resources to Indian people.

TITLE III—FAMILY AND SOCIAL SERVICES: YOUTH ACTIVITIES

SEC. 301. REVIEW OF PROGRAMS.

(a) In the development of the MOA required by section 101 of this Act, the Secretaries shall review and consider—

(1) the various programs established by Federal law providing family and social services and benefits for Indian families and children, and

(2) tribal, state and local, and private family or social resources and programs, to determine their applicability and relevance in carrying out the purpose of this Act.

(b) The Secretaries shall conduct a similar review with respect to programs and resources relating to youth employment, recreation, cultural, and community activities which may be applicable and relevant in carrying out the purposes of this Act.

(c) The results of the reviews conducted pursuant to this section shall be provided to every Indian tribe as soon as possible for their consideration and use in the development or modification of a TAP.

SEC. 302. SOCIAL SERVICES REPORTS.

(a) The Secretary of the Interior, with respect to the administration of any family or social services program by the BIA directly or through contracts under the Indian Self-Determination Act, shall require the compilation of data relating to the number and types of child abuse and neglect cases seen and the type of assistance provided. Additionally, such data should also be categorized to reflect those cases that involve, or appear to involve, alcohol and substance abuse, those cases which are recurring, and those cases which involve other minor siblings.

(b) The data compiled pursuant to subsection (a) shall be provided annually to the affected Indian tribe and Tribal Coordinating Committee to assist them in developing or modifying a TAP and shall also be submitted to the IHS service unit director who will have responsibility for compiling a tribal comprehensive report as provided in section 505 of this Act.

(c) In carrying out the requirements of this section, the Secretary shall insure that the data is compiled and reported in a manner which will preserve the confidentiality of the families and individuals.

SEC. 303. EMERGENCY SHELTERS.

(a) A TAP adopted pursuant to section 102 of this Act may make such provisions as may be necessary and practical for the establishment, funding, licensing, and operation of emergency shelters or half-way houses for Indian youth who are alcohol or substance abusers, including youth who have been arrested for offenses directly or indirectly related to alcohol or substance abuse.

(b) In any case where an Indian youth is arrested or detained by BIA or tribal law enforcement personnel for an offense relating to alcohol or substance abuse, other than for a status offense as defined by the Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention Act of 1974, under circumstances where such youth may not be immediately restored to the custody of his parents or guardians and where there is space available in an appropriately licensed and supervised emergency shelter or half-way house, such youth shall be referred to such facility in lieu of incarceration in a secured facility, unless such youth is deemed a danger to himself or other persons.

(c) In the case of any State that exercises criminal jurisdiction over any part of Indian country under section 1162 of title 18 of the United States Code or section 401 of the Act of April 11, 1968 (25 U.S.C. 1321), such State is urged to require its law enforcement officers to—

(1) place any Indian youth arrested for any offense related to alcohol or substance abuse in a temporary emergency shelter described in subsection (d) or a community-based alcohol or substance abuse treatment facility in lieu of incarceration to the extent such facilities are available; and

(2) observe the guidelines promulgated under subsection (b).

(d) In any case where there is space available in an appropriately licensed and supervised emergency shelter or half-way house, BIA and tribal courts are encouraged to refer Indian youth convicted of offenses directly or indirectly related to alcohol and substance abuse to such facilities in lieu of sentencing to incarceration in a secured juvenile facility.

(e) The Assistant Secretary of Indian Affairs shall, as part of the development of the MOA set out in section 101(a)(3), promulgate standards by which the emergency shelters established under a program pursuant to subsection (a) of this section shall become licensed.

(f) Upon the request of any Indian tribe, the BIA shall include in its housing inventory for such tribe the lack of an emergency shelter or half-way house as an unmet housing need. The construction or renovation of such a facility shall be considered an eligible activity under the BIA's Housing Improvement Program.

TITLE IV—LAW ENFORCEMENT AND JUDICIAL SERVICES

SEC. 401. REVIEW OF PROGRAMS.

(a) In the development of the MOA required by section 101 of this Act, the Secretaries, in cooperation with the Attorney General of the United States, shall review and consider—

(1) the various programs established by Federal law providing law enforcement or judicial services for Indian tribes, and

(2) tribal and State and local law enforcement and judicial programs and systems.

(b) The results of the review conducted pursuant to this section shall be made available to every Indian tribe as soon as possible for their consideration and use in the development and modification of a TAP.

SEC. 402. BIA LAW ENFORCEMENT AND JUDICIAL TRAINING.

BIA programs for the training of BIA and tribal law enforcement and judicial personnel shall include training in the problems of youth alcohol and substance abuse, including instruction in prevention and treatment. Such training shall be coordinated with IHS in carrying out its responsibilities under section 503 of this Act.

SEC. 403. MEDICAL ASSESSMENT AND TREATMENT OF JUVENILE OFFENDERS.

(a) The MOA entered into pursuant to section 101 of this Act shall include a specific provision for the development and implementation at each BIA agency and IHS service unit of a procedure for the emergency medical assessment and treatment of every Indian youth arrested or detained by BIA or tribal law enforcement personnel for an offense relating to or involving alcohol or substance abuse.

(b) The medical assessment required by subsection (a) shall occur as soon as possible after the arrest or detention of an Indian youth and shall be provided by IHS, either through its direct or contract health service. The medical assessment required by this section shall be for the purpose of determining the mental or physical state of the individual so that appropriate steps can be taken to protect his health and well-being.

SEC. 404. MODEL INDIAN JUVENILE CODE.

The Secretary of the Interior, either directly or by contract, shall provide for the development of a Model Indian Juvenile Code which shall include provisions relating to the disposition of cases involving Indian youth arrested or detained by BIA or tribal law enforcement personnel for alcohol or drug related offenses. To the extent possible, the Model Code shall be consistent with Part B, Subpart I of the Juvenile Justice and Delinquent Prevention Act of 1974. The development of such Model Code shall be accomplished in cooperation with Indian organizations having an expertise or knowledge in the field of law enforcement and judicial procedure and in consultation with Indian tribes. Upon completion of the Model Code, the Secretary shall make copies available to each Indian tribe.

SEC. 405. LAW ENFORCEMENT AND JUDICIAL REPORT.

(a) The Secretary of the Interior, with respect to the administration of any law enforcement or judicial services program by the BIA, either directly or through contracts under the Indian Self-Determination Act, shall require the compilation of data relating to calls and encounters, arrests and detentions, and disposition of cases by BIA or tribal law enforcement or judicial personnel involving Indian youth where it is determined that alcohol or drug abuse is a contributing factor.

(b) The data compiled pursuant to subsection (a) shall be provided annually to the affected Indian tribe and Tribal Coordinating Committee to assist them in developing or modifying a TAP and shall also be submitted to the IHS service unit director who will have the responsibility for compiling a tribal comprehensive report as provided in section 505 of this Act.

(c) In carrying out the requirements of this section, the Secretary shall insure that the data is compiled and reported in a manner which will preserve the confidentiality of the families and individuals involved.

TITLE V—INDIAN YOUTH ALCOHOL AND SUBSTANCE ABUSE TREATMENT AND REHABILITATION

SEC. 501. REVIEW OF PROGRAMS.

(a) In the development of the Memorandum of Agreement required by section 101 of this Act, the Secretaries shall review and consider—

(1) the various progams established by Federal law providing health services and benefits to Indian tribes, including those relating to mental health and alcohol and substance abuse prevention and treatment, and

(2) tribal, state and local, and private health resources and programs,

(3) where facilities to provide such treatment are or should be located; and

(4) the effectiveness of public and private alcohol and substance abuse treatment programs in operation on the date of the enactment of this Act, to determine their applicability and relevance in carrying out the purposes of this Act.

(b) The results of the review conducted pursuant to this section shall be provided to every Indian tribe as soon as possible for their consideration and use in the development or modification of a TAP.

SEC. 502. INDIAN HEALTH SERVICE TREATMENT PROGRAM.

Subject to the availability of specific appropriation of funds for the purposes of this section, the Director of the Indian Health Service shall provide a program of comprehensive alcohol and substance abuse treatment services, including detoxification and counseling services, and follow-up care in Indian Health Service facilities and in facilities operated under contract under the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act to Indian youth in need of such services.

SEC. 503. ALCOHOL AND SUBSTANCE ABUSE TRAINING PROGRAMS.

(a) Subject to the availability of specific appropriations, the Secretary of Health and Human Services, in cooperation with the Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Education, and acting through the IHS, shall have the responsibility for developing and making available training to the key tribal, Federal or other personnel identified in a TAP entered into pursuant to section 102. Such training will be for prevention and treatment methods relating to alcohol and substance abuse among Indian youth.

(b) Training made available under this section may be provided by IHS either directly or through contract. In entering into contracts to develop training methods or materials, or to provide the training, the Secretary shall insure that the training is culturally relevant to, and be conducted in, the local community of the recipients of the training. For purposes of contracting for such training, he shall give preference to Indian organizations or institutions having expertise or knowledge in the field, including Tribally-Controlled Community Colleges.

(c) In addition to those designated under subsection (a), the Secretary of Health and Human Services, shall provide training under subsection (a) to school personnel designated by each BIA operated or funded school, supervisors of emergency shelters, and Community Health Representatives (CHRs).

(d) School personnel to be specifically designated for training shall, at the minimum, include the student counselors and one teacher for each school. School personnel who receive such training shall be responsible for the in-service training of other school professional personnel.

(e) Community Health Representatives whose training program is funded under the Act of November 2, 1921 (25 U.S.C. 13) shall receive no less than two weeks of instruction relating to the problems of alcohol and substance abuse. Such instruction shall specifically include training in crisis intervention, pharmacology, family relations, and the causes and effects of fetal alcohol syndrome.

(f) Any training provided to supervisors of emergency shelters pursuant to subsection (a) shall be consistent with licensing standards for such shelters established under section 303 of this Act.

(g) The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall, upon request, provide certification to any person who completes any training provided pursuant to this section. Such certification would be provided for the purpose of obtaining academic credit or certification at any post-secondary education institute.

SEC. 504. IHS RESPONSIBILITIES.

The MOA entered into pursuant to section 101 of this Act shall include specific provisions pursuant to which IHS shall assume responsibility for—

(1) the determination of the scope of the problem of alcohol and substance abuse among Indian youth, including the number of such youth within the jurisdiction of IHS who are directly or indirectly affected by alcohol and substance abuse, and the financial and human cost;

(2) an assessment of the existing and needed resources necessary for the prevention and treatment of Indian youth affected by alcohol and substance abuse, and

(3) an estimate of the funding necessary to adequately support a program of prevention and treatment of Indian youth affected by alcohol and substance abuse.

SEC. 505. IHS REPORTS.

(a) The Secretary of Health and Human Services, with respect to the administration of any health program by an IHS service unit, directly or through contract, including a contract under the Indian Self-Determination Act, shall require the compilation of data relating to the number of cases or incidents which any of the IHS personnel or services were involved and which were related, either directly or indirectly, to alcohol or substance abuse. Such report shall include the type of assistance provided and the disposition of these cases.

(b) The data compiled pursuant to subsection (a) shall be provided annually to the affected Indian tribe and Tribal Coordinating Committee to assist them in developing or modifying a TAP.

(c) In addition, the service unit director shall be responsible for assembling the data compiled under this subsections (B) of this section and sections 302 and 405 of this Act into an annual tribal comprehensive report which shall be provided to the affected tribe and to the Director of the Indian Health Service who shall develop and publish a biennial national report based upon such tribal comprehensive reports.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Arizona [Mr. UDALL] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MCCAIN] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. UDALL].

□ 1305

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill now under consideration.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am happy to bring to the House for consideration H.R. 1156, the Indian Youth Alcohol and Substance Abuse Prevention Act.

It is the purpose of this legislation to attack the growing problem of alcohol and drug abuse among Indian youth on the reservations.

Alcoholism and alcohol abuse is the No. 1 killer of Indian people and is now recognized as the most serious social and health problem facing Indian tribes. The record made by the Interior Committee makes clear that this problem impacts most cruelly on the Indian youth.

Thirty-two percent of the Indian population is under 15 years of age as compared with 23 percent for the national population.

IHS statistics reveal that Indians between the ages of 15 and 24 are more than two times likely to commit suicide as the general population with approximately 80 percent of those suicides being alcohol or drugs related. Indians between those ages are twice as likely as the general population to die in automobile accidents, with 75 percent being alcohol or drug related.

Mr. Speaker, I do not suggest that enactment and implementation of H.R. 1156 will solve the alcohol and drug problem among Indian youth. To do that, we need to get serious about providing meaningful employment opportunities for Indian people and developing a sound economy for Indian reservations. But that is a long-term solution. We must act now to deal with the immediate problem of our young Indian people.

H.R. 1156 addresses that issue by providing for the development and implementation of a comprehensive, coordinated attack upon alcohol and drug abuse among Indian youth. It calls for the identification and coordination of a broad range of existing Federal and non-Federal programs and resources.

And it puts the authority and responsibility for doing so where it belongs—with the Indian people and tribal governments themselves.

Mr. Speaker, this comprehensive legislation falls within the jurisdiction of three committees: Interior, Education and Labor, and Energy and Commerce. I would like to thank Mr. KILDEE with the Education Committee and Mr. WAXMAN with the Energy Committee for their cooperation and understanding in the development of this bill and in bringing it to the House for consideration.

I urge adoption of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 1156 and ask to revise and extend my remarks. Alcohol and substance abuse is recognized as one of the leading health problems among our native Americans. It is a widespread all-encompassing problem costly to Indian people in physical, mental, social, and economic terms. It is most appropriate that we wrestle with this problem, and attempt to provide tribes with another set of tools to address the problem.

Last week, this body passed a far reaching omnibus drug enforcement, treatment, and prevention bill. I was honored to participate in title XI of H.R. 5484, which addresses Indian drug, alcohol, and substance abuse. H.R. 1156 compliments the act by placing additional emphasis on youth programs and is similar to legislation I introduced. I would like to commend our colleague from Nebraska, Mr. BEREUTER, for introducing H.R. 1156 and for his persistent advocacy for this legislation.

Additionally, Mr. Speaker, I would like to commend the secretary of Health and Human Services, Dr. Otis Bowen. Pursuant to several requests of members of the Interior Committee, including the Republican Task Force on Indian Affairs, Dr. Bowen has begun an Indian alcoholism prevention initiative. I believe the initiative is consistent with what H.R. 1156 would do, and I would anticipate quick implementation after passage.

Two factors are important in H.R. 1156: First, any program for the treatment or prevention of substance abuse must be instituted by the tribe with the assistance of the Federal Government. Second, there exists on or near reservations resources that could be helpful in an abuse related program. These resources vary from reservation-to-reservation, and must be weighed within a tribe's own plans and desires. Included in these resources could be local schools, health clinics, social workers, law enforcement agencies, tribal resources, student organizations, and others.

At this point, I would like to have inserted in the RECORD a summary of H.R. 1156 for my colleagues.

H.R. 1156—THE INDIAN YOUTH ALCOHOL AND SUBSTANCE ABUSE PREVENTION ACT

TITLE I—COORDINATION OF RESOURCES AND PROGRAMS

This title provides the authorization for the Secretaries of the Interior and of Health and Human Resources to enter into a memorandum of agreement to:

Determine and define the scope of the problem of alcohol and substance abuse, identify resources and programs within the BIA and IHS, identify other resources, and establish a framework for coordination of these resources at the local level with a tribal action plan.

Provide for the Federal response and coordination with a tribally authorized tribal action plan; including minimum criteria for a coordinating committee, delineation of departmental responsibilities in accord with the TAP, and make Federal facilities property and equipment available to the TAP.

TITLE II—EDUCATION PROGRAMS

This title would require a review of various educational programs existing on or near Indian reservations. It also provides amendments to the Indian Elementary and Secondary School Assistance Act, the Indian Education Act, and the Adult Education Act, and the Education Amendments of 1978 to allow participation by these various educational entities in the tribal action plan. Additionally, it provides for substance above training for educational personnel.

TITLE III—FAMILY AND SOCIAL SERVICES: YOUTH ACTIVITIES

This title would provide for a review of programs and resources relating to youth employment, recreation, cultural and community activities; so that the review could be considered in the formulation of the tribal action plan.

Additionally, this title that should the TAP adopt provisions for the establishment and operation of emergency shelters, arresting law enforcement officers must comply with the TAP options to incarceration, unless the suspect is considered a danger to himself or others, and based on the gravity of the charge.

TITLE IV—LAW ENFORCEMENT AND JUDICIAL SERVICES

This title would require the Secretaries, in cooperation with the Attorney General to review the various programs—Federal, tribal, State and local—providing law enforcement or judicial services for indian tribes. Additionally, it provides for substance abuse training for BIA and tribal personnel in the law field. The title also provides for the development by local BIA and IHS units of a medical assessment procedure of Indian youth arrested or detained by the BIA or tribal law enforcement personnel for offenses related to alcohol or substance abuse. Finally, this title calls for the development of model Indian juvenile codes.

TITLE V—INDIAN YOUTH ALCOHOL AND SUBSTANCE ABUSE TREATMENT AND REHABILITATION

This title requires among other reports an assessment of existing medical resources and an estimate of any funding necessary to support a program for prevention and treatment. Additionally, this title provides for the authorization of appropriations in the amount of $10 million annually for three years for all training programs, including IHS personnel.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we must view H.R. 1156 as the preservation of the future of Indian tribes. Nearly 50 percent of those living on Indian reservations are under 25 years of age, and Indians are among the fastest growing populations in this country. It is time for the governments, tribal and Federal, to work together to break the cycle of drug and substance abuse. I strongly urge my colleagues to support this important measure.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to especially thank the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE]. I want to express my appreciation to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON], who has had a continued and deep interest in efforts on this problem, along with the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE] and, of course, the gentleman from Arizona, Chairman UDALL, who, for many, many years, has expressed his deep and abiding concern. Without him, I do not believe we would have reached the degree that we have today in attacking this terrible issue of Indian youth.

Mr. Speaker, on this side of the aisle, there are many of us who are very happy with this administration and the progress that we have made economically throughout this Nation. We are pleased that our inflation is low, that interest rates are down, and despite the problems of the deficit and others, we are pleased to see that the majority of Americans over the last 5 or 6 years have, indeed, prospered in a way that they had not in previous years.

The facts are also, Mr. Speaker, that there are large segments of Americans who have been left behind in this great movement forward, segments of our population who have not profited, but, in fact, have suffered for various reasons. Among those, of course, are black Americans, Hispanics and, of course, Appalachian whites and our Indians.

Mr. Speaker, I have felt for a long time that the problems on Indian reservations are largely relegated to three areas: education, economy, and health.

We have made great efforts to provide the Indian population of America with the proper educational facilities, but they still lag far behind. We have seen places like our own Phoenix Indian School turned into correctional schools, as opposed to schools for learning.

I have introducted an economic enterprise zone bill in hopes that we can attract businesses and enterprises to the Indian reservations so that they can employ Indians and take them off the unemployment roles which are staggering in numbers.

Many of our reservations in Arizona have as high as 75 or 80 percent unemployment, the rest being employed by the Tribal Government.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, we have to assure our Native Americans a certain minimum, level of health care. I am not proud of the efforts that have been made by the administration to reduce the level of Indian health care over the years. Such a shortsighted measure as trying to do away with the community health representative, in my opinion, is a classic example of penny wise and pound foolish.

I believe that the most serious problem is that we need to assist these young people to take their places, their rightful places in our society and help them eradicate the terrible problem of alcohol, substance, and drug abuse that is so prevalent throughout Indian country in America.

I do not claim, nor do I believe the chairman does, that this bill will eradicate alcoholism, substance, and drug abuse on reservations, but I think that this legislation is vitally needed if we are going to attack the problem which has been with us for many years and will be with us for many years to come, unless we as a nation recognize our obligation to all of its citizens and devote the efforts and resources that are necessary to eradicate this cancer which has attacked our Indian Native American population.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE], who has played a key role in this legislation.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, today I rise in support of H.R. 1156, on behalf of the Committee on Education and Labor, which has joint jurisdiction on this measure.

This bill will provide more comprehensive services and greater coordination of Federal efforts to combat the No. 1 health and social problem for American Indian youth—alcohol and substance abuse.

It will accomplish this by making the changes that are necessary within existing programs to make them more efficient and effective.

Let me stress that this involves no new money.

It does, however, give these programs our highest priority. It will begin to address a critical need.

I wish to commend the chairmen of the three committees of jurisdiction, Mr. HAWKINS, of the Committee on Education and Labor; Mr. UDALL, of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, and Mr. DINGELL, of the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

I also wish to recognize and thank Mr. WAXMAN, chairman of the Health and the Environment Subcommittee of the Energy and Commerce Committee, for expediting the consideration of this measure.

I also wish to recognize Mr. DASCHLE, of South Dakota, and Mr. BEREUTER, of Nebraska, who responded to their Indian constituents' pleas for help.

Their role was absolutely essential.

The consensus language which I am asking you to support today addresses these problems.

The language being considered is a carefully crafted compromise between these three committees of jurisdiction.

It is a truly cooperative effort, which is bipartisan and nonpartisan. It is acceptable to all parties.

I will not take the time here to detail the horrors of alcohol and substance abuse which afflict people on reservations.

I have visited reservations and special schools where the tragic consequences of such abuse can be seen in the shattered lives of Indian children and adults.

We must, I stress, must take action, now.

On behalf of the Committee on Education and Labor, which exercises jurisdiction over the Federal programs for education of Indians, I wish specifically to point out several provisions relating to education programs.

The consensus amendment rewrites the education provisions of the original bill to ensure that each Bureau-funded education program will have an alcohol and substance abuse education and prevention curriculum component.

The services would come from existing funds, while the control of the actual programs and their content would remain at the local level.

Also, the amendment includes provisions allowing local administrators and school boards to decide whether there are sufficient funds for summer programs and to institute them at local option.

These provisions recognize the need to involve the schools in this effort, while retaining the essential aspect of local control.

There are other fine provisions, relating to other Bureau of Indian Affairs and Indian Health Service Programs, which Mr. UDALL, my chairman of the Interior Committee, has noted in his remarks.

Will it totally solve the problem?

No, for the underlying causes of poverty, unemployment, and despair will still, unfortunately be present.

Is it perfect?

No, for no legislation is ever crafted on Mount Sinai.

However, history shows that it could be important. Congress called for such a prioritization in the area of infant death during the 1960's.

At that time, infant death on reservations was many times the national rate.

Through coordinated and prioritized efforts, it has been reduced substantially.

The language we are considering today is good language.

It will help improve the chances for survival for many Indian youngsters.

I ask for its adoption.

□ 1315

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN], and I join in the remarks of my colleagues on the important role that he has played in this legislation.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 4754, H.R. 5230, and H.R. 5259, the bills previously passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this legislation.

H.R. 1156 was referred to the Committee on Energy and Commerce for consideration of those provisions within the committee's jurisdiction. Due to the press of budget reconciliation legislation and other business, the committee was not able to take up the measure before the other committees of jurisdiction had acted. In order to expedite consideration of this bill by the House, the committee has agreed to allow the bill to proceed without formal action. I am satisfied that the compromise substitute before the House today reasonably reflects the concerns of the Energy and Commerce Committee.

H.R. 1156 addresses one of the most serious health problems among Indian youth: alcohol and substance abuse. Among other things, the bill directs the Indian Health Service to provide training and comprehensive treatment services, including detoxification and counseling and followup care. The IHS efforts must be consistent with plans developed by the affected Indian tribes for coordinating and targeting resources to address the problem.

Unlike the related provisions of the Omnibus Drug Act (H.R. 5484) which we adopted last week, this bill does not authorize new funds. Instead, it provides that the IHS implement the treatment program only if specific appropriations are made available for this purpose. The Interior appropriations bill recently passed by the House, H.R. 5234, allocates $1 million for training and for demonstration programs targeted at the prevention of alcohol and drug abuse among Indian youth.

In closing, I would to commend Mr. DASCHLE for his leadership in this area and his strong personal commitment to improving the health status of the Indian people. I also want to express my appreciation for the continuing cooperation that the distinguished chairmen of the Committees on Interior and Insular Affairs and Education and Labor have shown in the development of this and related legislation.

I urge the adoption of this legislation.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BEREUTER], without whom this legislation would not be on the floor today.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, today we are considering an important measure, the Indian Youth Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention Act. This legislation, first introduced by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DASCHLE], and myself in both the 98th and 99th Congresses, reflects 3 years of work and consultation with Indian tribes. While the bill certainly will not address all of the problems associated with alcohol and drug abuse among Indian young people, it is an important and much needed first step. This Member believes that it provides a firm foundation on which to build, with the help of the appropriations committee, in years to come.

Mr. Speaker, I am sure that some Members will wonder why we are considering this measure today, so shortly on the heels of this body's action on the omnibus drug bill, which in fact contains an expanded version of this legislation. Put simply, this Member feels there is a possibility that the very well-intentioned and much-needed omnibus bill may get bogged down in negotiations with the other body due to the high costs associated with it. And given the fact that the other body has already passed the companion piece to the Indian Youth Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention Act, it seems reasonable to expect that this measure finally could be on the President's desk before much more time has elapsed.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation could not have come so far without the active support and assistance of many people. The distinguished chairman of the Interior Committee, the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. UDALL], has been a champion of the inherent concepts of this legislation since the beginning, and is an original cosponsor of the bill introduced in this Congress. His dedication to the improvement of the lives of Indian people, and in particular, Indian young people, is well recognized in this body and throughout Indian country.

This Member especially wishes to recognize the constant interest and hard work of the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MCCAIN], the able designated leader for the minority on Indian Affairs on the Interior Committee. He has been a leader in proposing legislation on the very subjects which are a part of this legislation and is responsible for various concepts in this measure. His cooperation and assistance have been essential.

Additionally, the gentleman from Montana [Mr. WILLIAMS], another original cosponsor, has provided invaluable support and counsel as we worked these last few weeks to resolve the differences between the markups of the Education and Labor Committee and the Interior Committee. The gentleman from Alaska [Mr. YOUNG], another original cosponsor, was an early friend, recognizing the severity of the problem among Alaska tribes. This Member also wishes to thank the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE], for taking the greatest interest in the legislation, and guiding it through the Education and Labor Committee, and the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN] who helped expedite this legislation. Our colleague from Michigan, despite the fact that there are no tribes in his congressional district, is surely a terrific advocate for Indian education. These dedicated Members, along with the more than 50 additional cosponsors of the legislation, deserve special thanks and appreciation.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation has universal support among Indian people. Indian leaders repeatedly told us in testimony that alcohol and drug abuse is the No. 1 health and social problem on the reservation today. In fact, for decades, researchers have documented the use and consequences of alcohol and drug abuse among Native Americans. Inevitably, stereotypes developed about Indian drinking, since the problem emerged after the introduction of alcohol by early European explorers, who brought whiskey, guns, horses and tools for trading purposes. While the reasons leading to such high rates of alcohol and drug abuse are complex, most Indian and non-Indian alike point to joblessness, decline in traditional culture and spirituality, and stresses on the family unit as being among the major causes of alcohol and drug abuse. Clearly, something needed to be done, and this legislation is the product of that concern.

At the beginning of our effort, Mr. DASCHLE and this Member discovered that alcohol and drug related illnesses and deaths among Indian people are considerably higher than among non-Indian people. Our findings about the human and financial costs of alcohol and drug abuse among Indian people were staggering! On many reservations, alcohol plays a role in 95 percent of automobile fatalities. A young Indian constituent testified that at her high school 98 percent of the students surveyed admitted to the use of an illegal drug, 80 percent admitted to drinking, and 52 percent of the 80 percent who drank did so to pass out! Other Indian youth leaders testified about the disasterous impact of alcohol and drugs as well, with statistics as startling and disturbing.

On some reservations, fetal alcohol syndrome, or the milder fetal alcohol effect may occur as frequently as 1 in 100 births, whereas its occurrence in non-Indian populations is approximately 1 in 700 births. According to Mr. Jerry Flute, of the Association on American Indian Affairs, an Indian Health Service physician told one tribe that if the present trend continues, virtually all of the next generation of children on that reservation will suffer from FAS or FAE. Tragically, children born to alcoholic mothers are almost always retarded to some degree, and many suffer facial abnormalities and abnormalities to the extremities. Yet, of course, FAS and FAE are entirely preventable through the education of young girls and women on the effects of maternal drinking on the unborn child.

In fact, the tragedy of FAS and FAE is one of the motivating factors in this Member's commitment to see this legislation enacted. Many years ago, I visited a special school run by a tribe in my district. As many as 25 percent of the all too numerous handicapped or disabled children there were afflicted by FAS or FAE. The impact of that visit remains with me to this day. That firsthand observation continually inspires my work on this legislation. It reinforces my belief that the Federal Government must provide a framework and some assistance to Indian tribes in the fight to lessen the hold that alcohol and drugs have on their communities.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, I would point out that the vast majority of contract health care dollars—up to 70 percent—provided through Indian Health Service is spent for the treatment of alcohol and drug related problems. And according to the Indian Health Care Resource Center in Tulsa, at least 75 percent of family and social service cases are alcohol or drug related. Clearly, already limited health care dollars are spent disproportionately on alcohol and drug related problems in Indian families and communities.

The legislation we are considering today places the primary emphasis on prevention and education efforts through the elementary and secondary schools. Studies have shown that intervention with young children as they are forming their values assists them in developing the ability and motivation necessary to say "No" to the temptation of alcohol or drugs that inevitably comes during adolescence. Teachers and counselors will receive training in alcohol and drug abuse identification and intervention under provisions in this bill. In addition, Bureau of Indian Affairs schools will be required to implement a program of instruction from kindergarten through the 12th grades as a regular part of the academic program, interwoven where appropriate into health or physical education programs, or history programs or science or creative writing classes. The limits of teachers' imaginations are the only limits to the ways that prevention can be taught.

We recognize that many schools throughout Indian country have already taken steps to impart information about the dangers of alcohol and drug abuse to their students. More often than not, however, because of a lack of funds, those steps were not much more than an occasional lecture or placement of information on a bulletin board. For purposes of establishing legislative intent, this Member wants to make it perfectly clear that a 1 hour audiovisual presentation, for example, or an occasional evening lecture for families and young people, or information posted on the school bulletin board will not meet the definitions or intent this Member has in using the phrase "program of instruction." The legislation will require the Bureau of Indian Affairs to provide assistance to tribes who request it in the development of a curriculum that will meet the definition.

Mr. Speaker, we are concerned that critical drug and alcohol prevention programs are subject to the vagaries of yearly budget pressures or the shifting placement and priorities of administrators and teachers. Too many stories are heard of tribes with drug and alcohol prevention programs well underway who lose funding in subsequent years. Providing the critical kind of integrated educational offering in the classroom setting intended by this legislation is the best way to guard against the uneven funding patterns of competitive projects or emphases.

Finally, Mr. Speaker, it is important to point out that our legislation also specifically encourages the school boards of public schools on or near reservations, with significant numbers of Indian students, to similarly tackle the problem of substance abuse.

Mr. Speaker, the Indian Youth Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention Act has another equally crucial focal point, in addition to its emphasis on prevention. Our legislation stresses the vital leadership role that tribes will take in the fight against alcohol and drug abuse. Through the triggering mechanism of a tribal action plan, a tribe will designate who will receive training in identification, intervention, and techniques for dealing with alcohol and drug abuse, in addition, to the teachers, counselors, community health representatives, and emergency shelter supervisors specified in the legislation. Through the tribal action plan, additional efforts in reservation communities will be determined. In all respects, Federal agencies are to cooperate and contribute as willing partners in the initiatives undertaken by tribes to combat the insidious problem of substance abuse in their communities.

This bill does not carry with it any new authorizations. It has had the attention of many Members from both sides of the aisle. It is my understanding that the administration, while expressing some reservations about the necessity for the bill, will not stand in the way of its enactment. In fact, this Member would like to point out that the administration, recognizing the severity of the problem of substance abuse in Indian communities, has responded with some internal initiatives themselves, and directed Indian Health Service to undertake a new prevention program that at the least complements the legislation we are bringing before the House today. I compliment them on that action.

Mr. Speaker and colleagues, this Member asks for your support and your continued attention to a problem that is epidemic nationwide and simply disastrous in the Indian culture. There is nothing more precious than the health and well-being of a community's youth. Young people who have their health, their pride, and an enhanced sense of self-worth will grow up to be productive members of their tribes and American society. Certainly the existence of strong, culturally viable, proud, and self-sufficient American Indian communities within our midst enriches the lives of all Americans. This legislation is necessary and certainly it is timely; it should be passed here today and enacted. I urge support of this legislation.

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 1 minute.

Mr. Speaker, there is an old saying that there is no limit to what can be done when it does not matter who gets the credit. I think that is certainly true of this legislation.

I wanted to underline what was said by the last speaker about the role that he played, the gentleman from Nebraska and the gentleman from North Dakota.

While there were many busy and active in this field, it was they who were aroused and angry and concerned about what they found out in visiting the Indian reservations. It was through the tenacity of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DASCHLE] and the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BEREUTER] in large part that we were able to get these three committees together and to get moving. I said they were tenacious; in fact, they were nags on occasion, in pressing forward with the legislation and I am proud that we are here today with them. This is an important bill, as has been outlined by the previous speakers.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. DASCHLE].

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for that backhanded compliment. I doubt that I have been called a nag on the floor before, but in this case it is a real compliment and I am grateful to the gentleman.

It has been a joy to work with the gentleman from Nebraska, as well as with the chairman of the Interior Committee, with the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE] and with the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON], and so many others, without whom this bill could not have been brought to the floor this afternoon.

This bill really recognizes something that has not been recognized for some time, that we need a new departure when it comes to the treatment of alcoholism and drug abuse. This represents our very best effort at that start. It is only a start, as has been already said on numerous occasions during the last few remarks.

Alcohol and drug abuse on the reservation is on the rise. It is as much a problem as it is a symptom of the problems, a symptom of a problem far more comprehensive, far more significant, far more deep-seated than anything we can possibly address in this bill, problems related to economic concerns, problems related to sociological concerns, problems related to the cultural difficulties and challenges that our tribes and our Indian people are now experiencing. Those problems need a far more comprehensive approach and innovative ways in which to address those problems that what this bill can provide; but this is, as I said, a start in dealing with one of the most traumatic and symptomatic problems that we are facing in the comprehensive difficulties experienced on the reservation today.

The problem as we have outlined it in this bill may not be completely addressed even as we hope for its success. I have had numerous conversations with tribal chairmen, some of whom have been very honest with me, some of whom have come to me and said, "Look, it's too late to worry about us. All the money that you can allocate will not cure the problem for many people who for generations have now become chemical and drug dependent. So don't worry about us; worry about our children."

One does not have to go very far to understand the message expressed by so many of our people on the reservation today: "Worry about our children." The studies, as has already been outlined by the gentleman from Nebraska, are compelling, if you watch nothing other than the statistics themselves. On the Pine Ridge Reservation, in South Dakota, a recent survey of students between 7th and 12th grades revealed that students experienced alcohol 82 percent of the times; marijuana, 71 percent of the instances; inhalants of all kinds, 30 percent of the students had experienced some kind of an inhalant; paint, cleaning fluids, glue, battery acid, you name it, 23 percent.

As a matter of fact, students in one out of four times indicated that they had attempted to consume Lysol as one way in which to use chemical highs of all kinds.

So it is that kind of statistical evidence that brings about the four cornerstone, comprehensive approach that we are attempting to provide in this bill.

First, the bill focuses on prevention. This legislation is designed to break the cycle of substance abuse so often passed on from parents to children. H.R. 1156 proposes the training of community health representatives, tribal leaders, Indian Health Service officials, and school counselors in prevention techniques. In addition, it proposes summer youth programs to identify constructive ways for Indian children to direct their energies and spend their recreational time.

Education is the second crucial element. Indian children need to understand, at a very early age, the debilitating consequences of substance abuse. This bill will ensure that a comprehensive educational program will be incorporated into the school curriculum. I cannot emphasize enough the impact a successful educational program will have on the problem of substance abuse.

H.R. 1156 also addresses the treatment and enforcement needs of the Indian community. It authorizes regional and community-based juvenile substance abuse treatment centers, emergency shelters for children of substance abusers, crisis intervention for juvenile substance abusers, and training for BIA law enforcement officials.

Finally, and most importantly, this bill emphasizes local control of substance abuse programs. Over and over in our hearings on this bill, Indian people indicated their willingness and ability to combat the situations as they exist in their communities. For that reason, we invested a great deal of control over these programs in local people. Each tribe will formulate an individualized tribal action plan [TAP] to focus available resources toward eliminating the unique causes and consequences of drug and alcohol abuse in their communities. Local Indian people know best what will prevent alcoholism and other substance abuse among young people on their reservations. It just won't work if some far removed Government official tries to force on a reservation a rigid program that does not meet their specialized needs.

Indian people have indicated a strong desire to combat the problems of substance abuse. They deserve a solid, comprehensive framework to work with. That is what this bill will do.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I thank Mr. BEREUTER, Chairman UDALL, Mr. KILDEE, Mr. WILLIAMS, and all the other Members who made vital contributions to the success of this effort, and I urge my colleagues to support passage of the bill.

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON], who was one of those Members whose efforts were important in developing the bill.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of H.R. 1156, the Indian Youth Alcohol Abuse Prevention Act. Indian youth alcoholism is one of the most serious health and social problems facing native Americans today. Its social and financial costs are extremely high—something dramatic must be done to address this tragedy. Few Indian communities have not been touched by alcohol related problems. The problem is particularly bad among Indian youth—they constitute the majority of the native American population. When alcohol and substance abuse affects the youngest part of the population, it has far-reaching consequences for the society as a whole. Too many Indian young people are experiencing problems with alcohol abuse—it is, in effect, destroying the future of many tribes by destroying its members in their prime.

This bill takes major steps toward eradicating Indian youth alcoholism problems—it requires the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the Indian Health Service to coordinate with tribes and tribal services to ensure that adequate and quality programs of alcohol and drug abuse prevention are readily available to Indian youth. This bill is long overdue. Frankly, the involved agencies have done a poor job of addressing Indian youth alcoholism—I feel that this bill will take up the slack by insisting that Indian youth alcoholism services are beefed up. I have seen the adverse consequences of Indian alcoholism—it is devastating to Indian individuals, families, tribes, and the surrounding communities. I am in strong support of H.R. 1156, and I urge all of my colleagues to support it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 1156, the Indian Youth Alcohol and Substance Abuse Prevention Act.

This legislation is a beginning, a starting initiative to deal with a national tragedy facing American Indian and Alaskan Native families.

For many years Indian People have been testifying before Congress and have identified alcoholism as the No. 1 problem affecting Indians and Alaskan Natives. And for years the Federal agencies who deal primarily with Indian programs have done little to address the need of education, prevention, and treatment in the area of alcohol and substance abuse among this Nation's native peoples. In response to this lack of attention on the part of current and past administrations, this legislation is before us today.

Of the minimal efforts that are currently ongoing in Indian country to deal with alcohol and substance abuse—the priority focus is on adults and in the area of detoxification and minimal treatment.

We need to direct energies into prevention and education and respond to the growing problems among Indian youth not only with alcoholism, but in the area of substance abuse.

H.R. 1156 will provide for education efforts in the area of alcohol and substance abuse within all Bureau of Indian Affairs schools, kindergarten through grade 12. This is a beginning. Congress still needs to address the fact that more than 80 percent of American Indian and Alaskan Native youth attend public schools and at a later time expand this legislation to reach these students.

This legislation sets up the mechanism for training and treatment. It will be incumbent on those in Congress to fight for the appropriations necessary.

I want to commend my colleagues, Mr. DASCHLE and Mr. BEREUTER for their leadership in the development of this legislation. Their persistent concern has resulted in this initiative before us today and their continued commitment will assure that these efforts continue.

I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 1156, the Indian Youth Alcohol and Substance Abuse Prevention Act of 1986, and commend the gentleman from Nebraska, Mr. BEREUTER; the gentleman from South Dakota, Mr. DASCHLE; the gentleman from Montana, Mr. WILLIAMS; and the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, Mr. UDALL, for their leadership in developing and bringing before the House this important legislation.

This legislation, which I have cosponsored, responds to the desperate need for increased Federal Government involvement in the growing problem of alcohol and substance abuse among American Indian youth. At the present time, the Indian Health Service [IHS] devotes only about 1 percent of its budget to alcohol and drug abuse programs with little of the portion directed toward Indian youth, and the Bureau of Indian Affairs has little involvement in dealing with this problem. The bill before us attempts to correct this situation by providing much needed direction, guidance, and coordination to Federal agencies involved to initiate comprehensive, coordinated actions to combat alcohol and substance abuse problems among Indian youth.

It is important to note that in this period of budget restraint, the legislation does not propose additional funding for new programs; rather it seeks to assure that existing programs are brought together in a coordinated matter to deal with the serious problem we face. Such an approach is essential in the overall war on drugs envisioned in House passage of the omnibus drug bill passed just last week. Accordingly, I urge my colleagues to support the bill.

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, as a cosponsor of H.R. 1156, I rise today in support of this important legislation.

This bill is a critical step in our effort to combat an alarming tragedy now plagueing our Nation's native Americans—alcohol and substance abuse. This problem has reached such devastating proportions that it is now the No. 1 health and social problem on American Indian reservations and in Alaskan villages. Recent statistics show that the alcoholism rate for native Americans is 451 percent higher than the national average. Clearly, this is a tragedy that cannot, and must not be allowed to continue.

This is not the first time Congress has undertaken efforts to address alcohol and substance abuse among native Americans. Yet, past efforts have not been successful. I believe H.R. 1156 will better address this problem.

The purpose and clear aim of this bill is to better coordinate services among all existing programs. Such coordination is essential if we are to provide a comprehensive approach to address this crisis. H.R. 1156 does not merely coordinate services among Federal agencies. It provides great assistance to Indian tribes to develop and implement their own programs to combat alcohol and substance abuse through the coordination of existing State, local, tribal, and private programs as well.

The focus of this measure is our native American youth. If we can effectively halt the spread of alcohol and substance abuse at this level, it will be a vital step in our effort to stop this tragedy from spreading deeper into the realm of native American society, and across our Nation as well.

H.R. 1156 is a modest but crucial step in our effort to address an overwhelming tragedy. I ask my colleagues to join me today in support of this legislation.

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I ask for a favorable vote.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. UDALL] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 1156) as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (S. 1298) to coordinate and expand services for the prevention, identification, and treatment of alcohol and drug abuse among Indian youth, and for other purposes, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Arizona?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

S. 1298

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Indian Juvenile Alcohol and Drug Abuse Prevention Act".

TITLE I—INTERDEPARTMENTAL AGREEMENT

SEC. 101. (a) The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall take action to enter into a written agreement with the Secretary of the Interior to—

(1) coordinate the Bureau of Indian Affairs and Indian Health Service Indian youth alcohol and drug abuse programs existing on the date of enactment of this Act and programs established by this Act;

(2) identify Federal, State, local, and private resources to combat Indian youth alcohol and drug abuse;

(3) delineate the responsibilities of the Bureau of Indian Affairs and the Indian Health Service to coordinate Indian youth alcohol and drug abuse-related services at the central, area, agency, and service unit levels;

(4) determine the scope of the Indian youth alcohol and drug abuse problem and its estimated financial and human costs;

(5) authorize the Bureau of Indian Affairs agency superintendents and education superintendents and the Indian Health Service service unit directors to enter into agreements described in section 102; and

(6) provide for biennial review of such agreement of the Secretary of Health and Human Services and the Secretary of the Interior.

(b)(1) The Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall consult with, and solicit the comments of, interested Indian tribes, Indian individuals, and Indian organizations, in developing the agreement under subsection (a).

(2) The agreement under subsection (a) shall be submitted to Congress and published in the Federal Register within 180 days of the date of enactment of this Act.

SEC. 102. (a) After publication in the Federal Register of the agreement entered into under section 101, any Indian tribe may submit a written request to the Secretary of Health and Human Services to coordinate resources and services related to Indian youth alcohol and drug abuse prevention, identification, education, treatment, and followup care.

(b) Within 90 days of receipt of a written request of any Indian tribe submitted under subsection (a), the Secretary of Health and Human Services, in consultation with the Secretary of the Interior, shall—

(1) enter into an agreement with such tribe to identify and coordinate the responsibilities and referral resources of all agencies and programs providing youth alcohol and drug abuse-related resources or services within the service area of such tribe; and

(2) review and modify such agreement, as necessary, to reflect changes in the availability of resources and services related to youth alcohol and drug abuse prevention, identification, education, treatment, and followup care.

TITLE II—EDUCATION

SEC. 201. (a) The Secretary of the Interior shall require Bureau of Indian Affairs schools, and schools operated under any contract entered into with the Bureau of Indian Affairs, to provide a program of instruction regarding alcohol and drug abuse to students in kindergarten and grades 1 through 12.

(b) The program required under subsection (a) shall be developed in consultation with the Indian tribe or tribes that will be served by such program and with appropriate education and health personnel at the local level.

(c) Schools providing programs of instruction under subsection (a) shall include family participation in the instruction.

SEC. 202. The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall, within 9 months of the date of enactment of this Act, begin publishing an alcohol and drug abuse newsletter in cooperation with the Department of the Interior and the Department of Education which shall report on Indian alcohol and drug abuse projects and programs. The newsletter shall be published once in each calendar quarter and shall be circulated without charge to schools, tribal offices, Bureau of Indian Affairs agency and area offices, Indian Health Service area and service unit offices, Indian Health Service alcohol programs, and other entities providing alcohol and drug abuse-related services or resources to Indian people.

SEC. 203. Subsection (a) of section 423 of the Indian Education Act (20 U.S.C. 3385b(a)) is amended by inserting "clinical psychology," after "medicine,".

TITLE III—FAMILY AND SOCIAL SERVICES

SEC. 301. (a) Any initial training program for new community health representatives and community health aids funded under the authority of the Act of November 2, 1921 (25 U.S.C. 13) shall include not less than 80 hours of instruction in the area of alcohol and drug abuse and shall include training in crisis intervention and family relations in the context of alcohol and drug abuse, youth alcohol and drug abuse, and the causes and effects of fetal alcohol syndrome.

(b)(1) The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall, either directly or through contract, make available instructions in the area of alcohol and drug abuse, including instruction in crisis intervention and family relations in the context of alcohol and drug abuse, youth alcohol and drug abuse, and the causes and effects of fetal alcohol syndrome to—

(A) personnel at schools operated under any contract entered into the Bureau of Indian Affairs,

(B) personnel of programs operated under any contract entered into with the Indian Health Service,

(C) personnel of the Bureau of Indian Affairs,

(D) personnel of the Indian Health Service, and

(E) supervisors of emergency shelters described in section 401(b)(1), who are responsible for, or work with Indian youth.

(2) Upon request, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall offer the instruction described in paragraph (1) to—

(A) members of school boards or designated school personnel who—

(i) govern, or are associated with, any school at which at least 20 percent of the enrollment consists of Indian students, and

(ii) are responsible for, or work with, Indian youth;

(B) urban Indian center personnel who are responsible for, or work with, Indian youth;

(C) judges of tribal courts and courts of Indian offenses;

(D) personnel associated with any tribal, State, or Federal Court who are responsible for, or work with, Indian youth;

(E) Bureau of Indian Affairs law enforcement personnel; and

(F) members of local community and tribal organizations or educational or health institutions responsible for, or working with, Indian youth.

(3) The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall provide the instruction described in paragraph (1)—

(A) in local Indian communities, whenever practicable, and

(B) within an integrated program for all participants.

(4) The Secretary of Health and Human Services—

(A) may provide the instruction described in paragraph (1) at no expense to the participants or to the employers of the participants, or

(B) may charge a fee for the provision of such instruction to a participant.

If such a fee is charged, the amount of such fee shall not exceed the direct costs incurred by the Secretary of Health and Human Services in providing such instruction to the participant.

(5) The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall coordinate the planning of the instruction described in paragraph (1) with the Secretary of the Interior.

TITLE IV—LAW ENFORCEMENT

SEC. 401. (a) The Secretary of the Interior, in consultation with the Attorney General of the United States, shall—

(1) promulgate guidelines under which any tribal or Federal law enforcement officer shall, for the benefit of any Indian youth arrested for an offense in which the abuse of alcohol or drugs was a contributing factor, place such Indian youth in an emergency shelter licensed under subsection (b), a community-based alcohol or drug abuse treatment facility, or any other medical or detention facility, and

(2) make these guidelines available to any state which exercises criminal jurisdiction over any part of Indian country pursuant to Federal law.

71-059 O-87-37 (Pt. 16)

(b)(1) By no later than the date that is 210 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Health and Human Services, with the concurrence of the Secretary of the Interior, shall establish standards for the licensing of temporary emergency shelters to house, whenever appropriate, Indian youth apprehended by any law enforcement officer for any offense in which the abuse of alcohol or drugs was a contributing factor.

(2)(A) Indian tribes may elect to adopt the standards prescribed by the Secretary of Health and Human Services under paragraph (1) and issue licenses to temporary emergency shelters that qualify under such standards. If an Indian tribe does not elect to perform the function of licensing temporary emergency shelters in accordance with such standards, such function shall be performed by the Secretary of Health and Human Services.

(B) Any license issued under subparagraph (A) shall be subject to renewal on an annual basis and, if an emergency shelter fails at any time to comply with the standards prescribed under paragraph (1), such license shall be revoked by the Indian tribe that issued such license or, if the Indian tribe fails to act, by the Secretary of Health and Human Services.

(3) An emergency shelter may be licensed under paragraph (2) only if the individual supervising such shelter has completed the training described in section 301(b)(1).

(4) The costs of constructing any emergency shelter are not authorized by this Act.

TITLE V—YOUTH ALCOHOL AND DRUG ABUSE TREATMENT AND REHABILITATION

SEC. 501. When the budget for the Indian Health Service for each fiscal year succeeding the fiscal year in which this Act is enacted is submitted to the Congress, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall submit to the appropriate committees of the Congress, a detailed estimate of the cost of providing, under existing authority, comprehensive Indian youth alcohol and drug abuse treatment services, including detoxification and counseling services, and followup care in Indian Health Service facilities and in health facilities operated under any contract entered into with the Indian Health Service.

SEC. 502. The Secretary of Health and Human Services, in consultation with Indian tribes, shall, within 1 year of the date of enactment of this Act, complete a study to determine—

(1) the size of the Indian youth population in need of residential alcohol and drug abuse treatment;

(2) the location of residential facilities at which such treatment is available or could be made available; and

(3) the cost of providing such treatment.

SEC. 503. (a)(1) The Secretary of Health and Human Services shall, in consultation with Indian tribes, identify and utilize whenever possible existing—

(A) facilities owned by the Federal Government or by an Indian tribe, or

(B) local community or private hospitals or other appropriate facilities, that would be suitable for use as residential alcohol and drug abuse treatment centers for Indian youth in order to meet the needs identified in the study conducted under section 502.

(2) Any facility described in paragraph (1) may be used under such terms and conditions as may be agreed upon by the Secretary of Health and Human Services and the agency, or the local government unit, having responsibility for the facility.

(3) The Secretary of Health and Human Services may, directly or by contract, renovate any facility described in paragraph (1). Any such renovation shall conform with such terms and conditions as have been agreed upon under paragraph (2).

(b) The Secretary of the Interior shall identify for the Secretary of Health and Human Services any existing Bureau of Indian Affairs facilities which may be suitable for residential alcohol and drug abuse treatment centers for Indian youth.

(c) If the facilities identified and utilized under subsection (a) or (b) do not adequately meet the treatment needs identified in the study conducted under section 502, the Secretary of Health and Human Services shall, within 2 years of the date of enactment of this Act, advise the appropriate committees of Congress as to the cost required to construct such facilities as the Secretary of Health and Human Services finds necessary to meet such treatment needs.

TITLE VI—DEFINITIONS, EFFECTIVE DATE, AND AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 601. For the purposes of this Act—

(1)(A) The term "Indian tribe" means any Indian tribe, band, nation, or other organized group or community of Indians, including any Alaskan Native village or regional or village corporation as defined in or established pursuant to the Alaska Claims Settlement Act (43 U.S.C. 1601, et seq.) which is recognized as eligible for special programs and services provided by the United States to Indians because of their status as Indians.

(B) For purposes of section 102, the term "Indian tribe" includes an urban center (within the meaning of section 4 of the Indian Health Care Improvement Act (25 U.S.C. 1603)).

(2) The term "youth" means any Indian under the age of 19.

(3) The term "drug abuse" includes, but is not limited to, abuse of inhalants and chemical substances.

(4) The term "service unit" means an administrative entity within the Indian Health Service serving one or more Indian tribes within a geographical area defined by regulation by the Indian Health Service.

(5) The term "service area" means the geographical area served by a service unit.

SEC. 602. The Secretary of the Interior and the Secretary of Health and Human Resources are authorized to prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

SEC. 603. (a) There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the receipts from any fees charged under section 301(b)(4)(B) for the provision of instruction shall, in lieu of being deposited in the general fund of the Treasury of the United States, be credited as a refund to the appropriation from which the expenses of such instruction were paid.

SEC. 604. The Secretaries shall allocate the monies appropriated under this Act on the basis of need.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. UDALL

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. UDALL moves to strike out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill, S. 1298, and to insert in lieu thereof the text contained in H.R. 1156, as passed by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title of the Senate bill was amended so as to read: "An act to coordinate and expand services for the prevention, identification, treatment, and follow-up care of alcohol and drug abuse among Indian youth, and for other purposes."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H.R. 1156) was laid on the table.

DECLARING THAT THE UNITED STATES HOLDS CERTAIN PUBLIC DOMAIN LANDS IN TRUST FOR THE PUEBLO OF ZIA

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 5167) to declare that the United States holds certain public domain lands in trust for the Pueblo of Zia, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 5167

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. LANDS HELD IN TRUST FOR PUEBLO OF ZIA.

(a) LANDS HELD IN TRUST.—All right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the surface and mineral estates (including oil and gas) of the following lands described in subsection (b) are hereby declared to be held by the United States in trust for the benefit and use of the Pueblo of Zia.

(b) LAND DESCRIPTION.—The lands referred to in subsection (a) are approximately 1,840 acres of land situated within Sandoval County, New Mexico, which is under the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Land Management of the Department of the Interior, more particularly described as follows:

Southeast quarter of the northeast quarter and the southeast quarter of Section 24, Township 15 North, Range 1 East, New Mexico Principal Meridian;

All of Section 25, Township 15 North, Range 1 East, New Mexico Principal Meridian;

South half of the southwest quarter and the southeast quarter of Section 26, Township 15 North, Range 1 East, New Mexico Principal Meridian;

All of Section 35, Township 15 North, Range 1 East, New Mexico Principal Meridian; and

Lot 1, and the southeast quarter of the northeast quarter, and the northeast quarter of the southeast quarter of section 3, Township 14 North, Range 1 East, New Mexico Principal Meridian.

SEC. 2. ADMINISTRATION OF LANDS HELD IN TRUST FOR PUEBLO OF ZIA.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Upon enactment of this Act and subject to the other provisions of this Act, the lands described in section 1 shall be administered in accordance with the laws generally applicable to property held in trust by the United States for Indian tribes.

(b) GROSS RECEIPTS FROM LANDS HELD IN TRUST.—All gross receipts (including, but not limited to, bonuses, rents, and royalties) which—

(1) are derived by the United States from any contract, permit, or lease relating to the surface or mineral estate in the lands described in section 1, and

(2) are received by the United States after the date of enactment of this Act, shall be administered in accordance with the laws generally applicable to receipts from property held in trust by the United States for Indian tribes.

SEC. 3. APPLICATIONS FOR MINERAL LEASES.

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, all applications for mineral leases involving the lands described in section 1, including oil and gas leases, pending on the date of enactment of this Act shall be rejected and the advance rental payments returned to the applicants.

SEC. 4. CERTAIN RIGHTS WITH RESPECT TO LANDS HELD IN TRUST FOR PUEBLO OF ZIA.

(a) VALID EXISTING RIGHTS.—Nothing in this Act shall deprive any person (other than the United States) of any lease, right-of-way, mining claim, grazing permit, water right, or other right or interest which such person may have in the surface or mineral estate of any lands described in section 1 on the day before the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) WATER RIGHTS.—The water rights appurtenant to the lands described in section 1 shall be those water rights that are appurtenant to such lands under State law on the day before the date of enactment of this Act. Nothing in this Act shall be construed to create or affect any water rights other than those that are appurtenant to such lands under State law on the day before the date of enactment of this Act.

(c) RIGHT-OF-WAY FOR 115-KV TRANSMISSION LINE.—(1) Nothing in this Act shall affect the right-of-way over any lands described in section 1 for a 115-KV transmission line by Plains Electric Generation and Transmission Cooperative, Inc., granted by the Bureau of Land Management of the Department of the Interior on April 18, 1961, and bearing identification number NM0149992.

(2) Plains Electric Generation and Transmission Cooperative, Inc., and its successors and assigns, shall be permitted to renew the right-of-way described in paragraph (1) under rules and regulations of the Secretary—

(A) to the same extent and in the same manner as would be permitted had this Act not been enacted, and

(B) for fees which are not greater than the fair value as determined by the Bureau of Land Management of the Department of the Interior.

(3) No charge, fee, or tax may be imposed by the Pueblo of Zia on any lands, facilities, activities, or revenues in connection with the right-of-way described in paragraph (1), except for fees charged with respect to any renewed right-of-way described in paragraph (2).

(d) OIL AND GAS LEASES.—(1) Nothing in this Act shall affect—

(A) the oil and gas lease issued on May 1, 1983, by the United States to Yates Petroleum Corporation, bearing Serial No. NM 55801,

(B) the oil and gas lease issued December 1, 1977, by the United States to Merle C. Chambers, Denver, Colorado, bearing Serial No. NM 31557,

(C) any other oil or gas leases that were valid and subsisting on the day before the date of enactment of this Act,

(D) any right, term, condition, and covenant (both expressed and implied) granted under any oil or gas lease referred to in subparagraph (A), (B), or (C), and

(E) reasonable access (including, but not limited to, rights of ingress and egress) across lands described in section 1 or which are otherwise owned by or under the control of the Pueblo of Zia insofar as it may be necessary to cross such lands in order to reach lands subject to any oil or gas lease referred to in subparagraph (A), (B), or (C).

(2) Notwithstanding section 2(a), the lands described in section 1 which are subject to the leases described in paragraph (1) shall continue to be administered by the Bureau of Land Management of the Department of the Interior in conformity with the laws and policies applicable to oil and gas operations on the public domain.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. MCCAIN] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 5167, the Zia Indian Lands bill. This bill, introduced by myself, Mr. LUJAN, and Mr. SKEEN, is to convey a small parcel of land to the Pueblo of Zia. The New Mexico delegation, in conjunction with the involved parties, worked cooperatively to develop this bill. Similar legislation has been introduced in the other body by New Mexico's Senators.

This bill conveys 1,840 acres of land, which presently forms an "island" within the current Pueblo of Zia boundaries, from the jurisdiction of the Bureau of Land Management [BLM] to the Bureau of Indian Affairs [BIA]. The land is to be held in trust by the BIA for the use and benefit of the Zia people. This tract of 1,840 acres has existed as virtually a "no man's land" for too long. The BLM has implemented no range management plan for it, because it has not had legal access to the land. The BIA has also taken no responsibility for the land because jurisdiction for it falls under the BLM. The Federal Government has therefore not adequately supervised or managed this acreage. Our bill resolves this problem by vesting the responsibility for the land to the Pueblo of Zia—the people who stand most to benefit from its use.

Historical documentation indicates that the area has been occupied by the Pueblo of Zia since the 1300's. Current information proves that the pueblo continues to actually, exclusively and continuously, use the land. There are eight known religious sites on the 1,840 acres, which Zia religious leaders regularly visit. Zia potter also continue to collect white, black, and red paints from a site on this land. I am convinced of the Zia's longstanding historic and religious attachment to the land. In addition, the pueblo's plan to use the land for additional grazing demonstrates their intentions to use the land for future generations.

The Pueblo of Zia already owns the surface rights to this "island" of land. There are pre-existing rights to the land in the form of two oil and gas leases owned by Yates Petroleum and a Mr. Merle Chambers. Plains Electric Generation and Transmission Cooperative also has a right-of-way for a transmission line. All of these legal rights are carefully protected in this legislation, and the pueblo and the affected groups have reached a compromise which is reflected in the language in this bill. The bill also states specifically that water rights appurtenant to the land shall be those rights existing under State law at the date of enactment of the bill and no new water rights are created or conveyed. Sandoval County, were the land is located, is in support of the proposed transfer. The State Director of the BLM has also stated in a letter to the congressional delegation that "we are unaware of any negative consequences that would result to the United States or third parties as the result of such transfers."

Mr. Speaker, this piece of legislation will be of great benefit to the Zia people. The result of a joint effort by the New Mexico congressional delegation, it will assist this tribe in attaining their full cultural heritage, and in developing their full economic potential. I strongly urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this bill, and the following bill, which is also sponsored by the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON], H.R. 4873, both understandably appear to our colleagues as very minor pieces of legislation.

I would like to point out that to the people who are involved in this, the Indians living there, it is a very important issue, and one that I am very appreciative that my colleague, the gentleman from New Mexico, would be concerned about, so that these two bills, which are very important to the financial well-being of the tribes, can be considered by this body today.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5167, a bill to "declare that the United States holds certain public domain lands in trust for the pueblo of Zia."

The Pueblo of Zia is a small poor Indian pueblo in north central New Mexico. Its people have lived there since the 14th century. H.R. 5167 would declare that 1,840 acres of Federal lands in New Mexico, currently leased by Zia and adjacent to the pueblo, be held by the United States in trust for the pueblo. Though there are no known mineral resources, all valid existing mineral rights are preserved.

While the administration has no objection to the transfer of the lands, it believes the pueblo could and should purchase these lands. The Interior Committee has determined that the transfer without sale would be an economic benefit to this poor pueblo and we support passage of H.R. 5167. I urge my colleagues to support the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 5167, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Mexico?

There was no objection.

AUTHORIZING CERTAIN TRANSFERS AFFECTING THE PUEBLO OF SANTA ANA IN NEW MEXICO

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4873) to authorize certain transfers affecting the Pueblo of Santa Ana in New Mexico, and for other purposes, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 4873

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

MINERAL RIGHTS HELD IN TRUST

SECTION 1. (a) All rights, title, and interests of the United States in the mineral estate of Section 19, Township 13 North, Range 4 East, New Mexico Principal Meridian, are hereby declared to be held by the United States in trust for the benefit of the Pueblo of Santa Ana.

(b) The United States hereby waives any claims or charges the United States may have or have assessed against the Pueblo of Santa Ana, including any claims for trespass, arising out of, or related to, the removal or exploitation by the Pueblo of Santa Ana of any minerals underlying Section 19, Township 13 North, Range 4 East, New Mexico Principal Meridian before the date of enactment of this Act.

(c) The Pueblo of Santa Ana and anyone acting on behalf of, or under the authority of, the Pueblo Santa Ana may enter upon any lands within Section 19, Township 13 North, Range 4 East, New Mexico Principal Meridian, for the purposes of mining or otherwise removing or exploiting any minerals in such lands only if—

(1) the Pueblo of Santa Ana holds legal title to the surface estate of such lands,

(2) legal title to the surface estate of such lands is held by any person for the benefit of the Pueblo of Santa Ana, or

(3) the person holding legal title to the surface estate of such lands provides written consent for such entry.

ADDITIONAL LANDS HELD IN TRUST; TECHNICAL AMENDMENTS

SEC. 2. (a) Public Law 95-498 is amended by striking out 'That all right" after the enacting clause and inserting in lieu thereof "That (a) all right".

(b) Subsection (a) of the first section of Public Law 95-498 is amended—

(1) by striking out the comma after "northwest quarter" in the nineteenth line of the paragraph relating to Section 23, Township 13 North, Range 3 East, New Mexico Principal Meridian (92 Stat. 1673),

(2) by striking out "Rec. PP CL 10/10/62 and" in the paragraph relating to such Section 23,

(3) by striking out "northeast quarter, northeast quarter" in the fourth line of the paragraph relating to Section 25, Township 13 North, Range 3 East, New Mexico Principal Meridian (92 Stat. 1673) and inserting in lieu thereof "northeast quarter, southeast quarter",

(4) by srtiking out "7, 8 and bed" in the paragraph relating to Section 9, Township 13 North, Range 4 East, New Mexico Principal Meridian (92 Stat. 1674) and inserting in lieu thereof "7 and bed",

(5) by inserting the following new paragraph after the paragraph relating to Section 6, Township 14 North, Range 3 East, New Mexico Principal Meridian (92 Stat. 1674): "Section 36:

Lots 1, 4, 8, 9,

Northeast quarter, northeast quarter,", and

(6) by inserting the following new paragraph after the paragraph relating to section 31 of Township 14 North, Range 4 East (92 Stat. 1675)": "Section 32:

Southwest quarter, southwest quarter southeast quarter,". (c) Section 4 of Public Law 95-498 is amended—

(1) by striking out "Nothing in this" in subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof "(1) Nothing in this", and

(2) by adding at the end of subsection (a) the following new paragraph:

"(2) The United States retains an easement of access for the purpose of operating and maintaining the Jemez Canyon Dam upon existing rights-of-way over the lands that are declared to be held in trust of the benefit of the Pueblo of Santa Ana under this Act. The Pueblo of Santa Ana shall enjoy full use of such rights-of-way to the extent such use does not interfere with the reasonable operation and maintenance of the Jemez Canyon Dam.".

(d) Subsection (a) of section 7 of Public Law 95-498 is amended by striking out "2004.05 acres" and inserting in lieu thereof "1678.05".

(e) Lots 7 and 8, section 5, Township 14 North, Range 3 East, N.M.P.M. containing 18.04 acres more or less, are hereby declared to be held in trust by the United States for the exclusive benefit of the Pueblo of Zia.

EXCHANGE OF LANDS

SEC. 3. (a)(1) Notwithstanding the provisions of the Act of August 19, 1935 (49 Stat. 659, chapter 559) or of the patent issued thereunder (Patent No. 1079219), the Regents of the University of New Mexico are hereby authorized to convey to the United States, and the United States shall accept in trust for the benefit of the Pueblo of Santa Ana, all or any part of the following tracts of land, which were patented to such Regents under authority of the Act of August 19, 1935 (49 Stat. 659, chapter 559): Lots 7, 8, and 9 and the Northwest quarter of Section 30, Township 13 North, Range 4 East, New Mexico Principal Meridian, New Mexico, containing 218.3 acres, more or less.

(2) Upon the conveyance of any portion of the lands described in paragraph (1) to the United States in trust for the benefit of the Pueblo of Santa Ana, the restriction that the lands described in paragraph (1) be used for archeological purposes only, which is contained in the patent conveying the lands described in paragraph (1) to the Regents of the University of New Mexico pursuant to the Act of August 19, 1935 (49 Stat. 659, chapter 559), shall cease to be applicable to the portion of the lands described in paragraph (1) that is conveyed to the United States in trust for the benefit of the Pueblo of Santa Ana.

(3) If the Pueblo of Santa Ana determines to develop those lands conveyed under paragraph (1) that are located within 100 yards of the boundary of the Coronado State Monument archeological site, the Pueblo of Santa Ana shall—

(A) meet, and confer in good faith, with representatives of the Museum of New Mexico with respect to the potential adverse impacts of such proposed development on the Coronado State Monument archeological site, in order to try to insure that any development of that portion of such lands is consistent with the existing use of such Monument;

(B) consider all mitigation measures proposed by the Museum of New Mexico that lessen the adverse impact of the proposed development and preserve the aesthetic and related values associated with such Monument's archeological resources; and

(C) to the maximum extent practicable and consistent with the development plan of the Pueblo of Santa Ana, take all reasonable measures that will mitigate any adverse impacts of the proposed development on that portion of such lands.

(b) The Pueblo of Santa Ana is hereby authorized to convey to the Regents of the University of New Mexico, and the Regents of the University of New Mexico are hereby authorized to accept from the Pueblo of Santa Ana, a parcel of land within the El Ranchito Grant owned by the Pueblo of Santa Ana pursuant to Patent No. 84386, dated October 18, 1909, in exchange for the lands conveyed to the Pueblo of Santa Ana under subsection (a).

(c)(1) By no later than the date that is 60 days after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of the Interior shall publish in the Federal Register the exact legal descriptions of the parcels to be conveyed under subsections (a) and (b), as such parcels are described by the terms of the Settlement Agreement agreed to by the Pueblo of Santa Ana, the Regents of the University of New Mexico, the United States of America, the State of New Mexico, the Museum of New Mexico, and the Park and Recreation Division of the New Mexico State Natural Resources Division on November 12, 1985.

(2) The conveyances authorized under subsections (a) and (b)—

(A) shall be made in accordance with the Settlement Agreement described in paragraph (1), and

(B) shall be made only after the legal descriptions of all lands to be conveyed under such subsections have been published in accordance with the requirements of paragraph (1).

(d) Upon the completion of the conveyances authorized herein, the south boundary of the Santa Ana Pueblo Reservation shall be extended to the south so as to include the land conveyed to the Pueblo of Santa Ana.

GENERAL PROVISIONS

SEC. 4. (a)(1) Nothing in this Act shall deprive any person (other than the United States) of—

(A) any existing right of use, possession, contract right, interest, or title which that person may have in any of the trust lands within the purview of this Act, or

(B) any existing right of access to public domain lands over and across such trust lands.

(2) All existing mineral leases involving lands declared to be held in trust by this Act, including oil and gas leases, which may have been issued or approved pursuant to any other Federal law prior to the date of enactment of this Act shall remain in force and effect in accordance with the provisions of such other law.

(3) Notwithstanding any other provisions of law, all applications for mineral leases involving lands declared to be held in trust by this Act, including oil and gas leases, pending on the date of enactment of this Act shall be rejected and the advance rental payments returned to the applicants.

(b) Subject to the provisions of subsection (a), any property held in trust by reason of this Act for the benefit of the Pueblo of Santa Ana shall be administered in accordance with the laws and regulations applicable to other property held in trust by the United States for the Indian tribe of the Pueblo of Santa Ana.

SEC. 5. The second sentence of subsection (a) of section 1 of the Act approved August 9, 1955 (69 Stat. 539) is amended by inserting the term "the Pueblo of Santa Ana (with the exception of the lands known as the 'Santa Ana Pueblo Spanish Grant')" after the words "the Dania Reservation,".

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). Is a second demanded?

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. McCAIN] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON].

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 4873, the Santa Ana omnibus land bill. This bill, introduced by myself, Mr. LUJAN and Mr. SKEEN for the people of Santa Ana Pueblo in New Mexico, is the result of a collaborative effort by the entire New Mexico congressional delegation. A similar version of H.R. 4873 is under consideration in the other body.

This bill is one that the Santa Ana people and the New Mexico congressional delegation have been working together on for several years. The bill has provisions to:

First, convey to Santa Ana Pueblo mineral interests in a 494-acre tract of land which the pueblo purchased from private land owners. This 494-acre tract contains good quality gravel, which, when restored to Santa Ana, would enable them to resume their gravel enterprise, an important economic development endeavor for the tribe.

Second, clarify pueblo boundary descriptions discovered to be in error. These corrections were confirmed by the Southern Pueblo Agency of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, who assisted in preparing the technical amendments addressing them.

Third, authorized an exchange of lands between the Santa Ana Pueblo and the University of New Mexico in order to resolve a longstanding trespass problem. The settlement states that the pueblo would relinquish 26.57 acres along the east side of Coronado Park and Monument to the University of New Mexico, in exchange for the University giving to them 120 acres west of the park and monument and two 4-year tuition scholarships each year for a total of 5 years to qualified Santa Ana students.

This provision solves several problems at the same time—it clears up previous troubles with trespass, which caused a strain between the pueblo, Coronado Park and Monument and the university; it also ensures that 10 deserving qualified Santa Ana students would get much needed educational assistance. Congressional action is necessary to authorize this exchange agreement, which has already been signed by the Governor's office; the natural resources department of New Mexico; the U.S. attorney's office; the Bureau of Indian Affairs; the pueblo of Santa Ana; the University of New Mexico; and the Museum of New Mexico.

Mr. Speaker, the members of the New Mexico congressional delegation worked together on H.R. 4873, for the benefit of the people of Santa Ana Pueblo. This bill addresses a number of the problems experienced by Santa Ana, as they strive for economic self-sufficiency and self-determination. I urge all of my colleagues to support this bill. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, I especially wish to thank the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. McCAIN] for his assistance on this bill and for listening to the people in the many hearings held on this subject.

Mr. McCAIN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4873, a bill for the Santa Ana Pueblo of New Mexico. The bill would declare that mineral rights to 494 acres owned by the Federal Government but on lands in trust for the pueblo, be held in trust for the pueblo of Santa Ana, transfer 18 acres from Santa Ana to the pueblo of Zia, settle a longstanding dispute between the pueblo and the University of New Mexico concerning the Coronado State Monument, and grant long-term leasing authority to the pueblo.

I view this bill as a technical corrections bill. The transfer of mineral rights was necessitated by the decision in Watt versus Western Nuclear Corp., in which it was decided that sand and gravel are minerals for Federal law. At the time of the previous transfer of land to the pueblo, BLM did not consider sand and gravel a mineral, and the mineral rights were unnecessary. The bill also corrects other errors made in the past, and I urge my colleagues to support the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4873, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Mexico?

There was no objection.

PROHIBITING CONSTRUCTION OF DAMS WITHIN NATIONAL PARKS AND MONUMENTS

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4089) to prohibit the construction of dams within national parks and monuments, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 4089

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. RESTRICTION OF DAMS IN PARKS AND MONUMENTS.

(a) No individual, corporation, partnership, Federal, or State agency, political subdivision or any other legal entity may commence construction of—

(1) any new dam or other new impoundment within the external boundaries of a national park or monument, except that any such project may be developed by the National Park Service if deemed necessary to meet the requirements for which the park or monument was established and if the project would not degrade the resources within such park or monument; or

(2) any new dam or other new impoundment which will, after the date of enactment of this Act, inundate land within the external boundaries of a national park or monument.

For purposes of this section: (i) the term "new dam or other new impoundment" means any facility for impoundment or obstruction of water, the construction of which commences after the enactment of this Act and; (ii) the term "inundate" shall mean the formation of a body of water upstream from a dam or impoundment caused by construction or operation of the dam or impoundment which permanently or intermittently covers lands within the boundary of any national park or national monument.

(b) The prohibition contained in this section shall be in addition to, and not in lieu of, any other prohibition or restriction on activities within the boundaries of national parks and monuments.

SEC. 2. YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK.

Notwithstanding any other provision of law, no Federal lands may be used for the expansion of the capacity of any reservoir which is located within the boundaries of Yosemite National Park, unless Congress enacts specific statutory authorization after the date of the enactment of this Act for such expansion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from California [Mr. LAGOMARSINO] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO].

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, a number of water resources projects exist within units of the National Park System. Eighteen of the forty-eight national parks have 108 dams. Twelve projects within national parks or monuments were built by the Bureau of Reclamation. Most of these projects were built many years ago and project age in addition to safety questions combined with the explosion of requests for adding or expanding hydropower has caused considerable concern that these projects may be expanded, or new projects may be permitted by the Federal Energy Regulatory Commission to the detriment of the natural and cultural resources of the national parks and monuments.

The Department of the Interior asserts that the 1921 amendment to the Federal Power Act (16 U.S.C. 797a) prohibits any water resources project within the boundary of a national park or monument and that the 1970 General Authorities Act provides for public trust of park unit resources which is interpreted to extend that prohibition to other units of the park system. Such general prohibition could, of course, be overridden by an act of Congress.

Although the Department of the Interior maintains such authorities exist based on the 1921 and 1970 laws, a number of water resources development projects are under study or permit that affect national parks or monuments.

For example, at Yosemite National Park, an application has been made for a permit to develop a hydropower project on the Merced River outside of the park where the pool formed by the dam would inundate portions of the river within the park. A third powerhouse for the Hetch-Hetchy system is currently under construction by the city of San Francisco. The operation of this powerhouse will divert flows from several miles of the Tuolumme River within the boundary of Yosemite National Park. In addition, the city of San Francisco has indicated it believes it has the authority to raise the Hetch-Hetchy Dam and further inundate lands within Yosemite. Even in my home State of Minnesota, Voyager National Park faced water project development that would adversely affect this great resource.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 4089, which was introduced by my very good friend and colleague on the Interior Committee RICK LEHMAN, addresses the issue of protecting the resources of our great national parks and monuments from inundation by water projects. The bill simply would prohibit construction of a new dam within the boundary of any national park or monument and also prohibit construction of a dam that would back water into any park or monument. The amendment would also prohibit the use of any Federal lands in any way to expand any reservoir within the boundary of Yosemite National Park.

Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the gentleman from California, Congressman RICK LEHMAN, for his dedication to the ideals of protecting the great national treasures that we have in our national parks. RICK LEHMAN is an outstanding and courageous legislator who consistently has tackled tough problems that affect our public lands.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all of my colleagues to support this bill to protect national parks.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4089. As amended by the committee, this bill would prohibit the construction of new dams or other new water impoundments within, or which would inundate, national parks and national monuments. The bill would also prohibit the expansion of any existing reservoir within Yosemite National Park. However, it in no way affects any other existing water development projects within, or which inundate, national parks and monuments.

As the ranking member of the Subcommittee on National Parks and Recreation, I certainly support a general prohibition on the construction of new dams in national parks and monuments. Through their designation, Congress has determined that the national resources of these areas should be protected and preserved in the future. This legislation is intended to clearly establish congressional intent in this regard.

While the committee heard testimony by the Park Service asserting that it had the authority to restrict various types of water development within various units of the National Park System, the committee took no position regarding these assertions. Rather, it was the committee's intent to maintain existing law on this subject, except for the prohibition on new dams contained in this bill. I might also point out that this prohibition is intended to apply only to national parks and national monuments which are so designated by the Congress or, in certain cases, established by the President, and not to any other units of the National Park System. Whenever Congress makes such a designation, it may only be changed by an act of Congress.

I believe the committee amendments substantially improved this bill by limiting the restrictions in the bill to a prohibition on new dam development in national parks and monuments. I want to commend the sponsor of the bill, the gentleman from California [Mr. LEHMAN] for working with the other interested members of the committee in an effort to alleviate their concerns with this legislation. I am pleased that the major differences were resolved and that the subcommittee chairman, Mr. VENTO, has moved this bill forward. I believe it will greatly assist in protecting the resources of our Nation's parks and monuments by providing a clear statutory ban on new water developments in these areas.

Mr. Speaker, I urge all of my colleagues to support and approve H.R. 4089.

□ 1350

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I yield 6 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LEHMAN].

Mr. LEHMAN of California. Mr. Speaker, 73 years ago the Congress of the United States debated whether or not the city of San Francisco ought to be granted the right to construct a massive hydroelectric system within Yosemite National Park. John E. Raker of Manteca, CA, introduced legislation to give the city land and rights of way within this most famous national park to dam the Tuolumne River to construct O'Shaughnessy Dam. After 12 years of discussion before Congress, Representative Raker prevailed and in 1913 the Raker Act became the law of the land.

Today, as Congress revisits the question of dams in national parks, I think it is very instructive to take a look back at what our predecessors and public officials had to say in 1913. That year was just 1 year before the San Francisco World's Fair. Proponents of the dam in Yosemite put forth the argument that this event clearly demonstrated the need for a dam in the park—never mind that the project would not be completed for another decade. Others harked back to the San Francisco earthquake and fire of 1906, saying that lack of water was one of the greatest causes of the fire.

Testimony before the House Public Lands Committee in 1913 was highly favorable to the proposal to dam Hetch Hetchy Valley in Yosemite. Secretary of the Interior Franklin Lane who had previously served as San Francisco's city attorney noted that:

If San Francisco does not get it (Hetch Hetchy Valley), someone else must; it is too precious a reservoir site to remain unused.

Mr. Fredrick H. Newell, Director of the Reclamation Service described his philosophy about a dam within Yosemite in these terms:

I have naturally come to the conclusion that there is nothing more beautiful than a well-built dam with a reservoir behind it.

San Francisco's city engineer, M.M. O'Shaughnessy wrote in his account of the Hetch Hetchy struggle that:

Construction of a dam would add to the scenic features of the country, that all objections of alleged nature lovers should be overruled.

As for Congressman Raker, he called the issue a question of—turning of what is now a barren canyon into a beautiful and exquisite lake.

On the other side of the issue was renowned naturalist John Muir and conservationists throughout the United States, farmers from the San Joaquin Valley who feared for their own water rights, and competing water suppliers to the city of San Francisco. Muir's battle cry became scripture for future generations. "Dam Hetch Hetchy!" he roared, "As well dam for water tanks the people's cathedrals and churches, for no holier temple has ever been consecrated by the heart of man." In spite of Muir's leadership, dam proponents carried the day. O'Shaughnessy Dam was completed in 1923, flooding almost 4,000 acres of Yosemite National Park and taking 6 million board feet of timber from the park during construction.

Mr. Speaker, in January 1986 I introduced H.R. 4089 to prohibit new dams in all national parks. As the Congressman who represents Yosemite National Park, I readily acknowledge that my very strong feeling on this issue grows out of my experience with the Hetch Hetchy project. Since coming to Congress, I have engaged in an ongoing struggle with the city of San Francisco over the city's modern day plans to raise O'Shaughnessy Dam—without new congressional review, under the alleged authority of that old 1913 Raker Act.

Mr. Speaker, the damming of Yosemite National Park is just the most well-known instance of flooding a national treasure. As my distinguished subcommittee chairman pointed out, of 48 designated national parks, 18 of them contain 108 dams of various size and capacity. It is time to draw the line on new dam construction in our national parks. It is time to replace the policies of 1913 with the priorities of 1986.

H.R. 4089 as amended does only two things. First, it prohibits the construction of new dams in all national parks and monuments. Second, it requires new congresssional authorization to use any Federal lands within Yosemite National Park to expand existing reservoirs.

H.R. 4089 as amended applies only to national parks and monuments, and to no other units of the Yosemite National System. It does not affect water rights in any way whatsoever. It does not turn the clock back on hydroelectric facilities which already exist within our national parks.

We cannot and we will not undo almost 100 years of water and power development in our national parks, but we must build a new record in the future. We must set forth a national policy which says that our national parks represent the very best of our American landscape and as such should be off-limits to new dam construction.

The choice before the House today is simple and straightforward. If my colleagues agree that our national parks and monuments should not host new dams such as the Hetch Hetchy facility in Yosemite National Park, I know you will vote with me in support of H.R. 4089.

Mr. Speaker, I worked closely with the majority and the minority on the House Interior and Insular Affairs Committee to take this important step to protect our national parks, and I would note that the bill passed without any opposition from the members of the Interior Committee. I wish to particularly commend the leadership of Chairman VENTO who stands very tall in this Congress for his unswerving efforts to defend and protect all resources of our National Park System. In addition. I am grateful to Congressmen LAGOMARSINO, STRANG, CRAIG, HANSEN, and CHENEY for their efforts to develop workable amendments to the original H.R. 4089. I also want to thank Representatives DALE KILDEE, SALA BURTON, and BARBARA BOXER for their courageous cosponsorship of my original bill.

I urge my colleagues to join with us and vote yes on H.R. 4089.

Mr. Speaker, I am submitting the following newspaper articles for the RECORD:

[From the Tribune, Sept. 9, 1986]

PROTECT YOSEMITE PARK

If McDonald's demanded the right to build its arch over Yosemite Valley, the nation would hoot derisively and Congress would send the fast-food chain packing.

But no one laughs when the city of San Francisco demands the right to flood hundreds of acres of the treasured park for its own profit. The city might have just that right under existing law, and it might have just that intention before the century is out.

That's only one good reason to support speedy passage of H.R. 4089, a bill introduced by Rep. Richard Lehman, D-Sanger, to halt construction of new hydro dams within national parks and monuments without prior congressional approval.

The bill would close some remarkable loopholes. Current law, for example, would allow the flooding of Grand Canyon to generate hydroelectric power. When Secretary of Interior Stuart Udall actually proposed such a project in 1966, the Sierra Club mounted its famous national ad campaign asking: "Should we also flood the Sistine Chapel so tourists can get nearer to the ceiling?"

In the ensuing furor, Udall took a boat trip down the canyon, discovered its exquisite beauty and reversed his decision. But only last year the Arizona Water Board determined that a new dam by the park on the Colorado River would be feasible, and a new secretary of Interior could authorize it.

Additions to existing dams also threaten the national heritage. A proposal to retrofit a dam in the Grand Tetons with power generators would require stringing power lines throughout the park, for example. H.R. 4089 leaves such decisions to the discretion of the Interior Department.

* * * The provision aims to prohibit San Francisco from raising the level of the O'Shaughnessy Dam on the Tuolumne River, which floods nearly 4,000 acres of Hetch Hetchy Valley in the park interior.

The original dam proposal in 1903 shocked Sierra Club founder John Muir. "Dam Hetch Hetchy?" the great outdoorsman asked. "As well dam for water tanks the people's cathedrals and churches; for no holier temple has ever been consecrated to the heart of man."

The city across the Bay eventually prevailed, winning statutory authority for the project in 1913 thanks to the influence of the new Interior secretary, a former San Francisco city attorney.

In the mid-1930s, violating a court order, the city expanded the existing 345-foot dam another 85 feet, raising its capacity by more than one-third to hold 117,000,000,000 gallons of water in order to generate more power for sale. By 1984 the city grossed $70 million a year from power sales to other public agencies.

Although city officials deny it, another expansion and additional flooding of pristine park lands may be coming down the road. A 1981 study of the Hetch Hetchy system recommended adding 50 feet to the dam's height, which would flood another 500 acres of wilderness lands and a half mile of river.

Mayor Dianne Feinstein vigorously opposes any congressional limits on the city's authority. To their credit, however, local members of Congress Sala Burton, D-San Francisco, and Barbara Boxer, D-Greenbrae, support H.R. 4089 in the national interest. These public spirited San Franciscans, like citizens elsewhere in the country, respect and would preserve the priceless lands * * *.

[From the Los Angeles Times, Sept. 2, 1986]

FOR SHAME, SAN FRANCISCO

The annals of Western water development teem with perfidy and connivance, but the Owens Valley will always enjoy a special aura of infamy. Mention the words water and theft in one breath, and someone will follow with Los Angeles and Owens Valley in the next. The legend sometimes is grander than the facts. Los Angeles at least paid for the water rights that it got from valley ranchers three-quarters of a century ago. Maybe not fair and square, but with real money.

The Owens Valley legacy shadows the Department of Water and Power everywhere. The city is constantly in the courts defending its eastern Sierra water rights. It has given up some water to environmental considerations, and faces the loss of more.

Rarely, however, is the City of San Francisco called on to defend, atone or repent for its own rapacious water venture of the early 20th Century into the heart of one of the nation's most hallowed natural areas: Yosemite National Park. San Francisco did not just take the water from an arid ranching area. With Congress' complicity in 1913, it dared to inundate Yosemite's remarkable Hetch Hetchy Valley on the Tuolumne River. Unflooded and accessible, Hetch Hetchy would be treasured as one of the world's great natural areas, a region of towering rock walls and dashing waterfalls. Now, behind a locked watergate, it is the forgotten Yosemite of America.

In his losing battle to save Hetch Hetchy, naturalist John Muir raged: "Dam Hetch Hetchy? As well dam for water tanks the people's cathedrals and churches, for no holier temple has ever been consecrated to the hearts of man." Indeed, there are those who dream of breaching O'Shaughnessy Dam and allowing Nature to one day restore Hetch Hetchy to its former magnificence.

But there is no such talk around city hall in San Francisco. In fact, there are mumblings about building O'Shaughnessy Dam even higher and flooding Hetch Hetchy even deeper to bring even more water to the Bay Area and generate more electric power. Not right now, perhaps. But sometime. Imagine even thinking such a thing, particularly in San Francisco—the home of the Sierra Club, the proud Athens of the conservation movement and the hotbed of opposition to any export of surplus water from Northern California to the south.

This is not just a pipe dream of engineers. The mayor herself, Dianne Feinstein, has written Congress to protest a bill that would require congressional approval for the expansion of any public-works projects in national parks. The measure, by Rep. Richard H. Lehman (D-Sanger), makes specific reference to the Hetch Hetchy project.

In her letter the mayor said, "The only (her emphasis) economically feasible source for water for their future needs is the Hetch Hetchy system, utilizing water rights previously granted for this purpose." The future needs are not San Francisco's, but those of neighboring counties that receive water service from the city.

Feinstein added, "The present arrangements have served the national interest in Yosemite National Park and the people of the Bay Area well for half a century, and there is no reason to drastically change them now."

Well, the system certainly has served San Francisco well. More than half its water is sold to San Mateo, Santa Clara and Alameda counties, and the city reaps considerable benefit from the electric power generated as the water courses from the Sierra. But there are alternatives to bringing more water directly to the Bay Area via the Hetch Hetchy aqueduct. For one, San Francisco could let the water flow naturally down the Tuolumne, now declared a wild and scenic river, and into the Sacramento-San Joaquin Delta. Then the city could take the water from the delta, as do most other major users in both Northern and Southern California.

But dam Hetch Hetchy even higher? For shame, San Francisco. Congress cannot atone for the infamy of 1913. But it can promptly pass the Lehman bill and therefore be certain that the infamy is not compounded.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to point out that I was, in going through the record of the 1913 debate on the Raker Act, that indeed there were some that were looking into the future, far away in terms of this issue.

One of them was another gentleman from Minnesota, then a Congressman in his body, Mr. Steenerson, who pointed out the folly of indeed doing the damming of Hetch Hetchy that did occur, and of course brings the gentleman from California [Mr. LEHMAN] to the floor today with such a passionate statement, and such an outstanding statement with regard to the damage that has occurred in the magnificent Sierra Nevada in California that he is trying to protect; and which of course has been protected by virtue of being made part of Yosemite National Park.

This gentleman from Minnesota Mr. Steenerson in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, points out that while our State is rather a young one—at that time in 1913—that we have great values in terms of conservation; and points out the significant damage that did occur as a result of the damming of Hetch Hetchy.

He points out the national interest in this matter, not just the local interest, that seems to prevail as a significant concern with regard to this.

Mr. Speaker, I pointed out in my earlier statement that there are many water projects that are being proposed. One such water project is actually being proposed in the Voyageurs National Park in northern Minnesota.

This legislation will prevent new projects, new dams that would innundate the conservation areas, the national parks and monuments specifically. This legislation would prevent that type of damage, and I urge my colleagues to work with us and to enact this measure so that we do not have the occurrence of further damage to these magnificent resources, which we have set aside for perpetuity.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4089, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks, and to include extraneous matter, on H.R. 4089, the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

DESIGNATING THE SANTA FE TRAIL AS A NATIONAL HISTORIC TRAIL

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4794) to amend the National Trails System Act to designate the Santa Fe Trail as a national historic trail, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 4794

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. DESIGNATION.

(a) DESIGNATION.—Section 5(a) of the National Trails System Act (16 U.S.C. 1244(a)) is amended by adding the following new paragraph at the end thereof:

"(14) The Santa Fe National Historic Trail, a trail of approximately 950 miles from a point near Old Franklin, Missouri, through Kansas, Oklahoma, and Colorado to Santa Fe, New Mexico, as generally depicted on a map entitled 'The Santa Fe Trail' contained in the Final Report of the Secetary of the Interior pursuant to subsection (b) of this section, dated July 1976. The map shall be on file and available for public inspection in the office of the Director of the National Park Service, Washington, District of Columbia. The trail shall be administered by the Secretary of the Interior. No lands or interests therein outside the exterior boundaries of any federally administered area may be acquired by the Federal Government for the Santa Fe Trail except with the consent of the owner thereof. Before acquiring any easement or entering into any cooperative agreement with a private landowner with respect to the trail, the Secretary shall notify the landowner of the potential liability, if any, for injury to the public resulting from physical conditions which may be on the landowner's land. The United States shall not be held liable by reason of such notice or failure to provide such notice to the landowner. So that significant route segments and sites recognized as associated with the Santa Fe Trail may be distinguished by suitable markers, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to accept the donation of suitable markers for placement at appropriate locations.".

(b) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—Section 10(c)(2) of such Act (16 U.S.C. 1249(c)(2)) is amended by striking out "(13)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(14)".

SEC. 2. KOSCIUSZKO TRAIL STUDY.

Section 5(c) of the National Trails System Act (16 U.S.C. 1244(c)) is amended by adding at the end there of the following new paragraph:

"(31) Kosciuszko Trail, extending from Vermont to South Carolina in connection with the military sites fortified by General Thaddeus Kosciuszko during the War of Independence.".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from California [Mr. LAGOMARSINO] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO].

□ 1400

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to bring to the House H.R. 4794, introduced by our colleague BILL RICHARDSON and a bipartisan contingent of House Members. The legislation, as amended, would amend the National Trails System to designate the Santa Fe Trail as a national historic trail and includes several provisions relating to the administration of the trail. Further, as amended, the bill authorizes a study, under section 5(c) of the National Trails System of the proposed Kosciuszko Trail.

The designation of the Santa Fe Trail as a national historic trail is worthy of our support. From 1822 to 1880, the trail, extending some 950 miles from Missouri to Santa Fe, NM, was one of America's most important commercial routes, established to expedite trade with the Spanish of the Southwest. It also served as a major military and governmental link with the newly acquired territories of the Southwestern United States.

Many historic sites associated with the Old West are found along the Santa Fe Trail, with five of these sites now units of the National Park System. Today because of development and the weathering process, much of the actual trail is obliterated, with only small scattered segments remaining where the original trail ruts can be seen. Nevertheless, the Santa Fe Trail provides significant historical and interpretative value to present and future generations interested in this unique piece of Americana.

The legislation before the House today will further a cooperative effort at the Federal, State, and local levels to provide for the interpretation, use, and management of the Santa Fe Trail. In keeping with this cooperative spirit, H.R. 4794, as amended, directs that no land or interests in land outside of a federally administered area may be acquired without the consent of the landowner. This is likely to be a moot point since no acquisition program is contemplated by the Department of the Interior for the Santa Fe Trail. The bill further contains language authorizing the acceptance from public-spirited individuals and organizations of suitable markers for placement along the trail.

To address the concern with possible liability associated with public access to private land along the trail, language was incorporated into H.R. 4794 directing the Secretary, prior to entering into a cooperative agreement or acquiring interests in land, to provide the affected landowner with a one-time notice of the potential liability, if any, associated with public access to the land in question. The provision is not intended to imply a Federal indemnification and the legislation stipulates that the United States shall not be held liable by reason of such notice or the lack thereof.

Finally, H.R. 4794 includes language adopted in committee authorizing a study of the Kosciuszko Trail under section 5(c) of the National Trails System Act. The proposed trail would extend from Vermont to South Carolina in connecton with the military sites fortified by Gen. Thaddeus Kosciuszko during the War of Independence.

Mr. Speaker, I believe much of the American public would be surprised to learn that the Santa Fe Trail is not already a national historic trail. When the settling of the Old West is recalled, the Santa Fe Trail and the role it played in that history come prominently to mind. The Santa Fe Trail has already been immortalized in song, word, and films. Passage by the House today of this measure conferring national historic trail status will be a fitting act in preserving this significant piece of American history.

I urge adoption of H.R. 4794.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4794. As the chairman of the subcommittee has explained, this bill would designate the 950-mile Santa Fe Trail as a national historic trail. The Santa Fe Trail, which originates in Missouri and crosses the States of Kansas, Oklahoma, and Colorado before terminating in Santa Fe, NM, was an important commercial route in our Nation's history. In addition, it provided a critical military and governmental link between the Eastern United States and the new territories in the Southwest.

Unfortunately, only a few small segments remain where the original trail ruts can be seen. However, the trail does pass through several national park units, including national historic sites and national monuments.

Mr. Speaker, there is no question that the Santa Fe Trail meets the criteria for national historic trails established under the National Trails System Act. In addition, H.R. 4794 was improved by several amendments in the committee process. These include a prohibition on condemnation of private lands or interests outside federally administered areas, and a requirement that, prior to entering into a cooperative agreement or acquiring an interest for the trail, the Secretary of the Interior must provide the affected landowner with a notice of the potential liability associated with public access of his land. This notice is not a Federal indemnity, but rather, a means to inform the landowner of potential liability problems so that he may, if he desires, seek appropriate legal counsel on the matter. I believe these are important amendments which improve this bill and make it acceptable to all involved parties.

In addition, an amendment was adopted in committee to authorize a study of the Kosciuszko Trail for possible designation as a national historic trail. I might point out that Gen. Thaddeus Kosciuszko, who is known for the military sites he fortified during the War of Independence, is already recognized in the National Park System through a national memorial located at Independence National Park in Philadelphia, PA. However, I do not oppose allowing this study to go forward since Congress will have the opportunity to review the study following its completion and determine if a trail designation is appropriate at that time.

I would like to commend three of the sponsors of this legislation, the gentleman from Colorado and New Mexico, Mr. STRANG, Mr. BROWN, and Mr. RICHARDSON, as well as the gentleman from New Mexico, Mr. LUJAN, for their interest in the Santa Fe Trail and their efforts to resolve the differences on this bill and move it forward. I would also like to commend the subcommittee chairman, Mr. VENTO, for acting promptly on this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I believe this is an excellent bipartisan bill which is also supported by the administration. Therefore, I urge all of my colleagues to support H.R. 4794.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON], the sponsor and architect of this measure.

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to thank my distinguished colleague from the great State of Minnesota, the chairman of the Subcommittee on National Parks and Recreation, the Honorable BRUCE VENTO, for his interest and outstanding leadership role in the Development of the Santa Fe national historic trail bill. I would also like to thank the ranking minority member of the subcommittee, the Honorable BOB LAGOMARSINO, and my colleague from the great State of Colorado, the Honorable HANK BROWN, for their active role in this legislation.

The bipartisan effort behind H.R. 4794, signals a spirit of cooperation toward an effort that will give the Santa Fe Trail its proper place in history and promote tourism for the States that are involved. This legislation has a wide base of support from: 15 original cosponsors, the administration, States, local communities near the trail, historians, chambers of commerce, other national trail associations, and the ranching community has no objections. I understand that the gentlelady from the great State of Kansas plans to introduce a companion bill over on the Senate side this week.

Mr. Speaker, there is great public interest and involvement in this legislation. Just this past weekend more than 230 historians, librarians, and history buffs from communities along the trail gathered for a 3-day seminar at Trinadad State Junior College in Colorado. One of the interesting conclusions that surfaced at this weekend seminar is that historical accounts of the trail do not give enough importance to the role of Hispanic merchants who traveled East from Santa Fe to purchase goods from merchants in Missouri and the East. It is especially appropriate for me to share this with my colleagues today as we celebrate Hispanic Heritage Week.

The opening of the Santa Fe Trail in 1821 marked the first of America's Great Trans-Mississippi Pathways to the West. The trail starts at a point near Old Franklin, MO, runs through Kansas, Oklahoma, and Colorado and on into Santa Fe, NM—approximately 950 miles. The Santa Fe Trail is unique and differed from the Oregon and California Trails in that it was a trail of commerce. The Santa Fe Trail was used to transport goods across the southern prairies to eager customers in what was then the Republic of Mexico's Far North. Within a short time, the Santa Fe Trade ballooned into a million-dollar-a-year business, pouring money and raw products into the State of Missouri and creating a minor economic boom in what had been a depressed area of the American frontier.

Mr. Speaker, so far, 19 sites along the Santa Fe Trail have been selected for inclusion in the National Historic Landmark Program—8 of those sites are in New Mexico. Marc Simmons, a constituent of mine, and the author of a book entitled, "Following the Santa Fe Trail," describes the kind of vacation experience that one might enjoy along the trail best: "If you are open, receptive, and courteous you will have a splendid opportunity to become acquainted with America at its grassroots."

The designation of the trail as a national historic trail and the study that will be conducted by the National Parks Service will go a long way toward providing the public with transportation routes to be able to get to the already identified historic sites. Mr. Chairman, last year alone, over 13,000 people visited the isolated Fort Union National Monument in my home State of New Mexico. According to the New Mexico Tourism Department, these visitors generated over $500,000 in gross receipts for the New Mexico travel industry. The State projects that through a national historic designation, these Fort Union visitors would extend their travel—visiting one or more of the Santa Fe Trail locations. Those increased visitations—with better trail sign posting—would generate more in the way of tourist dollars spent, providing a boost for local communities in northeast New Mexico. I am sure that a similar scenario would occur in the four other States that are part of the trail.

Mr. Speaker, the bill recognizes and respects current land use along the trail. After discussions with ranchers in the States involved, the legislation as amended to ensure that no lands or interests can be added to the trail without the consent of the owner and that there will be a notification to the landowner of any potential liability concerns if easement rights or cooperative agreements are entered into with private landowners. We even changed the starting point of the trail to Old Franklin, MO, after I received a letter from a gentleman from Howard County, MO, who wanted to ensure that Old Franklin was not left out of the designation process.

Mr. Speaker, I believe H.R. 4794 will go a long way in developing the concept of tourism as economic development. I hope that those of us who have a spirit of adventure will support this effort to make the Santa Fe national historic trail bill part of the list of accomplishments of the 99th Congress for the enjoyment of all Americans.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. MONTGOMERY). The gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON] has consumed 5 minutes.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I want to acknowledge and thank the gentleman from New Mexico for his work, and all of those who cosponsored this legislation with the gentleman.

The gentleman from New Mexico has an impressive record in terms of legislation being enacted by this committee. The gentleman is very prolific, in this case especially recognizing an important designation which is meaningful to our Nation, and I commend the gentleman for his excellent effort and work on this measure.

Mr. BROWN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to speak in support of designating the historic Santa Fe Trail as a component of the National Trails System.

The Santa Fe Trail, which began in the early 1880's, was the route traveled by American traders transporting goods to Mexico, their neighbors to the south. Beginning in Independence, MO, the 950-mile trail continued through the States of Kansas, Colorado, and Oklahoma, to Santa Fe, NM.

The trail was first mentioned by Capt. Zebulon M. Pike in the year 1810. The captain envisioned commercial opportunities in trading with the Spanish settlers on the Rio Grande. It was Mexico's split with Spain in 1821 which opened these trade opportunities to American merchants.

In 1822, William Becknell, "The Father of the Trail," hitched his mule team to his wagon and transported the first merchandise from Old Franklin, MO, to Santa Fe, NM.

The Santa Fe Trail continued to prosper for the next 25-years. During that time, many other merchants followed Becknell's path across the southern prairies. The trail became a very lucrative trade route, spurring an economic boom to the depressed economy of Missouri. Many points of historic significance occurred during this period, including Indian, fights, military patrols, and negotiations with Mexico.

In 1846, the first year of the Mexican War, Capt. Stephen W. Kearny led his troops from Bent's Fort, over Raton Pass, to the town of Las Vegas, NM, where the captain expected to face the Mexican Army. However, no enemy materialized. Thus, the U.S. Army captured its first foreign capital and the Mexican Province became American territory. Fort Marcy was built in Santa Fe to symbolize this American conquest.

With the full trail now in American territory, the route became more frequently traveled and forts were added to protect the new lands. Military supplies became a new source of commerce along the trail.

During the late 1840's a cholera epidemic spread through the Indian tribes. In 1849, to protect the health of the military personnel stationed at Bent's Fort, the fort was set ablaze. A new fort was built on the Arkansas River at Big Timbers about 40 miles down from the old fort. An additional fort, Fort Wise, was added about 1 mile from new Bent's Fort. Fort Wise, later renamed Fort Lyon, served as an important supply depot and stage stop along the Santa Fe Trail.

The route continued as a main source of trade. By the year 1858, over 1,800 wagons followed the route annually. However, technology advanced. On February 9, 1880, the first steam engine rolled into Santa Fe. The following day, Santa Fe headlines read, "Santa Fe Trail Passes Into Oblivion."

It has been over 100 years since the steam engine brought the Santa Fe Trail to an end. However, many sites of historic significance remain today. The designation of the Santa Fe Trail as a historic trail would help to retain that history and would aid modern travelers in locating areas of historic significance.

While attempting to retain the historic value of the trail, it is equally important that we respect the rights of landowners currently living along the trail. The bill before us today is a fine example of legislation which takes into account the diverse interests affected by a historic trail designation.

Landowners along the trail had initially feared that the Federal Government would condemn their property for public use of the trail. To alleviate those concerns, H.R. 4794 was amended to protect current landowners. It now specifically states that lands outside of Federal boundaries will not be taken without the consent of the owner. Should a historic site or artifact remain on privately held property, the landowner does have the opportunity to enter into a voluntary agreement with the Government to preserve that important feature on his or her property.

Another concern expressed by landowners resolves around a problem all too common today—the issue of liability. Because there is a chance that a landowner may unknowingly expose himself to lawsuits by allowing sightseers onto his property, it is important that landowners are informed prior to entering into a voluntary agreement. H.R. 4794 directs the Government to notify landowners prior to entering into an agreement that there may be a potential liability issue. The landowner may then investigate what problems may arise and make an informed decision as to whether he or she will allow public access onto the property.

Mr. Speaker, the Santa Fe Trail is the story of America and her commerce. H.R. 4794 would enable us to preserve this important element of American history while protecting the rights of those people who continue to earn their living along the trail. It is a delicate balance, but one that is achieved through this legislation. I urge my colleagues to support its passage.

Mr. BORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise to support H.R. 4794, to designate the Santa Fe Trail as a national historic trail. The trail is an important part of our national heritage. The recognition of the Santa Fe Trail is long overdue, and I am pleased that the House is taking action to protect this historic route. I commend the gentleman from New Mexico [Mr. RICHARDSON] for his leadership.

The legislation also authorizes a study of the Kosciuszko Trail under section 5(c) of the National Trails Systems Act, and I want to bring this issue to the attention of the House. The proposed Kosciuszko Trail is a system of markers that would link the military sites fortified by the great Polish military engineer, Gen. Thaddeus Kosciuszko, during our War of Independence.

General Kosciuszko's genius as a military engineer contributed materially to the success of the American revolution. The fortifications that he planned stretch from Vermont to South Carolina, and played a key role in helping our Nation in its struggle for freedom.

Kosciuszko directed construction of a fort at West Point which protected the Hudson Valley. He later urged Congress to select the site for the U.S. Military Academy. He planned the fortifications which protected Philadelphia from British attack. He set the stage for the American victory at Saratoga, probably the decisive battle of the war. In the later periods of the war, he served with distinction in Virginia, North Carolina, and South Carolina.

Congress has already taken the lead in the effort to honor the contributions that General Kosciuszko made to our country. In 1977, it enacted Senate Concurrent Resolution 44 which recognized the Kosciuszko Military Engineering Sites. These are the sites that link the proposed Kosciuszko Trail.

However, I believe that something more significant should be done to mark and unify the Kosciuszko Trail, and the sites along the trail. That is why we are asking the National Park Service to study the feasibility of designating the Kosciuszko Trail as a national historic trail. I believe that the national historic trail designation would be most appropriate but anticipate that the Park Service would consider other designations as part of its feasibility study.

Mr. Speaker, I strongly support this legislation, I thank the gentleman from New Mexico, and I urge the House to pass the bill.

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4794, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

PATENTS IN SPACE

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4316) to amend title 35, United States Code, and the National Aeronautics and Space Act of 1958, with respect to the use of inventions in outer space as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 4316

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SPACE INVENTIONS.

(a) AMENDMENTS TO TITLE 35, UNITED STATES CODE.—(1) Chapter 10 of title 35, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"§ 105. Inventions in outer space

"Any invention made, used or sold in outer space on an aeronautical and space vehicle (as defined in section 103(2) of the National Aeronautics and Space Act of 1958 (42 U.S.C. 2452(2)) under the jurisdiction or control of the United States shall be considered to be made, used or sold within the United States for purposes of this title, except with respect to any space vehicle or component thereof that is specifically identified and otherwise provided for by an international agreement to which the United States is a party.".

(2) The table of sections of chapter 10 of title 35, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end the following:

"105. Inventions in outer space.".

(b) AMENDMENT TO NATIONAL AERONAUTICS AND SPACE ACT.—Section 305 of the National Aeronautics and Space Act of 1958 (42 U.S.C. 2457) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(m) Any invention made, used or sold in outer space on an aeronautical and space vehicle (as defined in section 103(2)) under the jurisdiction or control of the United States shall be considered to be made, used or sold within the United States for purposes of this Act, except with respect to any space vehicle or component thereof that is specifically identified and otherwise provided for by an international agreement to which the United States is a party.".

SEC. 2. EFFECTIVE DATE.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Subject to subsections (b), (c) and (d) of this section, the amendments made by section 1 shall apply to all United States patents granted before, on, or after the date of the enactment of this Act, and to all applications for United States patents pending on or filed on or after such date of enactment.

(b) AMENDMENTS NOT TO AFFECT PRIOR DECISIONS.—The amendments made by section 1 shall not affect any final decision made by a court or the Patent and Trademark Office before the date of the enactment of this Act with respect to a patent or an application for a patent, if no appeal from such decision is pending and the time for filing an appeal has expired.

(c) AMENDMENTS NOT TO AFFECT CERTAIN PENDING CASES.—The amendments made by section 1 shall not affect the right of any party in any case pending in a court on the date of the enactment of this Act to have the party's rights determined on the basis of the substantive law in effect before such date of enactment.

(d) AMENDMENTS TO BE PROSPECTIVE IN APPLICATION.—Subject to subsections (b) and (c) of this section, the amendments made by section 1 shall not apply to any process, machine, article of manufacture, or composition of matter, an embodiment of which was launched prior to the effective date of this Act.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from California [Mr. MOORHEAD] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER].

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself 5 minutes.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 4316 is a relatively simple noncontroversial bill. We have had hearings on this bill both in the Committee on the Judiciary and in the Committee on Science and Technology. This bill has the support of the administration, NASA, the Departments of State and Commerce, and as far as we can ascertain, all appropriate parties in the private sector.

I wish certainly to commend our sister committee, the Committee on Science and Technology, for its cooperation, its contributions, in fact, to this bill.

Mr. Speaker, I note that the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Science and Technology is here, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. FUQUA] and I, without making further explanation, yield such time as he may consume to the chairman of the Committee on Science and Technology for whatever remarks he would care to make.

Mr. FUQUA. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4316, which clarifies the applicability of the U.S. patent laws to activities occurring in outer space. This bill had been jointly referred to the Committee on Science and Technology and the Judiciary Committee. Let me begin by commending my colleague, Mr. KASTENMEIER, for the outstanding cooperation which he and his staff exhibited as this bill moved through our respective committees. The exemplary coordinating of activities of our two committees makes possible our consideration of this bill today.

The Committee on Science and Technology, and particularly its Subcommittee on Space Science and Applications, has recognized for a long time the enormous benefits to our society which would be possible if the entrepreneurial spirit of the private sector could be brought to bear on the limitless opportunities available in outer space. For this reason, we have continually encouraged commercial activities in space, beginning with the sharing of NASA's research and development information with the private sector and continuing with the feasibility demonstrations which the unique capabilities of the space shuttle have made possible.

But as commercial enterprises became more and more involved in space activities, questions began to arise as to the applicability of certain U.S. laws to those activities. One early example was the concern that the protections afforded private industry by the U.S. patent laws would not extend to their activities in space. H.R. 4316 addresses this concern and provides the private sector with the clarity and certainty which are needed to continue private activities to develop outer space.

Quite simply, this bill extends the applicability of U.S. patent law to activities occurring on U.S. aeronautical and space vehicles. This bill extends the jurisdiction of the United States to those vehicles by amending title 35 of the United States Code, the patent laws, and the National Aeronautics and Space Act of 1958, which established NASA and the guidelines within which it operates. This jurisdictional change is accomplished without changing the substantive patent laws. That is to say, an inventor will receive the same protection under the patent laws whether his activities occur in space or here on Earth. That is how it should be.

This basic principle was further enhanced by the amendments to H.R. 4316 which the Committee on Science and Technology has adopted. First, the phrase "made or used" was changed to "made, used or sold." Even though sales in outer space may seem remote now, we felt it was important that they be included as acts of infringement, just as they are for inventions here on Earth. Second, a provision was added to clarify that this bill is intended to apply prospectively. That is, the provisions of this bill will not apply to space vehicles launched before it is enacted. This also ensures that the private sector has a clear understanding of what law applies to their activities.

Finally, another important aspect of this is that it will provide NASA with the flexibility it needs during negotiations on agreements with our foreign partners—Europe, Japan, and Canada—who will be cooperating with the United States in the development and use of the space station. The bill provides an exception to the strict applicability of U.S. patent law, for space vehicles or parts of space vehicles that are specifically identified and otherwise provided for by an international agreement to which the United States is a party.

This is an important piece of legislation which will encourage the private sector to invest in and develop outer space. It comes at a time in the U.S. space program when such encouragement is welcome. I urge my colleagues to support this bill and reaffirm this country's commitment to maintaining the preeminence of the U.S. space program.

□ 1415

Mr. Speaker, again let me express my appreciation to the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER] and to the Committee on the Judiciary for the expeditious manner in which they handled this matter, and also to the Subcommittee on Space Science and Applications very ably chaired by the distinguished gentleman from Florida [Mr. NELSON] and the ranking minority member on that subcommittee, the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to indicate my support for H.R. 4316, Patents in Space, which would clarify the application of the U.S. patent law to activities aboard American vehicles in outer space. I would also like to commend the chairman of the Courts Subcommittee, the gentleman from Wisconsin

[Mr. KASTENMEIER] for his work on this legislation.

The bill, which is without opposition, would amend the patent laws by adding a new section 105 to title 35 United States Code to provide that an "invention made or used" on space vehicles under the jurisdiction of the United States shall be deemed to have been made or used within the United States.

During the Courts Subcommittee's hearing on the bill, NASA suggested that greater certainty in the application of patent law to activities in outer space would enhance the commercialization of space. NASA contended that absent clear statutory treatment of this issue investors in the space shuttle and future space stations or platforms will be discouraged from pursuing commercial utilization of space.

It is the opinion of various academic and industrial patent law experts that H.R. 4316 merely restates current law. Nonetheless, I agree with those who believe that it is important for us to resolve the issue in a timely fashion, as opposed to leaving its resolution to the judiciary.

In addition to several members of the Courts Subcommittee, H.R. 4316 hs been cosponsored by the chairman, Mr. NELSON of Florida, and the ranking minority member Mr. WALKER of Pennsylvania, of the Science and Technology Subcommittee on Space and Science and Applications as well as the chairman of the full committee, Mr. FUQUA of Florida. The members of the Science and Technology Committee have also considered this legislation and made positive contributions to it and I commend them for their efforts. The bill has strong bipatrisan support and is without additional costs to the Government. Accordingly, I urge my colleagues support for it.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER].

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I rise this afternoon to strongly support H.R. 4316. This legislation will clarify the application of U.S. patent law over inventions made, used, or sold in outer space on aeronautical or space vehicles within the jurisdiction or control of the United States.

The American space program is at an important junction. With the regular manned flight of the Space Transportation System, the shuttle, we are now entering a new era in which manned experimentation in outer space will become nearly routine. The Committee on Science and Technology has strongly supported the commercialization of space activities by the private sector. Despite the tragic loss of the Challenger and our present extended standdown, there are already a number of companies and individuals deeply involved in experimental programs which will lead to major breakthroughs in the fields of biomedical products, advanced materials, and electronic crystals. The potential in space commercialization is virtually limitless.

However, we have discovered that there is a major potential problem facing these inventors as they move forward. It is a well settled matter that the intellectual property laws found in title 35 of the United States Code are territorial by nature. In fact, the Supreme Court of the United States held in Deepsouth Packing Co. versus the Laitiam Corp. that the U.S. patent system "makes no claim to extraterritorial effect and was not intended to operate beyond the limits of the United States."

Some courts have held that our patent laws apply to any place under U.S. jurisdiction. That has been interpreted to extend national patent laws to all places over which the United States exercises soverign rights, including U.S.-flag ships on the high seas or U.S.-flag aircraft in airspace above the high seas. However, the extension of our intellectual property laws to space vehicles is far from clear, and the General Counsel of NASA has determined that any such applicability would have to be determined on a case-by-case basis.

Mr. Speaker, while the Congress is actively engaged in the promotion of commercial activities we need to adopt this legislation to give the private sector the confidence that will allow them to make the major expenditures in research and development activities in space.

Mr. Speaker, I particularly want to point out that this bill represents a major step forward toward space based economy of the 21st century. This legislation will extend patent rights to inventions made, used, or sold in outer space. While there are no sales in space today, the Committee on Science and Technology can readily forsee sales in space as common events in the future.

I should also point out, Mr. Speaker, that H.R. 4316 is prospective in application. This legislation would not affect any pending suits. The bill has the strong support of the Committee on Science and Technology, and I understand that it is also strongly supported by the Committee on the Judiciary. The bill, as amended in the Committee on Science and Technology, is also supported by the administration.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the House to suspend the rules and pass H.R. 4316.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. NELSON], my coworker on this project, whose encouragement, cooperation and contributions were appreciated and to whom which we are very much indebted, as well as to acknowledge the fact that the gentleman is the single Member of this body to heroically experience space itself. I am very proud to work with him.

Mr. NELSON of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this important piece of legislation. I would echo the sentiments of my colleague and Chairman DON FUQUA as to the support and cooperation displayed by the Judiciary Committee during the coordination of our efforts to report this bill to you. I would also like to add my thanks to the members of our Subcommittee on Space Science and Applications. This bill received bipartisan support in the subcommittee and I can speak for all of its members in urging favorable consideration of this legislation.

This bill sends the right message to the private sector about this country's commitment to its space program and the role that we want the private sector to play in developing the commercial potential of space. And it couldn't come at a better time. Many have argued for the need for firm direction for the U.S. space program. This bill provides a major first step for an important participant in our space efforts.

If this bill is enacted, commercial entities will know, with certainty, that their activities in space will receive the same patent protection that they would if conducted here on Earth. Removing that element of risk from the decision process of these companies will greatly increase the chances that they will proceed with their plans for activities in space. And that couldn't be better for America.

We must return America's space program to its rightful place of prominence. This bill represents a first step in that direction by encouraging the continued efforts of private industry in space. I urge you to support this effort at this critical juncture in our Nation's space program.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 4316 is a relatively simple, noncontroversial bill. We have had hearings on it during this Congress, and it has the support of the administration, NASA, the Commerce, and State Departments, and as far as we can ascertain, all the appropriate parties in the private sector.

In general terms the bill states that inventive or other activities which occur in outer space on board U.S. space vehicles shall be treated for patent purposes as though these activities occurred within the United States. Specifically, the bill, amends the patent law by adding a new section 105 to title 35, United States Code, to provide that an invention made used or sold on space vehicles under the jurisdiction of the United States shall be deemed to have been made or used within the United States.

During the hearing on the bill NASA suggested that greater certainty in the application of patent law to activities in outer space would enhance the commercialization of space. NASA contended that in the absence of clear statutory treatment of this issue, investors in the space shuttle and future space stations or platforms would be discouraged from commercially utilizing space.

The reason for clarifying legislation is that there is no clear judicial precedent in this area of patent law. We, therefore, are acting in anticipation of the commercial exploitation of space.

There are four purposes for the legislation. The first purpose is to provide that actions which occur in outer space jurisdiction can infringe a U.S. patent.

The second is to rationalize the system by which priorities are given to inventions. This is particularly important since U.S. law is based on a first-to-invent system rather than first-to-file system.

The third purpose of the bill is to regulate prior art, and in this regard, to provide needed conformity in law.

Finally, and this may be important only to some, it makes it clear that—as relates to domestic concerns about national or international security, these occurrences or inventions in outer space are controlled by the Invention Secrecy Act.

For these four reasons, passage of this bill is necessary, and certainly is supported by all members of the Committee on the Judiciary.

I should note that the bill contains two amendments suggested by the Committee on Science and Technology. First, the bill makes the sale of goods covered by a U.S. patent in outer space a potential act of infringement. Second, the bill may deem that the provisions of the bill not apply for pending cases—such as Hughes Aircraft versus United States. In addition, the bill does not apply to vehicles launched before the effective date of the bill. If, however, an existing patent covering a product launched after the effective date use of that product abroad a U.S. vehicle without consent could constitute an act of infringement.

I wish to thank members of the committee, especially the gentleman from California [Mr. MOORHEAD], for their support. Moreover, the cooperation of the Committee on Science and Technology has made this bill possible.

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4316, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PATENT EQUITY ACT

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4899) to amend title 35, United States Code, with respect to patented processes and the patent cooperation treaty, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 4899

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Patent Equity Act".

SEC. 2. REFERENCE TO TITLE 35, UNITED STATES CODE.

Whenever in this Act an amendment is expressed in terms of an amendment to a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of title 35, United States Code.

TITLE I—PATENTED PROCESSES

SEC. 101. RIGHTS OF OWNERS OF PATENTED PROCESSES.

Section 154 is amended by inserting after "United States," the following: "and, if the invention is a process, of the right to exclude others from using or selling throughout the United States, or importing into the United States, products made by that process,".

SEC. 102. INFRINGEMENT FOR IMPORTATION OR SALE.

Section 271 is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(g) Whoever without authority imports into the United States or sells or uses within the United States a product which is made by a process patented in the United States shall be liable as an infringer, if the importation, sale, or use of the product occurs during the term of such process patent. In an action for infringement of a process patent, no remedy may be granted for infringement on account of the use of a product unless there is no adequate remedy under this title for infringement on account of the importation or sale of that product. A product which is made by a patented process will, for purposes of this title, not be considered to be so made after—

"(1) it is materially changed by subsequent processes; or

"(2) it becomes a minor or nonessential component of another product.".

SEC. 103. DAMAGES FOR INFRINGEMENT.

Section 287 is amended—

"(1) by inserting "(a)" before "Patentees"; and

"(2) by adding at the end the following:

"(b)(1) No damages may be recovered for an infringement under section 271(g) of this title with respect to a product unless the infringer knew or was on notice that the product was made by a process patented in the United States. Damages may be recovered only for such infringement occurring after such knowledge or notice and, with respect to—

"(A) a product obtained before such knowledge or notice, or

"(B) a product which—

"(i) is purchased pursuant to a contract that is entered into before such knowledge or notice and that provides for the delivery of a fixed quantity of the product in a specified period of time, and

"(ii) is in the inventory of or in transit to the purchaser, or is received by the purchaser within 6 months after such knowledge or notice, shall be limited to reasonable royalties therefor.

"(2) For purposes of paragraph (1), 'notice' means the receipt of facts set forth in writing which are sufficient to establish that there is a substantial likelihood that the product was made by an infringing process.".

SEC. 104 EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this title apply to United States patents granted before, on, or after the date of the enactment of this Act, except that these amendments do not apply to any product imported into or made in the United States before such date.

SEC. 105. REPORTS TO CONGRESS.

(a) CONTENTS.—The Secretary of Commerce shall, not later than the end of each one-year period described in subsection (b), report to the Congress on the effect of the amendments made by this title on the importation of ingredients to be used for manufacturing products in the United States in those domestic industries that submit complaints to the Department of Commerce, during that one-year period, alleging that their legitimate sources of supply have been adversely affected by the amendments made by this title.

(b) WHEN SUBMITTED.—A report described in subsection (a) shall be submitted with respect to each of the five one-year periods which occur successively beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act and ending five years after that date.

TITLE II—PATENT COOPERATION TREATY AUTHORIZATION

SEC. 201. DEFINITIONS.

(a) TREATY.—Section 351(a) is amended by striking ", excluding chapter II thereof".

(b) REGULATIONS.—Section 351(b) is amended by striking "excluding part C thereof".

(c) INTERNATIONAL SEARCHING AUTHORITY AND INTERNATIONAL PRELIMINARY EXAMINING AUTHORITY.—Section 351(g) is amended by striking "term 'International Searching Authority' means" and inserting "terms 'International Searching Authority' and 'International Preliminary Examining Authority' mean".

SEC. 202. TIME FOR FILING FEES.

Section 361(d) is amended to read as follows:

"(d) The international fee, and the transmittal and search fees prescribed under section 376(a) of this part, shall be paid either on filing of an international application or within such later time as the Commissioner may prescribe.".

SEC. 203. PATENT OFFICE AS INTERNATIONAL PRELIMINARY EXAMINING AUTHORITY.

(a) AUTHORITY OF PATENT OFFICE.—Section 362 is amended to read as follows:

"§ 362. International Searching Authority and International Preliminary Examining Authority

"(a) The Patent and Trademark Office may act as an International Searching Authority and an International Preliminary Examining Authority with respect to international applications in accordance with the terms and conditions of an agreement which may be concluded with the International Bureau, and may discharge all duties required of such Authorities, including the collection of handling fees and their transmittal to the International Bureau.

"(b) The handling fee, preliminary examination fee, and any additional fees due for international preliminary examination shall be paid within such time as the Commissioner may prescribe.".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—The item relating to section 362 in the table of sections for chapter 36 is amended to read as follows:

"362. International Searching Authority and International Preliminary Examining Authority.".

SEC. 204. INTERNATIONAL STAGE: PROCEDURE.

Section 364(a) is amended by striking "or International Searching Authority, or both," and inserting ", an International Searching Authority, or an International Preliminary Examining Authority,".

SEC. 205. SECRECY OF INTERNATIONAL APPLICATIONS.

Section 368(c) is amended by striking "or International Searching Authority, or both," and inserting ", an International Searching Authority, or an International Preliminary Examining Authority".

SEC. 206. COMMENCEMENT OF NATIONAL STAGE.

(a) RECEIPT OF DOCUMENTS FROM THE INTERNATIONAL BUREAU.—Subsection (a) of section 371 is amended to read as follows:

"(a) Receipt from the International Bureau of copies of international applications with any amendments to the claims, international search reports, and international preliminary examination reports (including any annexes thereto) may be required in the case of international applications designating or electing the United States.".

(b) TIME LIMIT FOR COMMENCEMENT OF NATIONAL STAGE.—Subsection (b) of section 371 is amended to read as follows:

"(b) Subject to subsection (f) of this section, the national stage shall commence with the expiration of the applicable time limit under article 22 (1) or (2) or under article 39(1)(a) of the treaty.".

(c) FILING OF ENGLISH TRANSLATION.—Subsection (c) of section 371 is amended—

(1) in paragraph (4) by striking the period and inserting "; and"; and

(2) by adding at the end the following:

"(5) a translation into the English language of any annexes to the international preliminary examination report, if such annexes were made in another language.".

(d) TIME PERIOD FOR SUBMISSION OF ANNEXES.—Subsection (d) of section 371 is amended by adding at the end the following new sentence: "The requirement set forth in subsection (c)(5) of this section shall be complied with at such time as the Commission may prescribe, and failure to do so shall be regarded as cancellation of the amendments made under article 34(2)(b) of the treaty.".

(e) TIME PERIOD FOR PRESENTATION OF AMENDMENTS.—Subsection (e) of section 371 is amended by inserting "or article 41" after "28".

SEC. 207. FEES.

(a) HANDLING AND PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION FEES.—Subsection (a) of section 376 is amended—

(1) by striking "fee, which amount is" and inserting "fee and the handling fee, which amounts are";

(2) by redesignating paragraph (5) as paragraph (6); and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (4) the following new paragraph:

"(5) A preliminary examination fee and any additional fees (see section 362(b)); and".

(b) PRESCRIPTION AND REFUNDABILITY OF FEES.—Subsection (b) of section 376 is amended—

(1) in the first sentence by inserting "and the handling fee" after "international fee"; and

(2) in the third sentence by inserting "the preliminary examination fee, and any additional fees," after "fee,".

SEC. 208. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this title—

(1) shall take effect on the same day as the effective date of entry into force with respect to the United States of chapter II of the Patent Cooperation Treaty, on account of the withdrawal of the declaration under article 64(1)(a) of the Patent Cooperation Treaty; and

(2) shall apply to all international applications pending on or filed on or after the date on which the amendments made by this title take effect.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from California [Mr. MOORHEAD] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER].

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this afternoon the House has before it the Patent Equity Act of 1986. This bill is a product of more than 4 years of work by the Committee on the Judiciary.

The bill contains two titles: Title I relates to process patents and title II implements the Patent Cooperation Treaty.

In general terms, title I of the bill provides that it is an act of patent infringement, for a person to import, use, or sell a product which has been made in violation of a U.S. process patent.[1]

Under current patent law, the manufacture and subsequent importation of the product of an item in violation of a process patent does not constitute an infringement of a U.S. patent. This bill remedies that omission.

Now, I want to particularly congratulate my colleague, Mr. MOORHEAD; it is his persistence and his interest in this legislation that has, I think, largely been responsible for getting this bill to the floor.

Two years ago, a similar bill was passed by the House but was not enacted because of last-minute opposition in the other body. Hopefully, H.R. 4899 will meet a better fate this Congress.

American patent law has long recognized the validity of securing for inventors the right to exclude others from practicing an invention that consists of a method of making a product. Process patent protection has been a part of U.S. law since at least the 19th century. Process patents extend intellectual property protection for new and useful processes, art or methods of creating an object. Since 1952, there has been an explicit statutory acknowledgment of the availability of process patent protection. Process patents, however, have been granted only partial protection against acts of infringement. This is so because, unlike product patents, the use of a patented process outside the United States and a subsequent importation of the foreign product is not an act of patent infringement. The failure to fully protect American process patents harms American businesses, results in a loss of domestic jobs, and is contrary to the public interest. Therefore, one of the positive factors about title I of H.R. 4899 is that it creates a level international playing field for American inventors contrary to the public interest. Many foreign countries adequately protect process patents, thus leaving American patent holders in a position to become the victims of unfair competition.

[1] A product will be considered made by the patented process regardless of any subsequent changes if it would not be possible or commercially viable to make that product but for the use of patented process. In judging the commercial viability, the courts shall use a flexible standard which is appropriate to the competitive circumstances. For example, where the patented process is to produce chemical X, and chemical X is an intermediate or precursor in the manufacture of imported product chemical Y, and it would not be possible or commercially viable to make imported product chemical Y but for the use of the patented process for the intermediate or precursor chemical X, the connection between the patented process for chemical X and the imported product chemical Y is not broken and the imported product Y is not materially changed for purposes of this section.

In the biotechnology field, it is well known that naturally occurring organisms contain within them particular genetic sequences composed of unique structural characteristics. The patented process may be for the process of preparing a DNA molecule comprising a specific genetic sequence. A foreign manufacturer uses the patented process to prepare the DNA molecule which is the product of the patented process. The foreign manufacturer inserts the DNA molecule into a plasmid or other vector and the plasmid or other vector containing the DNA molecule is, in turn, inserted into a host organism; for example, a bacterium. The plasmid-containing host organism still containing the specific genetic sequence undergoes expression to produce the desired polypeptide. Even though a different organism was created by this biotech procedure, if it would not have been possible or commercially viable to make the different organism and product expressed therefrom but for the patented process, the product will be considered to have been made by the patented process.

Process patent protection today is of central importance in the pharmaceutical industry, to the development of solid state electronics, for the manufacture of certain amorphous metals and, perhaps most significantly, for the biotechnology industry. For most biotech companies, the best, and sometimes only, available protection of their intellectual property is a process patent. Such a patent is effective in securing for the inventor the right to prevent others from practicing that invention in the United States. Under current law, a process patent is limited to the territory of the United States; it therefore is possible, if not likely, for a process patent holder to face domestic competition from persons who have used the patented process to create a product overseas and then ship it into the United States. In this situation, the patent owner cannot sue for patent infringement; rather, the owner is relegated to the U.S. International Trade Commission [ITC] to seek limited nonmonetary relief.

There is no logical reason to exclude from the ambit of patent infringement acts associated with the abuse of a U.S. process patent as long as they occur within the reach of U.S. domestic law. Moreover, as the President's Commission on Industrial Competitiveness has found, the failure to extend such protection diminishes the economic value of U.S. process patents. Without domestic legal protection, competitors using the protected process may accept the limited risks of foreign production and importation, in exchange for lower foreign production costs. There is no policy justification for encouraging such overseas production and concurrent violation of U.S. intellectual property rights.

The compelling nature of this deficiency in U.S. patent laws has been evident both in the Congress and to the executive branch. Reform in this area is a centerpiece in trade law reform.

The bill before us contains provisions which attempt to meet some other objections to the bill which have been heard from a variety of quarters.

The committee deleted the statutory presumption, certainly a move favored by retailer community and generic drug companies.

The amendment also changed the notice that patent owners are required to give before liability is triggered in a way more favorable to those two interest groups.

In sum, these amendments go part of the way toward meeting the objections of the bill's opponents.

We have reviewed some amendments under consideration in the other body and have had to reject them. The view is based on concerns about the impact of such proposals on nonpharmaceutical industry process patent holders, workability and fairness to patent holders. It is my understanding that the administration, through the Secretary of Commerce, shares these views. It remains my hope, however, that our differences with the other body can be reconciled before adjournment.

Title I will help address the U.S. trade deficit and inability to protect American intellectual property overseas. It is supported by much of American industry and in principle by the administration.[2]

Title II of H.R. 4899 amends our patent laws to authorize the U.S. Patent and Trademark Office to undertake the responsibilities outlined in chapter II of the Patent Cooperation Treaty. Basically, the PTO is granted statutory authority to serve as an international examining officer with respect to international patent applications. This new responsibility is in addition to those under chaper I, which the PTO has already undertaken in accordance that it was enacted into law during the 94th Congress.

The Patent Cooperation Treaty is administered effectively and fairly by the World Intellectual Property Organization, located in Geneva, Switzerland. The significance of the treaty is underscored by an observation made by the WIPO Director General (Dr. Arpad Bogsch): "The PCT system has been revised over the years as is now an even more important instrument for filing patent application abroad."

Enactment of title II is supported by the administration and by numerous patent law associations and individuals, including most recently the American Bar Association.

By facilitating the obtaining of patent protection abroad, the legislation will promote exports from the United States. It further will simplify and render more economical the filing of patent applications on the same inventions in different countries and the receiving of patent coverage in those countries.

In conclusion, H.R. 4899 will improve patent protection not only in this country but also internationally. I urge your support for this important legislation.

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation has the strong support of American corporations, both large and small. It has the support of inventors, the American Council on Education and the Association of American Universities. It has the support of the AFL-CIO. This legislation passed the House on suspension in October 1984, without a dissenting vote. I want to thank our subcommittee chairman, Mr. KASTENMEIER, for his continued leadership on this issue. He has kept this bill on track and kept it from getting lost in an otherwise busy schedule. I also want to thank our ranking member, Mr. FISH, for all of his support and help from the very beginning.

H.R. 4899 neither creates any new property rights nor does it extend the life of any patent. It would merely prevent somebody from going abroad and violating a U.S.-held process patent by manufacturing through the use of that process, certain products and then shipping those products back into the United States to compete with the U.S.-made product.

It is basically unfair to permit persons to use somebody else's invention and allow that person to import those products back into this country and compete with the person who actually invented the process. This legislation will in no way affect the consumer or the elderly except maybe to assure that he or she is receiving the real product sought and not a product produced by the use of a U.S.-patented process in a foreign country under less stringent standards.

This sort of evasion of our patent law is costly, not only in actual revenue lost but also to the number of U.S. jobs that are actually lost to foreign manufacturers. For example, we have a letter in our file from the Glass Workers Union, which states that they believe this present practice has cost their industry alone upwards of 50,000 jobs.

All this legislation does is bring the law in line with existing law and practice in France, England, West Germany, Switzerland, and numerous other countries.

Title II of H.R. 4899 would authorize the Patent and Trademark Office to act as an International Preliminary Examining Authority and as an Elected Office under chapter II of the Patent Cooperation Treaty. When the United States ratified the treaty in November 1975, it did so with a declaration that it was not bound by the provisions of chapter II thereof. Experience gained with the operation of the treaty during the ensuing years, as well as major steps taken by other countries to harmonize international patent processing procedures, such as the coming into force of the European Patent Convention in 1978, have largely eliminated this reason. Accordingly, it would be in the interest of U.S. industry and independent inventors alike, if the United States withdrew its reservations regarding chapter II of the treaty. Because the treaty is not self-executing, adherence to chapter II requires implementing legislation, such as that proposed here.

[2] The administration has expressed two concerns: (1) The absence of a statutory presumption and (2) the presence of a limitation on damages for "innocent infringers." The House Report , 99-807, makes clear that we agree a presumption is appropriate in some cases. The "innocent infringement" provisions will no doubt be the subject of further negotiation and discussion.

The Senate Judiciary Committee has favorably reported a similar bill. I am not aware of any opposition to this legislation, and urge support for it.

Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, this is important legislation and I would like to commend the chairman of the subcommittee, Mr. KASTENMEIER and the ranking member of the subcommittee, Mr. MOORHEAD, for their continued support and leadership on this issue. Mr. MOORHEAD's diligence and willingness to compromise is the reason this bill has come as far as we have today.

This legislation makes a number of important changes in our patent law. They are changes that are important to U.S. corporations. They are changes that are important to U.S. patent owners and they are changes that are important to U.S. innovation. The idea of protecting a process patent has the support of the administration. We introduced legislation last Congress and again early this Congress. This body passed a similar bill 2 years ago. Legislation is presently being worked on in the other body and with a little luck it may well become law this year.

Under the patent law inventors can get two kinds of patents: product patents and process patents. The first protects the product itself; the second protects the process by which a product is made, usually a complex chemical or industrial process.

Presently, the infringement of a product patent occurs if the patented invention is made, used or sold in the United States by someone other than the patent owner. A person cannot avoid infringement of a product patent by manufacturing the product overseas and then importing it into this country because use or sale of the patent in the United States would infringe the patent.

A process patent, however, only protects the method of making an article or product. Today, the holder of a U.S. process patent cannot use the patent law to prevent someone from practicing the patented process in a foreign country and importing those goods into the United States. H.R. 4899 would correct this problem. The importance of process patent protection to the national economy especially in such vital technical fields as industrial chemicals and pharmaceutical manufacturing, microbiology, and solid state electronics, cannot be overstated.

Title II of this legislation would implement the Patent Cooperation Treaty and by its provision enable U.S. patent applicants to avail themselves of the advantages offered by the treaty which came into force, internationally in 1978. When the United States ratified the treaty it exercised its option not to be bound by chapter II of the treaty. This legislation would remove that reservation. In July 1984, President Reagan requested the Congress to withdraw its reservation against adherence to chapter II.

Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of any opposition to this legislation and urge a favorable vote on its passage.

Mr. BROOKS. Mr. Speaker, I support H.R 4899, the Patent Equity Act, and hope that my colleagues will, too. This bill aims at securing the rights of American inventors and companies which have patents on methods of manufacturing—commonly referred to as process patents. Process patents have been recognized in American case law since the 1800's and by Federal statute since 1951. Process patents are critical to the development of our pharmaceutical industry, and American advances in solid state electronics, biotechnology, and amorphous metals.

Process patent holders' rights have not been adequately protected though because infringements occurring overseas cannot be stopped. When a product itself is patented, use by someone in the United States will constitute patent infringement and the patent holder may sue to protect his interests. However, in the case of a process that is patented, it can be violated in a foreign country and the product manufactured by that process can then be imported and sold in the United States without technically violating the patent laws.

H.R. 4899 would provide protection to the process patent holder by making the importation, sale or use of a product manufactured by a patented process an infringement under the patent law. To protect the innocent who may unknowingly import or sell a product which was made by a patented process, the bill provides that liability for damages in a process patent infringement suit will not be awarded unless the defendant knew or was notified that the product was manufactured by the patented process.

It is important that this legislation be enacted to insure that the rights of American patent holders on processes are protected. I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 4899.

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KASTENMEIER] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4899, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof), the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. KASTENMEIER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

AMERICAN FOLKLIFE CENTER AUTHORIZATION

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4545) to authorize appropriations for the American Folklife Center for fiscal years 1987, 1988, and 1989, and for other purposes, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 4545

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 8(a) of the American Folklife Preservation Act (20 U.S.C. 2107(a)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "(a)";

(2) by striking out "and" after "1985,"; and

(3) by inserting after "1986" the following: ", $867,900 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, $919,974 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1988, and $975,172 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1989".

SEC. 2. Section 8(b) of the American Folklife Preservation Act (20 U.S.C. 2107(b)) is repealed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. OAKAR] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ROBERTS] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. OAKAR].

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the American Folklife Center was created in 1976 in the Library of Congress as a national coordinative center to help give focus, coordination, and leadership to local and regional efforts to document, preserve, and nurture America's ethnic and cultural traditions. The Center includes the Library's archive of folk culture, which since 1928 has worked to document and preserve original recordings and manuscripts depicting our country's ancestral roots. Songs, stories, and crafts are all products of ethnic diversity and have contributed to what is our unique American character. The American Folklife Center should be allowed to continue its excellent work and maintain its status as the coordinative center for American folk heritage. H.R. 4545 provides authorization for just this purpose.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the minority members of the Committee on House Administration, I rise in support of H.R. 4545—the reauthorization for the American Folklife Center for 1987, 1988, and 1989. The American Folklife Center was created in 1976 at the Library of Congress to preserve and present American folklife through programs of research, documentation, archival preservation, live presentations, exhibits, and publications. The authorization for this program has gone from $133,500 in 1976 to $867,900 in 1986.

The minority members of House Administration have many reservations about the funding of these kinds of programs. However, H.R. 4545, as amended by the Committee on House Administration, will freeze the 1987 authorization at the 1986 level of $867,000 and will allow only a 6-percent increase in 1988 and 1989. I believe the committee has done a good job in holding this authorization down and will support the passage of H.R. 4545.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the minority leader of the task force, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. FRENZEL], and my friend, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ROBERTS], for their cooperation.

I just want to close by saying that we believe that one of the great things about Americans is the mosiac of varieties of cultures. It is very, very important to have some area of preservation so that scholars and people who want to know more about our culture in the future will have a place to go.

That is why this is so important. It is a small allocation, but it will really reap many benefits.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. OAKAR] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4545, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof), the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 4545, the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

ATLANTIC STRIPED BASS CONSERVATION ACT REAUTHORIZATION

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 3358) to reauthorize the Atlantic Striped Bass Conservation Act, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Senate amendment: Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

SECTION 1. DEFINITIONS.

Paragraphs (2), (3), and (4) of section 3 of the Atlantic Striped Bass Conservation Act (16 U.S.C. 1851 note) are amended to read as follows:

"(2) The term 'Atlantic striped bass' means members of stocks or populations of the species Morone saxatilis, which ordinarily migrate seaward of the waters described in paragraph (3)(A)(i).

"(3) The term 'coastal waters' means—

"(A) for each coastal State referred to in paragraph (4)(A)—

"(i) all waters, whether salt or fresh, of the coastal State shoreward of the baseline from which the territorial sea of the United States is measured; and

"(ii) the waters of the coastal State seaward from the baseline referred to in clause (i) to the inner boundary of the exclusive economic zone;

"(B) for the District of Columbia, those waters within its jurisdiction; and

"(c) for the Potomac River Fisheries Commission, those waters of the Potomac River within the boundaries established by the Potomac River Compact of 1958.

"(4) The term 'coastal State' means—

"(A) Pennsylvania and each State of the United States bordering on the Atlantic Ocean north of the State of South Carolina;

"(B) the District of Columbia; and

"(C) the Potomac River Fisheries Commission established by the Potomac River Compact of 1958.".

SEC. 2. COMMISSION FUNCTIONS.

Section 4 of the Atlantic Striped Bass Conservation Act (16 U.S.C. 1851 note) is amended by—

(a) striking subsections (a) and (c) redesignating subsections (b) and (d) as (a) and (b) respectively.

(b) amending subsection (a), as so redesignated, to read as follows:

"(a) MONITORING OF IMPLEMENTATION AND ENFORCEMENT.—

(1) During December of fiscal year 1987, and of each fiscal year thereafter, the Commission shall determine:

"(A) whether each coastal State has adopted all regulatory measures necessary to fully implement the Plan in its coastal waters; and

"(B) whether the enforcement of the Plan by each coastal State is satisfactory. Enforcement by a coastal State may not be considered satisfactory by the Commission if, in its view, the enforcement is being carried out in such a manner that the implementation of the Plan within its coastal waters is being, or will likely be, substantially and adversely affected.

"(2) The Commission shall immediately notify the Secretaries of negative determination made by it under this subsection.".

(c) amending subsection (b), as so redesignated, to read as follows:

"(b) SECRETARIAL ACTION AFTER NOTIFICATION.—Upon receiving notice from the Commission under subsection (a) that a coastal State has not taken the actions described in that subsection, the Secretaries shall determine jointly, within thirty days, whether that coastal State is in compliance with the Plan and, if the State is not in compliance, the Secretaries shall declare jointly a moratorium on fishing for Altantic striped bass within the coastal waters of the coastal State. In making such a determination, the Secretaries shall carefully consider and review the comments of the Commission, that coastal State in question.".

SEC. 3. MORATORIUM.

Section 5 of the Atlantic Striped Bass Conservation Act (16 U.S.C. 1851 note) is amended by—

(a) striking "(4)(d)" and inserting in lieu thereof "4(b)".

(b) striking "Secretary" and inserting in lieu thereof "Secretaries".

SEC. 4 AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

Section 7 of the Atlantic Striped Bass Conservation Act (16 U.S.C. 1851 note) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 7. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

"For each of fiscal years 1986, 1987, and 1988, there are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out this Act.".

SEC. 5. EFFECTIVE PERIOD.

Section 9 of the Atlantic Striped Bass Conservation Act is amended by striking "18 months after the date of the enactment of this Act." and inserting in lieu thereof "at the close of September 30, 1988.".

SEC. 6. FUNDING OF STRIPED BASS STUDIES.

Section 7(d) of the Anadromous Fish Conservation Act (16 U.S.C. 767g(d) is amended by striking "and September 30, 1986" and inserting in lieu thereof "September 30, 1986, September 30, 1987, and September 30, 1988".

SEC. 7. TRANSFER OF MILES CITY NATIONAL FISH HATCHERY.

Notwithstanding any other law, the Secretary of the Interior shall convey to the State of Montana, without reimbursement to the United States and no later than thirty days following enactment of this legislation, all of the rights (including all water rights), title, and interest of the United States in and to the fish hatchery property located south of Miles City, Montana, and known as the Miles City National Fish Hatchery, consisting of 168.22 acres, more or less, of land, together with any improvements and related personal property thereon. The property conveyed shall be used by the Montana Department of Fish, Wildlife and Parks as part of the Montana fishery resources management program. If the property conveyed is ever used for other than these purposes, title to such property shall revert to the United States.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. LEWIS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. LEWIS] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS].

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to extend, through the end of fiscal year 1988, the provisions of the Atlantic Striped Bass Conservation Act. In so doing, we will encourage continued action by the Atlantic Coast States to protect the striped bass, and to make possible the restoration of that species to its historic status as one of the most important commercial and recreational fisheries in the United States.

The bill authorizes the Secretary of Commerce, in cooperation with the Secretary of the Interior, to declare a moratorium on fishing for striped bass in any State that fails to meet conservation standards established by the Atlantic State Marine Fisheries Commission [ASMFC]. The bill also extends for 2 years the striped bass emergency study being conducted by the National Marine Fisheries Service and the Fish and Wildlife Service. Continuation of the study is needed to determine whether fishing restrictions and other remedial actions are having a sufficiently positive effect on the health of the species, or whether more drastic action is required. Finally, the bill would correct a technical problem with the existing statute by specifically recognizing the regulatory authority of the Potomac River Fisheries Commission and the District of Columbia over waters within their jurisdiction.

The Atlantic Striped Bass Conservation Act, which was first enacted in 1984, has been a success. Its purpose was to encourage State governments to meet, in full, their obligation to comply with guidelines approved by the ASMFC to restrict fishing for stripers. It sought to achieve this goal by authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to impose a moratorium on fishing in any State that failed, in the judgment of the ASMFC, to comply with these regionally approved standards. The record of compliance has thus far been satisfactory. Accordingly, it has not been necessary for the Federal Government to declare a moratorium on fishing in the waters of any State.

Despite cooperation by the States, the juvenile production of bass remains dangerously low. It is clear that overfishing, habitat pollution, and acid rain have all contributed to the problem.

The ASMFC has responded by adopting a series of amendments to its earlier striped bass restoration plan that will further restrict fishing in the months ahead. A major goal of the new guidelines is to protect the female stripers of the relatively abundant 1982 year class, in order to guarantee their survival to spawn.

According to the emergency striped bass research study for 1985, which was released last week, current and planned conservation efforts make it "likely that within the next year or so, the abundance of the 1982 year class will rival or exceed that of the 1970 year class at a similar age. By 1988, the number of age 6 striped bass may greatly exceed the number of 1970 year class striped bass that survived to that age."

This is good news, but the study also warns that, "It is essential that conservation measures remain in effect until recruitment increases." That is precisely the goal of the legislation we are considering today.

The approach taken in current law represents a compromise between those favoring an immediate and total federally imposed ban on striped bass fishing and those who are opposed to any Federal role in managing a species found primarily in waters subject to State jurisdiction. The original law, as well as this new legislation, recognizes that the primary management role for striped bass rests with the coastal States and the ASMFC, not with the Federal Government. The ASMFC is made up of representatives from all Atlantic Coast States, and its recommendations are developed entirely at the State and regional level. The adoption of the Striped Bass Conservation Act was required to provide the enforcement authority necessary to guarantee compliance with those recommendations, but it does not call for Federal management of the species, nor does it undermine in any way the principle that State institutions are entitled to manage species under their jurisdiction.

It is obvious that no restrictions on fishing for striped bass can be adopted without resulting in some short-term economic loss to commercial fishermen. But the purpose of these restrictions, in the long run, is to restore the health of a species of immense commercial value. It must be recognized that any failure to protect the striped bass would be folly, and that no benefit—economic or otherwise—will be derived from the species if its decline is permitted to continue.

I regret to note that the Department of Justice has recently informed our committee that it intends to recommend a veto of this legislation on constitutional grounds. In a letter to our chairman, Mr. JONES of North Carolina, dated August 12, 1986, Assistant Attorney General John Bolton stated that providing "for the enforcement by the Secretaries of standards established by the (Atlantic States Marine Fisheries) Commission consisting of members who are either State officers or who are appointed by State officers would violate Article 1, Section 7, of the Constitution." The reason for this, according to Mr. Bolton, is that, "Officers of the United States * * * have the authority to enforce only the laws of the United States or the regulations issued under those laws."

I do not question the sincerity of the Justice Department position on this issue, but I hope very much that a veto is not recommended and that such a recommendation will be rejected by the President even if it is put forward. There is, after all, no substantive difference between the procedures authorized by this legislation and those signed by the President, without any complaint from the Justice Department, 2 years ago. These procedures have been accepted by the State governments involved, and they have worked well. There is, in addition, no reasonable alternative to these procedures. The Justice Department recommends that the Federal Government essentially assume management responsibility for the striped bass. Such an assertion of Federal power over a species found primarily in State waters would represent a departure from the traditional allocation of governmental responsibility far more drastic than the allegedly unconstitutional arrangement set forth in our bill and in current law. The Justice Department's proposal, however well-intentioned, is simply not consitent with the realities of fisheries management in the United States.

The Federal Government can continue to play an effective role in striped bass conservation under the procedures set forward in this bill. It is my hope that the Reagan administration will overcome its reservations and permit this role to continue.

I want to thank Chairman JONES and other members of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries for their help and cooperation in developing this bill.

The striped bass is a species of special importance to me, and to all those who identify with the history and traditions of the sea. Three and a half centuries ago, Capt. John Smith, founder of Jamestown colony, wrote in his journal that there were so many bass in certain stretches of water that "one might go over their backs drishod." The first fisheries conservation law, approved by the Massachusetts Bay Colony in 1639, prohibited the use of the striper as fertilizer. The first public school in North America, in the Plymouth Colony, was financed in large part by the sale of striped bass.

We have a responsibility—and I submit that responsibility is fully consistent with the Constitution—to protect the striped bass. That's the way John Adams and Thomas Jefferson would have wanted it, and that's the message I hope this House will send to the White House today.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). The gentleman from Florida [Mr. LEWIS] has the time.

Mr. LEWIS of Florida. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to yield my 20 minutes to the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. YOUNG].

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the time of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. LEWIS] is yielded to the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. YOUNG].

There was no objection.

Mr. YOUNG of Alaska. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 3358 and the Senate amendment that amends and extends the Atlantic Striped Bass Conservation Act.

The act, signed into law during the 98th Congress, was a direct result of the efforts of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee to protect a vitally important species for both commercial and recreational fishermen along the east coast.

The act encourages States to implement and enforce their own fishery management plans to help turn around the rapid decline of Atlantic Coast striped bass stocks. Because populations of this species are declining, I think it is important that we make every effort to promote sound conservation measures as found in this legislation.

I would like to point out the fine work of Chairman JONES and Chairman BREAUX, as well as Congressman ROBERT DAVIS, ranking minority member of the Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee. The involvement of my good colleague Congressman STUDDS, who introduced the legislation, has indeed been valuable.

I support passage of H.R. 3358 and urge its adoption by this body.

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, once again I commend the gentleman from Alaska for his leadership consistently on matters dealing with fisheries.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the motion to agree to the Senate amendments to H.R. 3358, reauthorizing and extending provisions of the Atlantic Striped Bass Conservation Act. I would like to thank the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries for crafting this compromise with the other body and for recognizing how important it is that we complete work on this legislation prior to the impending fall adjournment.

Mr. Speaker, Congress adopted the Atlantic Striped Bass Conservation Act during the 98th Congress to provide for assistance in the development, implementation, and enforcement of interstate policy regarding the conservation and management of the Atlantic striped bass. That legislation was the result of a 1979 emergency striped bass study [ESBS] and of research conducted by the Atlantic States Marine Fisheries Commission [ASMFC], both of which demonstrated a severe decline in the Atlantic striped bass populations.

In 1981 the ASMFC adopted an interstate fisheries management plan for the conservation and management of striped bass along the Atlantic coast which set restrictions on the size and sex of the striped bass caught in ocean and fresh waters. States included under the auspices of the Atlantic Striped Bass Conservation Act are: Maine, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, and North Carolina. However, because the interstate fisheries management plan is not binding, many States have been slow to implement the plan and there is concern that our striped bass populations are not being adequately protected.

As passed by the House this past April, H.R. 3358 requires the ASMFC to monitor implementation and enforcement of the ISFMP by the States on a biannual basis and reauthorized the program for 1 year. The Senate amendment we have before us today, reauthorizes the program through fiscal year 1988—for 2 years—and requires the ASMFC to monitor the State plans each year.

The conservation of our striped bass population is an important and meritorious undertaking. We cannot allow this species to disappear through our own negligence and selfishness. By instituting and enforcing the simple guidelines of the ISFMP, we can maintain the striped bass populations at healthy levels. This measure enjoys the support of our fishermen as well as our conservation lists. Accordingly I urge the support of my colleagues.

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, the bill before us is nearly identical to the bill passed by the House under suspension of the Rules on April 29, 1986. H.R. 3358 reauthorizes and amends the Atlantic Striped Bass Conservation Act. Several technical amendments were adopted by the Senate and that body passed the measure now before us on June 26, 1986.

The Atlantic Striped Bass Conservation Act was enacted into law on January 23, 1984, and has had its intended effect—the rational conservation and management of Atlantic Coast populations of striped bass. Unfortunately, the most recent striped bass report issued just last week concluded that striped bass populations are still very low and that juvenile striped bass production is extremely low. The study also concludes that in some areas, acidification of our rivers has probably caused high mortality of the juvenile striped bass. Thus, there is still much work that needs to be done and a clear need to reauthorize this measure so that this cherished resource can be brought back to its former level.

The bill before us would: clarify that the act applies to waters under the jurisdiction of the Potomac River Fisheries Commission and the District of Columbia; extend the effective date of the act as well as the authorization of the emergency striped bass study through fiscal year 1988; require the joint approval of the Secretaries of Commerce and of Interior in order to put into effect or suspend striped bass fishing moratoria; and, lastly, substitute an annual State compliance assessment program for the current biannual assessment requirement. In addition, the Senate has added a provision to transfer the title of the Miles City National Fish Hatchery to the State of Montana. I believe these amendments should be adopted and I urge the Members to support the passage of this bill.

Unfortunately I was recently notified that the Department of Justice has threatened to recommend that the President veto this measure if it is passed in its present form. I believe the analysis of the Department of Justice is flawed and that the President should not veto this measure.

Incidentally, a veto by the President would be ironic. After all, it was President Reagan himself who signed into law the original Atlantic Striped Bass Conservation Act.

The Department of Justice maintains that this act would require the Secretaries to enforce Federal law developed by a non-Federal entity, the Atlantic States Marine Fisheries Commission—formed under an interstate compact recognized by the Congress. This is clearly not the case. The act recognizes that affected States may implement regulations more stringent than those recommended by the commission's interstate fishery management plan for striped bass. The Congress has simply recognized that the States, working through the commission, should take the lead in developing a conservation plan for striped bass given their expertise and resources committed to this effort. However, if the commission's plan is not implemented in good faith, then the act would require Federal management to take effect in that State—a moratorium on striped bass fishing.

The Department of Justice also implies that the Secretaries would have no discretion whether or not to apply a striped bass fishing moratorium in the event that they are notified by the Commission that a State has not complied with its fishery management plan. Section 4 of the act is clear on this matter—the Secretaries have discretion. Under current law, if a negative determination on compliance is made by the commission, the Secretary of Commerce must then "carefully consider and review the comments of the commission, the coastal State in question, and the Secretary of the Interior." If the Secretary concurs, then a moratorium is put into effect on all striped bass fishing in that State until such time as remedial actions are taken.

Moreover, the committee report on this law, House report 98-1029, is clear on this matter: "The committee intends that the Secretary shall take into full consideration the views and comments of both the commission and the affected State before making such a determination." The report also states that "section 4(d) provides that if in the judgement of the ASMFC any of the States have failed to comply with their implementation responsibilities under section 4(a) or their enforcement responsibilities under section 4(b), the Secretary of Commerce shall make a final determination as to the status of State compliance with the plan. If the Secretary determines that any such State has failed to adequately comply with the plan, then the Secretary is charged with the responsibility of imposing a moratorium on all striped bass fishing within each such States waters. The committee intends that the Secretary shall take into full consideration the views and comments of both the ASMFC and the affected state before making such a determination." These statements clearly recognize that there is secretarial discretion to be exercised.

The Department of Justice also asserts that the act violates the appointments clause of the Constitution. A nearly identical assertion was recently rejected by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit. In that case, the court ruled that the Pacific Northwest Electric Power, conservation, and Planning Council—which has far more authority than the Atlantic States Marine Fisheries Commission—was "a compact agency and that its members are not Federal officers within the meaning of the appointments clause.

I want to remind Members that at the time this law was enacted the Chesapeake Bay stock of striped bass was petitioned to be listed as endangered or threatened under the Endangered Species Act. In addition, there was a groundswell of support for legislation that would have created a coastwide moratorium on all striped bass fishing or alternatively, legislation that would have limited the sale of striped bass in interstate commerce. I believe the measure before us is vastly superior to any of these alternatives.

The act recognizes that it has been difficult if not impossible for the States to implement the commission's plan without some encouragement. The act attempts to bring forth a coherent management strategy for striped bass which migrate thought the jurisdictions of several States and, in so doing, to minimize the role of the Federal Government.

The reauthorization of this act is needed. I believe that the Department of Justice analysis is flawed and I urge my colleagues to send this measure to the President for enactment into law.

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS] that the House suspend the rules and concur in the Senate amendment to H.R. 3358.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof), the rules were suspended and the Senate amendment was concurred in.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

LABOR PROTECTIVE PROVISIONS FOR AIRLINE EMPLOYEES

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4838) to amend section 408 of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 to ensure fair treatment of airline employees in airline mergers and similar transactions, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 4838

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 408 of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 (49 U.S.C. App. 1378) is amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"FAIR TREATMENT OF EMPLOYEES

"(g) In any case in which the Secretary determines that the transaction which is the subject of the application would tend to cause reduction in employment, or to adversely affect the wages and working conditions including the seniority of any air carrier employees, labor protective provisions calculated to mitigate such adverse consequences, including procedures culminating in binding arbitration, if necessary, shall be imposed by the Secretary as a condition of approval, unless the Secretary finds that the projected costs of protection would exceed the anticipated financial benefits of the transaction. The proponents of the transaction shall bear the burden of proving there will be no adverse employment consequences or that projected costs of protection would be excessive.".

(b) That portion of the table of contents contained in the first section of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 which appears under the side heading is amended by adding at the end the following:

"Sec. 408. Consolidation, merger, and acquisition of control."

"(g) Fair treatment of employees.".

SEC. 2. (a)(1) The Secretary of Transportation shall conduct a study of the effect of consolidations, mergers, and acquisitions of control of air carriers with respect to the employment of minority group members (including women, blacks, persons of Hispanic origin, Asians, Pacific Islanders, American Indians, Hawaiian Natives, and Alaskan Natives) as air carrier employees.

(2) Not later than one year after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall submit to Congress a report on the study conducted under paragraph (1). Such report shall include—

(A) an assessment of the employment of minority group members as air carrier employees since the deregulation of the airline industry, and

(B) specific recommendations for enhancing the participation of minority group members as air carrier employees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California [Mr. MINETA] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. MINETA].

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the bill reported by the Committee on Public Works and Transportation, H.R. 4838, requires the Department of Transportation to impose labor protective conditions [LPP's] in airline merger cases to ensure that the merger is fair to employees. These LPP's were routinely imposed by the Civil Aeronautics Board for many years to ensure that the seniority lists of merging airlines would be integrated in a fair and equitable manner and that some financial benefits would be provided to relieve the burdens on employees who lost their jobs or suffered a reduction in wages as a result of the merger. When the Civil Aeronautics Board announced in the early 1980's that it intended to abandon its policy of imposing LPP's, Congress responded by directing in the legislativie history of the Civil Aeronautics Board Sunset Act of 1984 that LPP's should continue to be imposed. Regrettably, the Department of Transportation has failed to follow this directive and for this reason it has been necessary to go forward with legislation requiring that LPP's be imposed. The need for this legislation has increased greatly in recent months with a series of airline mergers involving a substantial portion of the industry's employees.

Adequate protection of airline employees is a critical part of airline deregulation. When the Congress passed the Airline Deregulation Act of 1978, we recognized that deregulation would impose penalties on companies which were inefficiently managed or misjudged what the public wanted. We wanted to be sure that airline employees would not be required to carry too great a portion of the burden of deregulation. For this reason, the 1978 Deregulation Act included labor protective provisions providing financial benefits to employees losing their jobs because of deregulation and further providing that dislocated employees would have the right of first hire on other airlines. Unfortunately, because of administrative inaction and litigation these protective provisions have been of almost no value to airline employees.

Besides providing for flexible market entry and fare setting, the Deregulation Act also facilitated the ability of airlines to merge. However, we made it clear that we did not intend that the liberal merger policies would be used to treat airline employees unfairly. In recent months it has become increasingly obvious that the Department of Transportation intends to ignore the congressional intent on this issue as well. In its merger decisions the Department of Transportation has been refusing to impose the LPP's historically imposed by the Civil Aeronautics Board. This refusal flies in the face of a directive in the House committee report on the Civil Aeronautics Board Sunset Act of 1984 that we intended DOT to continue to impose LPP's in merger cases.

Thus the administration has refused to follow existing statutes and explicit congressional directives designed to ensure that airline employees would not be required to bear an unfair share of the costs of deregulation. H.R. 4838 will help restore the balance which we thought we had already established between management freedom and employee rights.

Some airlines have argued that if LPP's were required there would be astronomical costs to merging airlines. In our committee report on the bill we have included data demonstrating that these claims are exaggerated. I would also note that the benefits which employees are likely to receive from LPP's are insignificant compared to the "Golden Parachutes" which protect top airline management. Many of these contracts provided several years pay for executives whose annual salaries are well in excess of $100,000. In some cases these benefits are available even if an executive leaves the company voluntarily. Nonmangement employees are certainly entitled to benefits which are a mere fraction of those paid to top executives.

In sum, the reported bill requires the continuation of an LPP policy which was followed by the CAB for many years and which Congress directed the Department of Transportation to continue. Requiring merger LPP's is the least we can do to reverse the refusal of the administration to afford airline employees the protections which Congress intended them to have. These protections are particularly needed to mitigate the sometimes harsh effects on employees of the wave of mergers now sweeping the airline industry.

I would also note that contrary to some of the arguments which have been made in opposition to this legislation, the LPP's required by the bill would benefit all employees, not just employees belonging to unions. It is the nonunion employees who may need this protection the most since they do not have representatives to make their case for a fair integration of seniority lists and financial benefits. This feature of the bill will be of great importance in the proposed merger between Texas Air and People Express since People Express' employees are not unionized. Under H.R. 4838, People Express' employees will have the benefit of LPP's.

I urge my colleagues to join me in passing this needed legislation.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the bill.

When we passed the Airline Deregulation Act of 1978, we were concerned about the effect that the heightened competition would have on airline employees. Therefore, we included a provision—section 43—that provided certain financial benefits and other rights to airline employees who were hurt by deregulation.

The problem is that, for various reasons, the promises of this provision have never been fully realized. Funding for the financial benefits has never been provided. And the regulations to implement the other rights of section 43 did not take effect until very recently.

The result is that airline employees have generally not received what was promised them in the 1978 act.

Moreover, the one right they did seem to have, the right to labor protection provisions [LPP's] in airline merger cases, has gradually disappeared. Before 1978 the Civil Aeronautics Board [CAB] routinely imposed LPP's in airline merger cases. But since that time, the CAB and now the Department of Transportation [DOT] have changed that practice. Now LPP's are almost never imposed.

Mr. Speaker, the Government cannot and probably should not, intervene in every dispute between airline employees and their management. But we can, and should, make good on some of the commitments we made to these employees in 1978.

That's what this bill does. It directs the Secretary of Transportation to impose LPP's in airline merger cases.

But it is important to note that this bill is not inflexible. Where the costs of the LPP's exceed the benefits of the merger, DOT would not have to impose LPP's. Therefore, employees will be helped by this bill and not harmed as some have argued.

In view of the recent wave of mergers sweeping the airline industry, passage of this bill is the least we can do for airline employees. I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HOWARD], the very distinguished chairman of our full Committee on Public Works and Transportation.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 4838, a bill to ensure the fair treatment of airline employees in mergers. This is obviously a very timely piece of legislation given what is happening in the airline industry with respect to mergers. The distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Aviation has described the bill in detail, so I will not cover that ground again.

What I would like to emphasize is that the reason we are here today with legislation is that the executive branch, the Department of Transportation in particular, has been consistently ignoring congressional intent as to how airline rank and file employees should be treated when management decides to merge with or take over another company.

When the Congress overwhelmingly adopted the Civil Aeronautics Board Sunset Act of 1984, the legislative history was clear. When airlines merge, employee protective provisions were to be imposed so that there would be a smooth transition and integration of the two workforces, and compensation for employees who lost their jobs because of the merger.

Our committee has held numerous hearings and written numerous letters on this matter and the response from DOT has been to ignore the legislative intent of the Congress. It is regrettable that this issue has to be revisited in this fashion today, but given the administration's policies we have been left with no alternative.

Our committee brings this bill to the floor on a completely bipartisan basis because the issue is simply one of fair treatment of rank and file workers in mergers. I am proud that our committee has been able to bring this legislation to the floor with strong support from both sides of the aisle, and with the leadership of the ranking Republican on the committee, the gentleman from Kentucky.

Again, I rise in support of this legislation and urge an "aye" vote.

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2½ minutes to my very distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO].

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 4838, which would provide labor protection provisions in airline merger cases. I recall working on this matter in 1978 with then subcommittee chairman HOWARD and Representative MINETA—fortunately the deregulation act recognized this right—but the administration or the law has disregarded this provision of law.

There is no doubt that revolutionary changes have occurred in the airline industry since Congress passed the landmark Airline Deregulation Act of 1978. Airline deregulation has led to a proliferation of new air carriers flying new routes and offering the traveling public unprecedented low air fares. These are the promises which have been fulfilled by airline deregulation.

But, Mr. Speaker, there is another promise of airline deregulation which has not been honored. It is the pledge made to the thousands of men and women who work for the Nation's airlines and who have created the safest and most reliable transportation system in history when the policy of deregulation was enacted in 1978.

When Congress deregulated the airline industry, it realized that airlines would be dramatically effected. Congress wanted to assure that airline employees would not carry the total burden for the transition from a regulated to a deregulated industry. Or during mergers that result. That is why the 1978 Deregulation Act provided labor protection provisions. If there was a finding by the now-defunct Civil Aeronautics Board [CAB] that an airline employee lost his or her job because of deregulation, the employee was to be entitled to financial benefits. A second labor protection provision granted dislocated airline employees the right of first hire on other airlines.

Despite a clear congressional mandate which was designed to protect airline employees, however, these labor protection provisions have never been fully implemented. Prior to the dismantlement of the Civil Aeronautics Board [CAB], labor protection provisions were routinely included in pending airline merger cases. Unfortunately, however, since 1978, the Department of Labor has chosen to ignore the congressional directive to draft regulations providing airline employees with labor protection provisions [LPP's].

The Department of Transportation has taken the position that airline employees should use the collective bargaining process to secure LPP's. The irony of this stance, however, is that collective bargaining agreements have been among the first casualties in many airline mergers or bankruptcies; at the very time that LPP's are needed the most.

Recently, the Department of Transportation granted final approval to the acquisition of Republic Airlines by Northwest Orient Airlines. Both of these carriers are based in Minnesota with a combined Minnesota payroll of over 20,000 employees. I wrote to Secretary Dole urging her approval of this merger along with the inclusion of LPP's. It was also the opinion of the administrative law judge who reviewed the Northwest-Republic case, Judge Ronnie Yoder, that LPP's should be applied. However, Secretary Dole declined to follow this recommendation. The result of this decision is that hundreds of employees from both carriers now face an uncertain future with the newly merged Northwest Airlines.

Labor protection provisions are essential in maintaining the collective bargaining rights of the Nation's airline employees. The many complicated issues which arise in airline mergers should be settled in a fair and orderly manner and not at the sole discretion of airline management. I hope my colleagues will join me in supporting H.R. 4838 which will restore the balance in the workplace for our Nation's airline employees while maintaining the freedom of airline companies to manage the business affairs.

Mr. Speaker, I'm very concerned that the rights of working men and women, whether under a collective-bargaining agreement or not, be given consideration. Today they are shunted aside. The policy gives consideration to all other contracts and agreements but somehow labor rights and contracts are simply ignored in airline mergers and in other aspects of our economy.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MACK].

Mr. MACK. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to H.R. 4838, and to make three points.

This legislation nullifies the efficiencies that can be gained from airline mergers.

Second, this legislation runs counter to the trend of deregulation that has been a major thrust of air policy toward the airline industry for the past 8 years.

Third, the employee benefits rightfully fall into the purview of collective-bargaining agreements. We should not attempt to micromanage a very complicated business through ill-conceived legislation, especially legislation that is brought to the floor of the House under these procedures. For that reason I oppose the bill.

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. YOUNG], a very distinguished member of our subcommittee.

Mr. YOUNG of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 4838, legislation to protect the rights of airline employees in airline mergers.

Mr. Speaker, the need for this legislation is absolutely clear. Again last Friday, September 12, another airline merger was approved by the Department of Transportation without the imposition of labor protective provisions. Again, the careers and economic futures of airline employees have been placed at risk without guidelines from the Department of Transportation. We cannot allow this unfair situation to continue.

The fates of thousands of Missouri employees of Ozark and Trans World Airlines are in limbo as we debate this bill today. Thousands of families must postpone decisions on the most basic issues of their lives while they wait for decisions to be made hundreds of miles away by people who may or may not place fairness, equity, and the public interest in equal balance with short-term economic gain. The people we seek to protect with this legislation have given many years of service to their companies and the public. Their talents, experience and training are invaluable resources to the industry and to the public they serve. Mr. Speaker, these people literally hold the safety of the flying public in their hands. Surely Members of Congress, who log many hours in the air as a fact of legislative life, should be the first to understand the need for this legislation and support H.R. 4838. Many of us already have a large number of constituents affected by airline mergers. If the predictions of experts are correct and the mergers continue, most employees in the industry will be affected. And even if you have no constituents who are airline employees, think for a minute. The next time you, or a member of your family, or a constituent step on to a plane, don't you want the assurance that the mechanic who checked that plane was trained, qualified, and experienced? Don't you want to know that the flight attendant is fully prepared to make your flight safe and comfortable? That the pilot has logged many hours of training, apprenticeship and experience? These questions are the other side, the public interest issues in the legislation before us today.

I ask you to support passage of H.R. 4838 not only because it is the fair and equitable thing to do for airline employees, but also because I believe we owe this assurance to the flying public.

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. OBERSTAR], a very distinguished member of the Committee on Public Works and Transportation, who chairs the Investigations and Oversight Subcommittee and follows aviation matters very closely.

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman of the subcommittee for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I think that it is fair to say that economic deregulation of airlines, and parenthetically of trucks and buses which we have also deregulated in the last several years, would not have been enacted were it not coupled with protection for airline employees against the adverse consequences that would result from mergers, acquisitions, and other rapid changes taking place in that industry as a result of the deregulation.

Labor-protection provisions were recognized by the Congress and by the industry as necessary to protect workers, to retain a trained, experienced, effective work force during the transition from a protected economic environment of years, of decades of regulation, into a new economic environment of fierce competition.

We wanted both. We wanted to have transition into a period of unfettered, free competition with the benefits for consumers of greater choice of airline service, of lower rates and lower costs of travel, and we also wanted to retain safety in that workplace, and safety in that new deregulated environment, and the labor protection provisions were the key to achieving that objective.

At the dawn of deregulation the CAB imposed labor protective provisions, but by the time of CAB sunset, when the Department of Transportation took over the CAB's responsibility, the policy of imposing labor protection provisions was abandoned, piece by piece, until the basic policy, as announced by DOT, became that labor protection provisions will not be imposed "unless it is necessary to protect labor strife that could disrupt the national air transportation system."

What that means is that in a deregulated system it is unlikely that labor strife arising out of a merger would disrupt national air transportation systems, since other carriers are free to provide any service that would be disrupted by a strike. So the DOT has, in effect, abandoned a basic, fundamental commitment made to workers, and made to the traveling public in the labor protection provisions, a commitment that was included as a fundamental part of the compact we arrived at in passing economic deregulation.

In the ensuing years, nearly a quarter of a million airline industry employees have been affected by mergers or acquisitions involving some 20 air carriers, and yet despite all of the turmoil that has occurred, as well as the many benefits to consumers, the DOT has abandoned the cushioning that Congress intended in the form of LPP's against the adverse economic consequences of deregulation.

There once was a Bonanza Airlines, a Pacific Airlines, a West Coast Airlines. They all merged and became Hughes Air West. There once was a North Central Airlines, a Southern Airlines, and an Air West. They merged to become Republic. Now Republic has been swallowed up by Northwest Airlines.

We have fewer but bigger airlines.

What are the consequences for the traveling public in terms of safety, efficiency, effectiveness, responsibility, and what are the consequences for the workers who built those airlines to the point where they became attractive candidates for merger and acquisition? This legislation that we are considering today makes sure that in the age of economic deregulation in which airlines are operating there will be protection and respect for the rights and economic interests of workers.

I urge the House to adopt this legislation.

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to a very valuable member of our Aviation Subcommittee, the gentleman from the Virgin Islands [Mr. DE LUGO].

Mr. DE LUGO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4838, to amend section 408 of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 to ensure fair treatment of airline employees in airline mergers and similar transactions.

This bill, which I, along with a bipartisan group of 34 other members of the Committee on Public Works, cosponsored, is an essential step in keeping with the commitment we made to airline employees when the industry was deregulated. I would like to commend Mr. MINETA, chairman of the Aviation subcommittee for his leadership in this important area, and his commitment to keep the promise that we, as a Congress, had made to the employees of the airline industry.

Back in 1978, when we deregulated the airline industry, it was clearly not our intention that airline employees should bear an unreasonable amount of the burden that was sure to follow that decision. That is why we included such labor protection provisions [LPP] as we deemed both necessary and fair to ensure that the burdens from deregulation would not unfairly fall on those who could least bear them. However, the administration has once again failed to follow congressional directives. We are therefore faced with no alternative but to pass legislation that would enforce these necessary protections for members of the airline industry.

The imposition of labor protection provisions is not a new proposal. The practice was followed by the Civil Aeronautics Board prior to its sunset in 1984. but since then, the Department of Transportation has refused to impose labor protection provisions except in limited cases. However, the fact remains that with each new announcement of a proposed takeover or merger, the fate of airline employees become more tenuous.

We are therefore being called upon to ensure that airline employees are granted the labor protection benefits they are rightly entitled to under the law. This bill is the only fair and equitable way to ensure that congressional intent will be followed by the Department of Transportation.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the House to support this important legislation.

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to another valuable member of our Aviation Subcommittee, my very distinguished colleague, the gentleman from California [Mr. Bosco].

Mr. BOSCO. Mr. Speaker, I thank my colleague from California for yielding me this time.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is important that we recognize that we are not setting new ground, but rather this legislation will reassert Congress' original intention when we deregulated the airlines.

Deregulation of the airlines was never meant to mean an abandonment of the working people who provide the services and the basic stability in our country in the entire air system all over the country. Today as airlines are merging and being taken over, employees are made many promises, and I can only speak from experience in California when some 6 years ago Continental Airlines was taken over by Texas Air. At that time the employees of Continental wanted to buy their own airline, to run it themselves. The Texas Air Corp. came to California, made a number of promises, one of which was that the Continental headquarters would not be moved out of California. The second was that no jobs would be lost by the merger, and the third was that Continental and Texas Air would be run as separate entities.

All three of those promises were broken within a year. Thousands of employees were left without jobs. The airline headquarters was removed from California and the airlines were run as one entity.

A very bitter strike ensued. Continental went into bankruptcy. Many people, including passengers, retirees and others lost money, and jobs, and retirement benefits and other benefits from this transaction.

Certainly the stability of our country's air system demands that Congress, when appropriate, put its will into this whole potpourri of takeovers and mergers. I think our will is definitely that working people be protected, and that the invisible hand not be left to do as it wants to with them.

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire how much time this gentleman from California has remaining?

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MOAKLEY). The gentleman from California [Mr. MINETA] has 2½ minutes remaining.

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I would just like to close by thanking all of those who have cosponsored the bill, both originally when we drafted it and as well as subsequent to that time, and especially the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. SNYDER] the ranking Republican on our full Committee on Public Works and Transportation, as well as the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT] the ranking member of our Aviation Subcommittee. I also want to thank the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HOWARD] chairman of our full Committee on Public Works and Transportation. They were all in there in the beginning when we did pass the Airline Deregulation Act of 1978, and all of us feel a very strong commitment about making sure that employees are treated fairly as these mergers continue to take place.

□ 1520

So I urge the Members to vote for H.R. 4838. It has very strong bipartisan support, and I am quite confident that we will be able to establish those kinds of fair ground rules for all employees.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, I want to express my appreciation for the initiative of our distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Aviation, the gentleman from California [Mr. MINETA] on H.R. 4838.

Mr. CLAY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4838, of which I am a cosponsor. H.R. 4838 seeks only to achieve what the administration has failed to require—the fair treatment of airline employees in mergers.

Since the deregulation of the airline industry, a major restructuring has been occurring in the airline industry. Airline after airline has been bought out or merged in order to avert bankruptcy. It seems all but inevitable that deregulation will create an industry with a handful of air carriers. Whether this turbulence is healthy or not remains to be seen. But, what is clear is that the job security of tens of thousands of dedicated and long serving airline employees is put at risk by these mergers.

When the airline industry was deregulated in 1978, Congress knew that those air carriers that were inefficient would fall to the wayside. Because of this and knowing that management would be able to protect itself, Congress wanted to prevent workers from unfairly bearing the brunt of such failures. The 1978 Deregulation Act sought to impose labor protective provisions to protect workers who were dislocated by ensuring their seniority and right to preferential rehire. Prior to its termination in 1984, the Civil Aeronautics Board always imposed LPP's. The CAB's successor, the Department of Transportation, has never imposed or implemented regulations to impose labor protective provisions.

My own district in St. Louis is about to be affected by the merger between TWA and Ozark Airlines. Secretary of Transportation Dole has just approved the merger and specifically rejected applying any labor protective provisions to ensure the fair treatment of each airline's employees. The Department claims that there is no threat of nationwide disruption to warrant worker protection. But, ask any airline worker today whether the industry is being disrupted and the answer would be different. Airline employees, passengers, and anyone who reads a newspaper knows what the Transportation Department does not—the airline industry and its work force are in the midst of a national crisis. As long as the Department of Transportation is not reqiuired to impose LPP's, the fate of airline workers will depend upon the political winds.

H.R. 4838 only reiterates what should have been clear a long time ago—the workers affected by deregulation are to be treated as fairly as the merging companies. Labor protective provisions are the only assurance that workers will be treated fairly under a merger. The Department of Transportation, which must approve all mergers of air carriers, has failed to use its statutory powers and it is about time that the Government respects that right. I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 4838.

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, I have nearly 10,000 constituents who could be impacted by Texas Air Corp.'s acquisition of Eastern Air Lines. These people have many legitimate misgivings about being merged into Texas Air. They fear for their jobs and they fear for their welfare. Some of these concerns arise from the highly structured seniority system of many of the airline industry's employee groups.

To be more specific, employee seniority for airline flight attendants, flight engineers, and pilots is the sole criterion for determining pay and promotional opportunities. Furthermore, this employee seniority is corporate specific. By that I mean, an airline employee's seniority applies only to the company he or she currently works for. This compensation system has traditionally tied airline employees to one employer. To leave his or her current job and become employed in the same occupation at another airline, an employee must return to the entry level position with the corresponding level of pay—almost always a minimum 50 percent reduction.

For airline employees to do this voluntarily is one thing. But when such action is forced on employees and ultimately results in displacements—as in many airline mergers and acquisitions—clearly, there is a need for an orderly process to protect the interests of these workers. This protection is found in H.R. 4838, a bill requiring the Secretary of Transportation to provide fair and equitable treatment of airline employees in mergers and acquisitions.

This idea is not new. No, indeed. Labor protective provisions, as this process is commonly known, were used by the Civil Aeronautics Board for many years before its sunset in 1984. However, they have disappeared under airline deregulation—partly due to the unstable operating environment—partly due to a Government agency unwilling to implement such provisions.

It is now time to legally mandate the implementation of labor protective provisions for airline employees involved in mergers and acquisitions. That is exactly what this bill would do and I compliment the leaders of the committee on both sides of the aisle for bringing the bill to the floor in such an expeditious manner.

But more than that, this bill would ensure that the employees of Eastern—indeed, the thousands of workers throughout this chaotic industry—would receive fair and equitable treatment as they make the transition from one job to another. They want work force integration protection. And they deserve no less.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 4838, Fair Treatment of Airline Mergers Act, and urge my colleagues' like support. I thank the gentleman from California [Mr. MINETA] for introducing this much needed legislation and for his leadership in shaping transportation policy through his work on the Committee on Public Works and Transportation.

Mr. Speaker, the deregulation of the airline industry, facilitated through the Airline Deregulation Act of 1978, brought the airline industry into an era of fierce competition. While fares have dropped dramatically, and service has expanded, a number of airlines and their employees have suffered. Lower fares have, in turn, lowered profits and weakened many unions, forcing employees to accept wage and benefit cuts. This, coupled with the bankruptcies of Braniff and Continental, and the mergers of TWA and Frontier airlines, have further jeopardized the rights of employees.

H.R. 4838 requires the Department of Transportation to: First, investigate airline merger applications to determine their effect upon employees; second, impose "labor protective provisions" in cases where the proposed merger will adversely affect wages or working conditions; and third, study the effect of mergers on minority employment.

The majority of us in this Chamber rely on the airlines and airline employees, to take us to and from our duties here in Washington and our home districts. Many of these individuals are especially trained; we trust them with our lives and the lives of our loved ones, and yet their future and their livelihoods are subject to capricious policies based on profit margins. I urge my colleagues to adopt this legislation, H.R. 4838, to ensure some order and fairness for employees in the merger and dissolution of airlines.

Mr. FEIGHAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in enthusiastic support of H.R. 4838. The working people of America deserve to have their fundamental rights as workers protected. Laws establishing these rights came into being when the practices of some employers necessitated action from Government. Today new economic factors and corporate practices often present workers with different challenges to their job security.

The airline industry is relatively new. It is extraordinary for its accomplishments, its dependability and its role in keeping the country and the world moving. Change is a constant in this industry, where companies are continually responding to developing market forces, technologies and regulations. The special qualities of the airline industry also mean that its workers are faced with special challenges. To ensure adequate job security and equitable treatment airline workers require special protection.

Mergers between major companies do not happen in a vacuum. We require the Secretary of Transportation to approve airline mergers because it is clear that they effect the welfare of the industry and the economy as a whole. We must recognize that the welfare of thousands of employees is effected by these corporate activities as well. Basic labor protections from Government and carefully negotiated contract agreements do not help the worker whose employer has just been bought out. All those who work in this sometimes precarious industry know that their job is at risk whenever company executive decide it is time to make a deal. It is not fair that these workers be asked to do their jobs without protection that suits the nature of their industry. It is not right that Government consider the competitive propriety of major corporate decisions without considering those whose lives directly depend on those decisions.

I urge my colleagues to support H.R. 4838.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4838. It is a continuation of the policy practiced by the Civil Aeronautics Board of imposing labor protective provisions in merger cases. The bill is a reasonable approach to labor questions that arise.

It is too bad that this policy has not been continued since the sunset of the Civil Aeronautics Board. The case of Frontier Airlines, which is based in my district, illustrates the tragedy of this situation. If the regulations for the labor protective provisions had not been withdrawn by the administration, the United pilots would not currently be seen as the culprits and the Frontier employees would not be the victims filing for unemployment benefits. Lacking LPP regulations, Frontier has had to file for backruptcy.

It doesn't stop there. Immediately after the filing of the bankruptcy petition, medical insurance was discontinued. In addition, mortgage payments cannot be made and realtors are already feeling the effects.

This legislation is a good way to prevent these problems in the future.

Mr. ACKERMAN. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in strong support of H.R. 4838, legislation that would require the Department of Transportation [DOT] to impose labor protection provision [LPP's] in any case where an airline merger or acquisition would reduce employment or otherwise adversely affect air carrier employees.

The need for this legislation is crucial because the air transport industry is experiencing a wave of mergers in the aftermath of deregulation. Before it was abolished in 1984, the Civil Aeronautics Board routinely insisted on LPP's in any airline merger. Since coming to office, however, the Reagan administration has repeatedly contended that unless there is a substantial national disruption of air service, LPP's are no longer needed. This bill is designed to reflect the congressional intent expressed in the Airline Deregulation Act of 1978, and the directive issued in 1984 by the Aviation Subcommittee that LPP's should continue to be imposed in all pending airline merger cases, despite DOT's refusal to do so.

The persistence of this administration in attempting to dismantle hard fought labor protections is reprehensible. I became a cosponsor of H.R. 4838 because the bill would ensure against discriminatory practices and provide critical assistance to thousands of employees in the air transport industry. LPP's would not be imposed if DOT finds that there will be no adverse employment consequences as a result of a merger, or that the costs of the LPP's would outweigh the financial benefits of the proposed transaction.

For all these reasons, I urge my colleagues to support passage of H.R. 4838, to once again make LPP's mandatory in any airline merger.

Mr. TOWNS. Mr. Speaker, I want to lend my support to H.R. 4838, a bill to require the Department of Transportation to impose labor protective provisions [LPP's] in airline merger cases to ensure that the merger is fair to adversely affected employees.

This legislation reflects the intent of Congress in the Airline Deregulation Act of 1978. Unfortunately, airline employees never received the protections intended under deregulation. In addition, the Department of Transportation has been unwilling to follow the congressional directive, in the Civil Aeronautics Board Sunset Act of 1984, that merger LPP's should continue to be imposed. H.R. 4838 also calls for a study of the impact of deregulation on the employment of women and minorities in the airline industry.

As testimony before the House Subcommittee on Aviation indicated, LPP's "provide adversely affected employees with reasonable stability of employment and promote the prompt and fair resolution of potential labor problems. The absence of LPP's often produces instability, discontent, lower productivity, and most significantly, a lower morale which can be most serious in a safety-oriented industry * * *."

Mr. Speaker, I would urge my colleagues to adopt this bill today, to provide the necessary labor protection measures for airline employees.

Mr. EDGAR. Mr. Speaker, today, I rise in support of H.R. 4838, a bill which would require the Secretary of Transportation to impose labor protection provisions [LPP's] in airline mergers and similar transactions to ensure that the merger is fair to employees. This bill would also require the Secretary of Transportation to conduct a study of the effect of mergers and similar transactions of air carriers with respect to the employment of minority group members as air carrier employees.

Regrettably, DOT has failed to follow the longstanding policy of the Civil Aeronautics Board and the 1984 congressional directive that merger LPP's should continue to be imposed. Current DOT policy has been not to impose LPP's "unless it is necessary to prevent labor strife that could disrupt the national air transportation system," but in a deregulated system, it is unlikely that labor strife arising out of a merger would disrupt the national air transportation system since other carriers are free to provide the services affected by a strike.

The provision establishes fair procedures for the integration of seniority lists and should not be burdensome to the airlines. LPP's would not be imposed if DOT found that the projected cause of LPP's would outweigh the benefits.

Requiring merger LPP's is the least we can do to reverse the refusal of the Departments of Labor and Transportation to afford airline employees the protections which Congress intended them to have. I urge my colleagues to support this important piece of legislation to ensure that airline employees are not required to carry an unfair share of the costs of deregulation.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. MINETA] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4838, as amended.

The question was taken.

Mr. MACK. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5 of rule I and the Chair's prior announcement, further proceedings on this motion will be postponed.

SENSE OF CONGRESS ON ESSENTIAL AIR TRANSPORTATION

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution (H. Con. Res. 339) expressing the sense of Congress that the essential air transportation program should be maintained for the 10-year period for which it is authorized.

The Clerk read as follows:

H. CON. RES. 339

Whereas at the time of the enactment of the Airline Deregulation Act of 1978 Congress was concerned about the loss of air service to small communities that might result from airlines deregulation;

Where as in enacting the Airline Deregulation Act of 1978 Congress established the essential air transportation program to guarantee service to small communities and made a ten-year commitment to support program;

Whereas communities and air carriers have come to rely on this ten-year commitment to essential air transportation; and

Whereas an early termination of the essential air transportation program would be disruptive and would undermine the long-term viability of small community air service: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That it is the sense of Congress that—

(1) the essential air trasnportation program established in section 419 of the Federal Aviation Act of 1958 should be maintained for the ten-year period for which it is authorized; and

(2) no action should be taken by any executive department or agency to undermine the essential air transportation program.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, a second is not required on this motion.

The gentleman from California [Mr. MINETA] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair now recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. MINETA].

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this important resolution was introduced by the ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Aviation, the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT]. I am pleased to be a cosponsor of this important resolution.

The resolution deals with the Essential Air Service Program, an important program in the Airline Deregulation Act of 1978. When we passed the 1978 Deregulation Act we gave the airlines complete freedom of entry and exit. We were concerned that the airlines' freedom of exit would result in the loss of service to many small communities. To ensure that the small communities would not be required to bear an unfair share of the burdens of deregulation, we established the Essential Air Service Program, which provided that all communities receiving air service when the law was enacted would continue to receive at least a minimum level of service, supported by subsidy if necessary.

The administration has tried on several occasions to get the Congress to renege on its commitments to small communities by terminating the Essential Air Service Program prematurely. Congress has always decided to fund the program. It should be clear by now that we intend to live up to our 10-year commitment. This resolution emphasizes this commitment, and of equal importance, the resolution expresses the sense of the Congress that the administration should not try to undermine the program.

I would note in conclusion that not only would it be unfair to end the program prematurely, but in addition, premature termination would not be of significant help to the Federal budget, since the program costs only $30 million a year.

I commend my colleague, Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT, on introducing this resolution and I urge my colleagues to support it.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, when Congress passed the Airline Deregulation Act back in 1978, it included a special provision for small communities. We did this because we were concerned that airlines would use their new freedom under deregulation to reduce air service at small communities.

In many cases, this in fact occurred. Larger airlines did abandon small communities for more profitable markets. But because of the program we created, known as the Essential Air Service Program, commuter airlines came in to pick up the slack and provide new service.

Unfortunately, at some small communities, the quality of the service provided by commuters has not been that good. But the fact is that at most of these communities, that's the only air service they have. And with the development of newer planes that meet the short haul—less dense market need—service and equipment is getting better.

When we passed the Deregulation Act we promised that small communities would continue to have this essential air service for at least 10 years, that is until 1988. The program has only 2 more years to run.

For the last 2 years, however, the administration has proposed to eliminate the Essential Air Service Program ahead of schedule.

I believe we made a commitment to our Nation's small communities when we passed the Deregulation Act that we would maintain the Essential Air Service Program for 10 years. That is why I introduced this resolution along with 20 other members of the Public Works and Transportation Committee. It makes clear that we are standing by our commitment.

It is important that we do stand by this commitment not only because it is the right thing to do but for several practical reasons as well.

There are now about 50 small air carriers that rely on the essential air service subsidy payments to serve about 150 small communities in 40 States. If the subsidy payments were to end, these communities would almost certainly lose all air service and be cut off from the Nation's air transportation system.

Moreover, the very existence of proposals to eliminate the EAS Program ahead of schedule has created uncertainty among the small communities and commuter air carriers that rely on it and on the staff that administers it. This can only serve to undermine the long-term viability of small community air service. I believe it would be better to let the EAS Program continue for the 10-year period promised in the Deregulation Act before considering whether to modify or abolish it.

I should also note that the cost of the Essential Air Service Program has decreased dramatically. For next year, the House is appropriating only $19 million. This is down from the $100 million plus that was required just a few years ago.

A similar resolution has been introduced in the other body by Senators ABDNOR, KASSEBAUM, ANDREWS, PRESSLER, and EXON.

I want to thank Mr. HOWARD, chairman of the full Public Works and Transportation Committee, Mr. MINETA, chairman of the Aviation Subcommittee, and Mr. SNYDER, ranking member of the full committee for their cosponsorship and assistance with this resolution.

I urge my colleagues to support this resolution here today.

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. OBERSTAR].

Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, I thank the chairman of the subcommittee for yielding me the time, and I offer my appreciation both to him and to the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT] who has spearheaded the effort to bring this resolution to the House today, and to the subcommittee for acting so expeditiously on such a critical piece of legislation.

I think it is clear, given the history of airline deregulation, that just as in the case of the bill we have previously debated, the labor protection provisions, the essential air service provision is another critical partnership provision of the Airline Deregulation Act of 1978, without which economic deregulation might never have emerged from the legislative mill.

I think it is fair to say that the more than 400 communities that were receiving service prior to enactment of the 1978 law, and the Members of Congress who represent those communities would have dug their heels in and said, "No, we are not going to have deregulation that wipes out air service, an essential means of transportation and of economic communication with the world beyond our borders."

We simply would not have seen that legislation emerge without those two very key, as I call them, partnership provisions.

In the years immediately following deregulation, the funding that the Congress provided as a mechanism for a transition over a 10-year period from a regulated environment to a deregulated environment, as well as the assurance of airline service to those communities worked reasonably well.

□ 1530

But in recent years the Office of Management and Budget, under the present administration, have consistently asked the Congress to eliminate those funds, submitting zero budgeting for the Essential Air Service Program.

I can witness from the perspective of congressional district and communities there that have had economic distress, unemployment of 15, 18, 20 percent, would have had much more severe economic conditions were it not for the continuation of the airline service.

We needed that service. We needed the quality of aircraft to provide transportation of cargo and the quality of service to provide transportation of people, businessmen, travelers, vacation travelers to make sure that the economic viability of those small towns was retained, not frittered away by some policy conceived in Washington, DC.

I do not want to see the demise of the Essential Air Service provisions due to Gramm-Rudman or because of some new bureaucrat arriving on the scene, some new head of an agency who says, "Why do we have that program? Let's do away with it, we can't afford it"; because a commitment was made in law, not just a passing word. This is not just a campaign promise. It is written in law that this Essential Air Service will be provided and will be continued and we will be doing more than breaking faith with the communities. We would be breaking the law if we do not continue to provide this service for that full 10-year transition period.

At the end of that time, when the honor roll is called of communities across America who lost air service, whose small business men cannot commute to conduct the affairs of their communities, whose community leaders cannot travel, whose citizens are deprived of adequate transportation, and today airline travel is not a luxury, it is an essential service, I do not want those communities, the Bemidjis, the Brainerds, the Hibbings, the International Falls, the Worthingtons, the Fairmonts, the Mankatos of Minnesota or the nearly 400 other communities elsewhere across the United States to be on the honor roll of those interred in their economic grave by the failure of the administration or of the Congress to provide and live up to the essential air service requirements of the Airline Deregulation Act of 1978.

Mr. Speaker, I urge enthusiastic and overwhelming support for this resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MOAKLEY). The gentleman has consumed 5 minutes.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. BEREUTER].

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of House Concurrent Resolution 339 which expresses the sense of Congress that the Essential Air Service [EAS] Program be maintained for the full 10 years for which it was authorized.

For the past 2 years, the Department of Transportation [DOT] has proposed to eliminate the EAP which was to remain in effect until 1988 under the Airline Deregulation Act. The threat of eliminating the EAS, has cast doubts on the future of the program's life and has caused some airlines to reconsider their participation in the program—all to the detriment of our Nation's small communities.

There are presently about 50 small air carriers that receive the subsidy payments to serve about 150 small communities around the Nation. In Nebraska, we have 14 communities served by four air carriers which receive subsidies from the Essential Air Service Program. The AAA airlines is very important to several communities in the northern portion of my congressional district. If the subsidy payments were to end, these small communities would lose all air service and be cut off from the Nation's air transportation system.

Small communities throughout Nebraska for example, rely heavily on the Essential Air Service subsidy. Since much of Nebraska is sparsely populated, many communities sole link to the Nation's air transportation system is provided by this subsidy program.

In addition, it is my hope that the authorization committees of Congress will properly address the EAS Program after its scheduled termination and takes the appropriate action to insure the survival of air service for our Nation's small communities.

Mr. Speaker, while the overall national experience with airline deregulation has produced benefits, recent bankruptcies and consolidations continue to cause great concern for sparsely populated areas. Certainly small communities have not shared in the benefits. That is why the EAS was made a part of the law.

Mr. Speaker, I want to complement the Committee for bringing to the House this excellent and timely resolution.

Mr. Speaker, it is important for this body to go on record saying that we are against elimination of the EAS.

Again I support this resolution and urge my colleagues to vote for it.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of this resolution to express the sense of Congress that the Essential Air Service Program should be continued through its authorized life, through October 1988.

When Congress enacted the Airline Deregulation Act of 1978, we guaranteed that no community then received service from a certificated carrier would lose its air service. This section of the Deregulation Act has been a cornerstone in the success of airline deregulation because it stemmed a tide, which had arisen prior to deregulation, of communities losing all of their service.

The cost of the Essential Air Service Program has gone down dramatically over the years, a testament to its management by the Civil Aeronautics Board and the Department of Transportation's Office of Essential Air Service. Why the administration has repeatedly proposed termination of this efficient, cost-effective, beneficial program is simply beyond me.

With this resolution, hopefully the administration will understand that Congress has no intention of terminating the Essential Air Service Program prematurely. Hopefully, the administration will cease its efforts to undermine this well-functioning program.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the resolution and urge its passage.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. MINETA] that the House suspend the rules and agree to the concurrent resolution, House Concurrent Resolution 339.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the concurrent resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the concurrent resolution just agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

TRANSFER OF AIRPORT PROPERTY IN ALGONA, IA

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4492) to permit the transfer of certain airport property in Algona, IA, as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 4492

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Act entitled "An Act to authorize the Secretary of Transportation to release restrictions on the use of certain property conveyed to the city of Algona, Iowa, for airport purposes" (Public Law 94-243; 90 Stat. 281), is amended—

(1) in the first section, by striking out ", subject to the provisions of section 4 of the Act of October 1, 1949 (50 App. U.S.C. 1622c), and the provisions of section 2 of this Act,";

(2) in section 2, by striking out "Any" and inserting in lieu thereof "Except as provided in section 3, any"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new section:

"SEC. 3. The authority of the Secretary of Transportation under the first section of this Act shall be subject to the provisions of section 4 of the Act of October 1, 1949 (50 App. U.S.C. 1622c) and the provisions of section 2 of this Act, except with respect to the conveyance of any interest in real property to the Iowa Air National Guard for the construction of a National Guard armory.".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California [Mr. MINETA] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Arkansas [Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. MINETA].

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 4492 is a bill to permit the transfer of certain airport property at the Algona, IA, airport. This bill was introduced by Congressman BERKELEY BEDELL of the Sixth District of Iowa.

The city of Algona received its airport land from the Federal Government in 1947. When the city received the land, the deed stipulated that all of the land must be used for airport purposes. In 1976, the Congress enacted a law that permitted a release of the airport land from the usage requirements if two conditions are met; namely, that fair market value must be obtained from the sale or transfer of the land and that the proceeds of the sale must be used for airport purposes. These conditions have been imposed in prior legislation allowing other airports to convey land for non-airport purposes.

The legislation before us would permit the city of Algona to transfer approximately 10 acres of land without complying with the two conditions. My general position on these types of releases is that the conditions of fair market value and devotion of these proceeds to airport purposes should be met. Though this is my general position, I believe we need to examine the releases on a case-by-case basis to see if a particular local situation warrants a release without condition.

In the Algona situation, I believe such an unconditional release is warranted. The city wants to transfer approximately 10 acres of airport property to the Iowa Air National Guard so a new armory can be constructed. In return the city would receive an old armory located off the airport site. We have been assured that the new armory will not interfere with operation of the airport or future development needs. The transfer will meet local community economic needs and allow the land to be economically and efficiently used to the benefit of Algona's citizens. I believe these considerations override the Federal interest in limiting the use of all the airport land solely to airport purposes.

In the bill now before us, the unconditional release is limited to the land being transferred for the armory. This will preserve the release conditions for the rest of the airport.

I urge my colleagues to pass this legislation.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this bill that would release the Algona, IA, airport from certain deed restrictions.

It is my understanding that this action is needed to allow the city to trade 10 acres of airport land to the Iowa Air National Guard for the present guard armory that is located elsewhere in the city. The Air National Guard would then construct a new armory at the airport site.

Generally, our committee expects a city to receive fair market value when it sells airport land and to use the money received only for airport purposes. That won't be happening in this case. However, I believe that the use that the property will be put to—construction of an Air National Guard Armory—is sufficiently worthwhile to justify the action we are taking here today.

Furthermore, the bill was amended in subcommittee to limit the deed restriction removal to only those 10 acres that the Air National Guard intends to use. As limited, I believe this bill justifies our support.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. BEDELL], the author of the bill.

Mr. BEDELL. I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, this bill, H.R. 4492, would release the city of Algona, IA, from restrictions on the use of airport property. This is a straightforward, simple bill which would enable Algona to utilize 10 acres of airport property for the purposes of constructing an Air National Guard facility.

The National Guard facility is currently located on the county fairgrounds. This location is unsatisfactory. The city of Algona is interested in making 10 acres available at the airport for the construction of a new National Guard facility. The National Guard would then convey its existing facility to the city in exchange for this property.

There are several reasons why this exchange makes sense. The existing National Guard Armory is located in an already congested area. There is clearly inadequate training space and parking facilities, and the need for more land to expand the facility is great. If the facility were located at the airport, not only would the parking and training area problem be solved, but an expansion would allow for a significant increase in personnel. Such a move would benefit the entire community.

It is also important to recognize, however, that such a transfer is indeed in our national interest. Clearly, the National Guard Reserve units contribute significantly to our defense capability while reducing defense costs to the taxpayer. The expansion of this particular National Guard unit in Algona, IA, would, in effect, serve a much wider population than Algona; it would indeed serve the Nation's interest.

Algona, however, is effectively prevented from following through with these plans due to a 1976 restriction which stipulates that any transfer of property must allow for the fair market value of the land, and that such proceeds be used for airport improvement purposes. In this case, as the exchange of fairground land for airport land does not involve a calculation of fair market value, this proposed transaction cannot meet the guidelines stipulated in the 1976 law.

It is the purpose of H.R. 4492 to release the city of Algona, IA, from those restrictions which mandate that the airport must receive the fair market value for any land transactions. This bill simply allows for an exemption from such restrictions for the purposes of constructing a new National Guard facility on 10 acres of airport land. The proposed area is currently being used as farmland and would not interfere with airport operations. There would be no cost to the Federal Government resulting from such a transfer of property.

It is my hope, Mr. Speaker, that the need for this bill will be recognized so that the city of Algona will be allowed to proceed with its plans for the construction of the Air National Guard facility on this 10 acres of airport grounds.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4492, a bill to permit the transfer of airport property in Algona, IA. This legislation is sponsored by our distinguished colleague from Iowa, Mr. BEDELL. It would release the Algona airport from the conditions of a 1976 law regarding use restrictions imposed by the deed when the city of Algona received the land in 1947.

The city of Algona would like to transfer approximately 10 acres to the Iowa Air National Guard so that the guard can construct a new armory. The city will receive the guard's old armory. The reason for the legislation is that the old armory does not meet the condition in the 1976 law that fair market value must be received for any land transferred. Testimony presented in hearings on this bill indicated that in this case the needs of the local community override the general need for a requirement of fair market values.

Mr. Speaker, I urge our colleagues to join in support of this legislation offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. MINETA] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4492, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

PIPELINE SAFETY AUTHORIZATIONS

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 2092) to amend the Natural Gas Pipeline Safety Act of 1968 and the Hazardous Liquid Pipeline Safety Act of 1979 to authorize appropriations for fiscal years 1986 and 1987, and for other purposes as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 2092

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. NATURAL GAS PIPELINE SAFETY AUTHORIZATION.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 17(a) of the Natural Gas Pipeline Safety Act of 1968 (49 U.S.C. App. 1684(a)) is amended—

(1) by striking "and" at the end of paragraph (3);

(2) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (4) and inserting "; and"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(5) $3,200,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987.".

(b) GRANTS.—Section 17(c) of such Act (49 U.S.C. App. 1684(c)) is amended by inserting ", and $5,200,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987" after "September 30, 1986".

SEC. 2. HAZARDOUS LIQUID PIPELINE SAFETY AUTHORIZATION.

Section 214(a) of the Hazardous Liquid Pipeline Safety Act of 1979 (49 U.S.C. App. 2013(a)) is amended—

(1) by striking "and" at the end of paragraph (3);

(2) by striking the period at the end of paragraph (4) and inserting "; and"; and

(3) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(5) $800,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987.".

SEC. 3. REPORTING OF SAFETY-RELATED CONDITIONS.

(a) AMENDMENTS TO NATURAL GAS PIPELINE SAFETY ACT OF 1968.—

(1) REPORTING REQUIREMENT.—Section 3(a) of the Natural Gas Pipeline Safety Act of 1968 (49 U.S.C. App. 1672(a)) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(3) Not later than 12 months after the date of the enactment of this paragraph, the Secretary shall issue regulations requiring each person who operates pipeline facilities, not including master meters, to report to the Secretary.—

"(A) any condition that constitutes a hazard to life or property, and

"(B) any safety-related condition that causes or has caused a significant change or restriction in the operation of pipeline facilities.

Reports submitted under this paragraph shall be in writing and shall be received by the Secretary within 5 working days after any representative of a person subject to the reporting requirements of this paragraph first determines that such condition exists. Notice of any such condition shall concurrently be supplied to appropriate State authorities.".

(2) INSPECTION AND MAINTENANCE PLANS.—Section 13 of such Act (49 U.S.C. App. 1680) is amended by inserting after the fourth sentence the following: "Such plan shall include terms designed to enhance the ability to discover safety-related conditions described in section 3(a)(3)."

(b) AMENDMENTS TO HAZARDOUS LIQUID PIPELINE SAFETY ACT OF 1979.—

(1) REPORTING REQUIREMENT.—Section 203(a) of the Hazardous Liquid Pipeline Safety Act of 1979 (49 U.S.C. App. 2002(a)) is amended—

(A) by inserting "(1)" after "(a)"; and

(B) by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(2) Not later than 12 months after the date of the enactment of this paragraph, the Secretary shall issue regulations requiring each person who operates pipeline facilities to report to the Secretary—

"(A) any condition that constitutes a hazard to life or property, and

"(B) any safety-related condition that causes or has caused a significant change or restriction in the operation of pipeline facilities.

Reports submitted under this paragraph shall be in writing and shall be received by the Secretary within 5 working days after any representative of a person subject to the reporting requirements of this paragraph first determines that such condition exists. Notice of any such condition shall concurrently be supplied to appropriate State authorities.".

(2) INSPECTION AND MAINTENANCE PLANS.—Section 210 of such Act (49 U.S.C. App. 2009) is amended by inserting after the last sentence the following: "Such plan shall include terms designed to enhance the ability to discover safety-related conditions described in section 203(a)(2)."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HOWARD] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. McEWEN] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HOWARD].

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 2092, as amended, which is a simple, noncontroversial bill providing authorizations for administration and grants-in-aid to the States for fiscal year 1987 for the Natural Gas Pipeline Safety Act of 1968 and the Hazardous Liquid Pipeline Safety Act of 1979. The funds for these authorizations which total $9,200,000, are provided for through user fees. The bill additionally requires the Secretary of Transportation to issue regulations requiring the operator of pipeline facilities to report to the Secretary and the appropriate State officials any condition that constitutes a hazard to life or property, or any safety-related condition that causes or has caused a significant change in or restriction in the operation of the pipeline facilities.

Mr. Speaker, I am aware that there are other pieces of legislation which have been introduced dealing with the safety of pipelines. I have discussed this with Mr. ANDERSON, chairman of the Surface Transportation Subcommittee, and he has assured me these matters will be reviewed in hearings next year.

I urge the House to adopt this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, the Committee on Energy and Commerce was also active in this legislation. Representing that committee, I am very happy to yield such time as he may consume to the distinguished gentleman from Texas [Mr. BRYANT].

Mr. BRYANT. I thank the chairman for yielding.

I thank the Speaker.

I would only like to say, Mr. Speaker, that this bill has the full support of the members of the Committee on Energy and Commerce, which passed the bill out without any objection. It is a step forward in the public interest. It is a safety bill that needs to be passed. It contains provisions similar to the present law plus significant advances with regard to reporting of accidents, potential accidents before they happen.

I will submit furthermore for the RECORD pursuant to requests to be made later by the chairman of the Committee on Public Works for unanimous consent to include this material, a statement of the chairman of the Subcommittee on Fossil Fuels, Mr. SHARP, as well as extraneous material related to the legislative history of this matter.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

□ 1545

Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 2092. This legislation authorizes appropriations for the National Gas Pipeline Safety Act and the Hazardous Liquid Pipeline Safety Act. These acts provide an overall scheme for the regulation of the pipeline transportation of natural gas and hazardous liquids. These safety programs demonstrate an excellent example of the Federal-State partnership whereby Federal grants-in-aid assist the States in promoting the safe operation of pipelines.

Also included in the bill is a reporting requirement that mandates operators of pipelines must report to the Secretary of Transportation conditions that are hazardous to life or property or can affect the safe operation of the pipelines.

This legislation represents a compromise and will allow the continuation of these programs until they can be addressed with more detailed legislation next year. I urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER].

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Ohio for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the legislation. This is a program which is essential to the health and safety of the people who live and work in the vicinity of pipelines.

This program constitutes a cooperative effort by Federal and State government. Indeed, the largest portion of Federal spending authorized by Congress is sent to States in aid of their efforts, and all Federal spending on this program, $9.2 million, for fiscal year 1987 is recouped through user fees imposed on the pipelines, so there is no net Federal spending and no contribution to the budget deficit.

I would like to pay respect to my colleague from Kentucky, Mr. ROGERS, who deserves congratulations and thanks for bringing to the attention of the members of the Committee on Energy and Commerce the need to strengthen the regulations on reporting of unsafe conditions. That amendment is in this legislation.

Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Ohio for yielding this time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of H.R. 2092, the Federal pipeline safety authorization. I also wish to commend both the Energy and Commerce Committee and the Public Works and Transportation Committee for their oversight on pipeline safety and their work toward bringing this measure to the floor.

The Pipeline Safety Program is a little noticed, yet highly important activity within the Federal Department of Transportation. Its significance lies in its charge to regulate the operation of gas and liquid pipelines, and its responsibility to ensure the safety of the millions of people living near and around the many miles of pipelines which grid the Nation.

Almost nowhere has the importance of our pipeline safety efforts been better realized than in Kentucky, where one operator recently suffered three major failures in an 11-month period. These accidents resulted in numerous injuries, destruction of property, and five deaths. As two of these failures occurred in my district, I have taken a deep interest in our pipeline safety requirements and the Office of Pipeline Safety.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2092 provides essentially three things. First, it authorizes funds to carry out the Natural Gas Pipeline Safety Act and the Hazardous Liquid Pipeline Safety Act for fiscal year 1987. Second, it provides and increases funding for grants to States which inspect and monitor pipeline operators on behalf of the Federal Government. Third, this bill adds important new reporting requirements to both of the aforementioned acts, providing better information on the conditions of pipelines to our regulators.

Mr. Speaker, earlier this year, I testified before the House Subcommittee on Fossil and Synthetic Fuels to document problems I had observed within our Pipeline Safety Program. It was my view that despite the funding and manpower shortages in the Office of Pipeline Safety, the program was not providing the level of monitoring and enforcement of which it was capable.

In addition, I had concerns that our State and Federal pipeline safety officials were not receiving adequate information about the serious problems occurring within some pipeline systems—information which might have prompted agency intervention in time to avoid a major accident.

I am pleased, therefore, that this bill includes language directing the Office of Pipeline Safety to issue regulations which require operators to report conditions that constitute a hazard to life or property, and safety related conditions which cause an operator to significantly change or restrict the operation of a pipeline. Operators would be required to make written reports regarding these conditions within 5 working days of their discovery, and would issue reports to both the Office of Pipeline Safety and the appropriate State agency. This language is the result of a proposal I brought to the attention of the Subcommittee on Fossil and Synthetic Fuels. I wish to thank both the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. SHARP] and the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER] for their work toward seeing its inclusion in the bill before us today.

This new provision has significance for two reasons. First, for the first time, operators will be required to report not only pipeline incidents, but also any severe unsafe conditions which could potentially cause an incident. Pipeline inspection officials could review this information and the proposed company response in order to ensure the problem is handled properly. Second, the provision provides for reports to be provided to both the Office of Pipeline Safety and the appropriate State agency. Direct reporting to the States is, in my view, important if a safety hazard exists. Additionally, this will allow States with their own Pipeline Safety Program to respond quickly to problems within their jurisdictions.

It is not the intention of this reporting requirement to generate a flood of information on routine changes and repairs. There is no need to burden our agencies with paperwork. The purpose as I see it is to disclose glaring, hazardous conditions which might, if left to linger, constitute an imminent danger. Every year a number of serious incidents occur around the country. We hear about them after they have occurred. In my district, subsequent to some accidents, it became public that serious conditions had existed in a system for months, unbeknownst to State and Federal agencies.

This new provision will provide that information, permit prompt investigation, and allow our Federal officials, in concert with participating State agencies, to act in the safety interests of those living near these lines. It is an important concept, and a big improvement in our Pipeline Safety Program.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2092 also provides additional funds for the grants-in-aid program. A number of the States continue to oversee inspections of either intrastate, or interstate and intrastate systems. These State agencies monitor the safe operation of pipeline systems in accordance with Federal standards; for this reason I believe the funds are well warranted.

The chairmen and ranking minority members of the Energy and Commerce Committee, its Subcommittee on Fossil and Synthetic Fuels, the Public Works and Transportation Committee, and its Subcommittee on Surface Transportation, all are to be complimented for their work on their respective parts of this measure.

While this good work may not eliminate all pipeline accidents, it takes a positive and necessary step in that direction. I urge adoption of the bill.

Mr. McEWEN. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VENTO].

Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 2092 providing for the reauthorization of the Federal pipeline safety program administered by the Department of Transportation for one year.

I want to commend the chairman of the Public Works and Transportation Committee, Mr. JAMES HOWARD, and the chairman of the Subcommittee on Surface Transportation, Mr. ANDERSON, and the chairman of the Energy and Commerce Subcommittee on Fossil and Synthetic Fuels, Mr. SHARP, for bringing this important legislation to the House floor today. I also want to commend my colleagues on the Judiciary Committee, chaired by Mr. RODINO, for also reporting this measure.

Mr. Speaker, the importance of Federal regulation of hazardous pipelines was underscored in my home State of Minnesota recently as a result of a terrible tragedy.

On July 8, an underground pipeline owned and operated by the Williams Pipeline Co. ruptured in Mounds View, MN, spilling a still undetermined amount of gasoline into the streets of a quiet suburban residential community. An explosion and fire killed a young mother and her daughter and seriously injured another woman. Many homes in Mounds View suffered extensive damage. This was only the latest and most tragic accident in a series of pipeline spills involving the Williams Pipeline Co. in Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, you can only imagine the fear and concern that faced these Mounds View, MN, residents when in the middle of the night they faced 60-70 foot flames in a three block area, manhole covers flying into the air from the force of exploding gas fumes in the storm sewers, gas flowing into the surface waters and finally the tragic death of a mother and her daughter seeking safety.

There are over 1.7 million miles of hazardous liquid pipelines and natural gas pipelines in the United States. Unfortunately, too often, these extensive pipeline systems receive wholly inadequate Federal attention and inspection. The results of a pipeline accident can range from serious environmental damage, often involving soil and ground water contamination, to the loss of life such as occurred early one morning in Mounds View.

Mr. Speaker, I have had a long-standing interest in the issue of pipeline safety. In 1983, I introduced H.R. 3314 which sought to mandate stricter testing standards for hazardous liquid pipelines. In 1984, a report that I requested from the General Accounting Office [GAO] on pipeline safety revealed that there were only 17 field inspectors who were responsible for monitoring the safety of 1.7 million miles of pipeline nationwide.

Recently, working with my colleague and friend, MARTIN SABO, along with Appropriations Transportation Subcommittee Chairman BILL LEHMAN, we were successful in appropriating additional funding for the hiring of two additional field inspectors in the Midwest Office of Pipeline Safety. Additionally, the Transportation Department appropriation bill directs the Department to undertake annual comprehensive inspections of pipeline operators in the central region and to prepare a report assessing the need for mandatory quality assurance requirements for pipeline operators.

On August 12 of this year, I introduced H.R. 5401, the Safe Pipeline Act of 1986, a comprehensive bill which seeks to strengthen our Federal pipeline safety program and which gives local governments and communities access to information which they need to know in responding to pipeline accidents. H.R. 5401 also contains provisions which would mandate more reliable shutoff valves to be used in emergencies as well as a strict testing regimen along with new siting requirement for new pipelines.

I certainly regret that time didn't permit a full consideration of these changes and realize that today will not be the time or place to debate the features of H.R. 5401, but I would certainly hope that the passage today of a 1-year reauthorization for Federal Pipeline Safety Program will set the stage for full hearings early next year designed to strengthen our Pipeline Safety Program further. We cannot afford to be complacent about the dangers which face our communities. Surely we must provide the DOT/OPS the tools and the people to do the job of pipeline regulation.

Minnesota Governor Perpich has recently appointed a task force which is reviewing the issue of pipeline safety, and the National Transportation Safety Board has announced Minnesota hearings at my request. The findings of both these activities will permit a wealth of data and understanding to establish new public policies when the Congress addresses this issue in the near future.

I welcome the privilege and opportunity to work with subcommittee Chairman ANDERSON and subcommittee Chairman SHARP and Chairman HOWARD and other interested Members to develop comprehensive pipeline safety legislation which will fill in the gaps in our current regulatory efforts.

□ 1555

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VENTO. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. HOWARD. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank the gentleman from Minnesota for his statement. We certainly are well aware of the legislation that he introduced last month. One of the reasons, I would like to say, that we have only a 1-year authorization in this bill is that early next year, as Chairman ANDERSON has indicated, we will be able to conduct further hearings and certainly incorporate a great deal of the gentleman's legislation.

Mr. VENTO. I thank the chairman and I thank the subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON] and I urge Members to act on this measure today.

Mr. ANDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 2092, a bill to amend the Natural Gas Pipeline Safety Act of 1968 and the Hazardous Liquid Pipeline Safety Act of 1979 so as to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1987.

Hearings were held on this bill last year and the bill as now amended has been agreed upon by all of the House committees to which it was referred. This amended version provides for fiscal year 1987 authorizations for the Pipeline Safety Program administered by the Department of Transportation.

H.R. 2092 now provides for authorizations for $3,200,000 for carrying out the Natural Gas Pipeline Safety Act, $800,000 for carrying out the Hazardous Liquid Pipeline Safety Act, and $5,200,000 for carrying out the State Grant Program for both acts.

In addition, H.R. 2092 directs the Secretary of Transportation to issue regulations requiring pipeline operators to report any safety condition that constitutes a hazard to life or property, or any safety-related condition that causes or has caused a significant change or restriction in the operation of a pipeline.

Last year, Congress authorized a User Fee Program to cover the cost of implementing the Pipeline Safety Program by the Department of Transportation. The User Fee Program has been implemented and user fees will cover the costs for the program for fiscal year 1987.

The State Grant Program is very successful but still needs improvement. The States participating in the grant program have been requesting more Federal support for the program.

Currently, pipeline safety grants reimburse States for 31 percent of their inspection costs. This legislation will increase the Federal funding of this State program to 36 percent. This increase in funding is to be used by the States for activities that directly enhance pipeline safety, such as increasing inspections and training.

In order to assure that this will occur, the administrator of the research and special programs administration at the Department of Transportation is directed to develop and implement a program to ensure that the additional funds will be used to improve pipeline safety. Next year, I intend to review that program and the overall inspection program carried out by the Department of Transportation.

Finally, Congressman VENTO and Congressman SIKORSKI have both contacted me relative to amending the two pipeline safety acts. I have assured both Congressman VENTO and Congressman SIKORSKI that their respective proposals will be heard next year by my subcommittee.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation is not controversial and insofar as I know there is no opposition to it. I, therefore, urge my colleagues in the House to support passage of H.R. 2092.

Mr. SIKORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I'd like to thank the gentleman from California [Mr. ANDERSON] for his work in the area of pipeline safety. While my amendment on siting standards for hazardous liquid pipelines was not included in H.R. 2092, I appreciate the gentleman's commitment to hold hearings on this life and death issue. When the facts are brought out in these hearings, I believe we'll get the kind of tough pipeline safety laws contained in my amendment and in the Energy and Commerce version of this bill.

My amendment to H.R. 2092 simply proposed to implement the recommendation of the National Transportation Safety Board that hazardous liquid pipelines be subject to siting standards similar to those already in effect for natural gas. The fiery explosion of a gasoline pipeline last July in a residential area of suburban Minnesota—in which two people were killed and another was severely burned—underscores the need for such action.

Since the accident, the citizens of Minnesota have become increasingly frustrated with the Federal Government's law enforcement of pipeline safety. Representatives of the petroleum pipeline industry continue to express reservations to my staff about any siting standards for their pipelines. They fear for the bottom line. What these gentlemen don't realize, I respectfully submit, is that safety is part of the bottom line, too. If our citizens don't believe the Federal Government is protecting them, they won't allow these pipelines be built at all in their communities. They'll do what the citizens of Mounds View, MN, have done. They'll sue to get the pipes pulled out of the ground.

I hope that in holding his hearings the gentleman from California will address a number of safety issues that have been raised by the accident in Mounds View. I also understand that Mr. SHARP, Chairman of the Subcommittee on Fossil Fuels, intends to hold further oversight hearings into the Department of Transportation's failure to enforce pipeline safety laws. I look forward to working with him, my colleague from Minnesota, Mr. VENTO, and the chairman of the full Energy and Commerce Committee, Mr. DINGELL, who also has expressed an interest in investigating this matter.

The DOT's lack of initiative and agressiveness in enforcing pipeline safety has placed a heavy burden on communities that are ill-equipped to deal with the complicated, technical issues involved. To protect their citizens, local officials have had no choice but to step into the void on an ad hoc basis. Americans expect, and have a right to expect, effective regulation of these dangerous, but necessary, pipelines. They have a right to expect basic safety in their neighborhoods. I look forward to working with all of you to improve our Nation's pipeline safety laws, the way they are implemented, and the way they are enforced.

My additional views on H.R. 4426, the Energy and Commerce Committee's pipeline safety bill, follow.

Mr. Speaker, significant tough new pipeline safety requirements are contained in section 3 of H.R. 4426. Since committee action on June 26, 1986, a major pipeline explosion in Minnesota has underscored the importance of such improvements in Federal regulation.

In the early morning hours of July 8,1986, a quiet neighborhood in Mounds View, MN, was ripped apart by explosions from a leaking gasoline pipeline. A woman and her 7-year-old daughter were killed in the resulting fire, and another woman was severely burned.

The pipeline that exploded passed through a number of towns that I represent, and several other pipelines operated by the same company traverse my district as well. In examining this issue, my staff and I have spoken with a number of key Federal, State and local officials involved in the accident investigation.

Several important issues, both general and specific, have emerged during the course of these discussions which I believe the Congress should take into account as it considers future pipeline safety legislation.

First, pipeline testing methods ordered by the Department of Transportation [DOT] are inadequate and may, in fact, contribute to accidents in the long term.

State and Federal pipeline regulators frequently recommend the use of hydrostatic testing before allowing a pipeline to be returned to service following an accident. In this procedure, the pipeline is filled with water and pressurized to determine if it is capable of withstanding certain pressures. Flaws which may not be so severe as to rupture at the time of testing will not be detected. Yet these same flaws can be aggravated under the high pressures of the test, much the same way that bending a paper clip weakens it without causing it to break. During the course of normal pressure cycles, the flaw may propogate and eventually fail. Recommendation No. 1 in the committee oversight findings is a start at addressing this problem. This recommendation requires the increased use of instrumented inspection devices known as "smart pigs" in certain situations, such as pipelines located in urban or suburban areas like Mounds View. Smart pigs will not detect all possible fail modes or flaws, but can decrease the likelihood of failure by providing greater information regarding the condition of the line.

Second, generally, pipeline testing is conducted in neither a rigorous scientific nor systematic fashion. This places public health and safety at risk.

The Mounds View case is particularly instructive on this point. In 1984, the same pipeline was hydrostatically tested under order by the Department of Transportation. An attempt was made to pressurize the pipeline to 2,400 pounds per square inch. This pressure level was never achieved, because the pipe ruptured in 16 different places during the test. A pressure level of 1,900 pounds was finally achieved, an apparently arbitrary maximum operating pressure of 1,500 pounds was finally ordered. This pipeline was operating at 1,480 pounds when it ruptured in the Mounds View accident.

According to representatives of the National Transportation Safety Board (NTSB), in 1984 test produced absolutely no useful information to assist investigators in determining the causes of the 16 ruptures that occurred during the test. In addition, it may have contributed to the accident at Mounds View. While we can only hypothesize that testing the pipe at such high pressures may have contributed to the accident last month, we can state with great certainty that this test did not provide officials with sufficient data to determine a safe operating level for permanent operation of the pipeline. Clearly, 1,500 pounds was too high. It is unconscionable that we are left to discover this fact only when a woman and her child are killed, and their neighborhood laid to waste.

What is most incredible, and of greatest concern to the citizens of Minnesota, is that DOT seems poised to repeat these same mistakes in its current handling of the Mounds View accident. According to the DOT order, the pipeline will be hydrostatically tested at 1,500 pounds. If there are no ruptures, the pipe will be allowed to operate at 900 pounds. Once again, the hydrostatic test may add to metal fatigue. Once again, it may not tell us anything about flaws in the pipe not severe enough to rupture at the time of the test. And once again, this lack of information could lead to another accident.

Laboratory testing of pipelines has revealed that identical pipe can rupture at widely varying pressures. According to NTSB staff, pipe has successfully sustained 4,000 pounds of pressure while other, superficially similar pipe failed at 900 pounds. Only more detailed metallurgical studies can provide the information needed to determine whether this pipeline can operate safely at 900 pounds—or at any other pressure, for that matter. Such tests are not now required by the DOT order for this case. According to NTSB representatives, the 900-pound operating level ordered by DOT is not based on any scientific or statistical analysis, but is predicated, rather, on what the owner needs to operate the pipeline profitably.

Third, dangerous liquid fuel pipelines can be built in the midst of populated areas due to the lack of Federal siting standards.

Throughout my investigation of this matter, I have continually been struck by the Department of Transportation's lack of initiative in enforcing pipeline safety. No single issue illustrates this fundamental problem more than the lack of siting standards for liquid fuel pipelines. Although the Office of Pipeline Safety at DOT enforces siting standards for natural gas pipelines, this same office has failed to carry out the explicit recommendation of the National Transportation Safety Board that DOT promulgate and apply such standards for equally dangerous liquid pipelines.

The Office of Pipeline Safety at DOT is the Federal regulator for pipeline safety. Human lives depend on how well it performs that job. I find it totally unacceptable that such experts, entrusted with great responsibility, lack the initiative to apply the strict safety standards needed to protect the public. While we may excuse the prior lack of Government concern that allowed a hazardous pipeline to be built in an already populated suburb in 1957 (aerial photographs show that the Mounds View accident area was already well settled at the time of pipeline construction), we cannot excuse a failure on the part of Government to promulgate such standards in the wake of horrific accidents that have occurred in the intervening years. If DOT continues to ignore its authority—and responsibility—to issue siting standards for hazardous liquid pipelines, then Congress will have to use its legislative powers to compel them into doing their job. I have therefore suggested an amendment to H.R. 4426 that would require Federal standards for the siting of hazardous liquid pipelines. This amendment could be added to H.R. 4426 during consideration of the bill by the Committee on Public Works and Transportation Committee, or during other action on Federal pipeline safety law. It is urgently needed.

In conjunction with tougher safety regulations for existing pipelines, Federal siting standards could significantly reduce the potential for fatal accidents along our Nation's pipeline system. Safety is too important to leave to individuals within the Department of Transportation who are conducting business as usual while an aging national pipeline network threatens the lives of our citizens.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the amendment in the nature of a substitute to H.R. 2092. This bill has the support of the Energy and Commerce Committee.

It is a 1-year authorization of $3.2 million for administration of the Natural Gas Pipeline Safety Program, $800 thousand for administration of the Hazardous Liquid Pipeline Safety Program, and $5.2 million for the States Grants-in-Aid Program.

This substitute also contains new reporting requirements for unsafe conditions. Historically, pipeline safety operators were only required to report major safety accidents called incidents. Near misses or even severe hazards were not required to be reported. In the past, operators simply rectified the condition; regardless of the severity of a safety condition or problem, it was not included in the pipeline safety data system.

Now, for the first time, the Pipeline Safety Program will evaluate safety conditions prior to accidents, not only after the fact. The program can become predictive and preventive of accidents, not simply reactive to accidents.

Section 3 of H.R. 2092 was originally contained in H.R. 4426 as reported by the Energy and Commerce Committee. The report accompanying H.R. 4426 would now be part of the legislative history of H.R. 2092 if it is agreed to by the House. I therefore ask permission to include the relevant sections of the report on H.R. 4426 at this point in the RECORD, since it covers the legislative history of section 3 as well as numerous Energy and Commerce recommendations concerning the Federal Pipeline Safety Program.

COMMITTEE OVERSIGHT FINDINGS

Pursuant to clause 2(1)(3)(A) of Rule XI of the Rules of the House of Representatives, the Subcommittee included oversight review of the program with the authorization hearing on March 18, 1986. Oversight findings and recommendations were noted in that hearing and subsequently discussed during the subcommittee and full committee mark-ups of the bill.

The Committee notes that there has been some recent progress in improving DOT's pipeline safety program. However, the Committee firmly believes that there are significant additional strides that can be made. A review of the program conducted during the March 18, 1986, hearing left the Committee uneasy about the lack of aggressive leadership in the pursuit of a cost effective, higher level of pipeline safety. The Office of Pipeline Safety should lead, challenge, criticize, innovate, and generally force the pipeline industry to the highest feasible safety standards.

The Committee has six recommendations:

1. The Department should require increase use of internal instrumented inspection devices, commonly known as "smart pigs."

Smart pigs provide a unique, environmentally acceptable way to inspect many pipelines and improve their safety records. The Department should require the use of smart pigs in those circumstances which will yield the greatest benefit. Increased use of smart pigs will likely decrease the cost of each inspection and improve reliability.

The Committee recommends that the Department set standards specifying where smart pig inspections would be required. These standards might be based on:

a. population density adjacent the pipeline,

b. unusual environmental circumstances that warrant a higher level of leak prevention,

c. leak history,

d. line size or line pressure,

e. type of line coating or absence of line coating, and

f. effectiveness of cathodic protection.

The Department could waive the mandatory use of smart pigs based on alternative equivalent tests if line geometry would prohibit the use of pigs or if the cost of such inspections would be excessive compared to the knowledge gained.

The Committee does not believe that the use of smart pigs can be universally justified but does believe that their increased use in the circumstances listed above is essential. The Committee notes that many of the nation's pipelines were designed for rural areas. With the rapid expansion of suburban areas, many of these former rural areas now contain subdivisions and shopping malls. Use of smart pigs in these areas is a cost effective way to assure a high level of safety in recently developed areas that have older pipelines.

The Committee has thoroughly reviewed the Department's report on smart pigs and suggests that the exclusive reliance on cost-benefit analyses to determine the circumstances for the use of smart pigs is inappropriate.

The Committee also notes that other advanced technologies can improve pipeline safety. As an example, the Committee believes that DOT should aggressively assist the Gas Research Institute in their research to use new technology to verify line cover over pipelines.

2. The Department should require the certification or licensing of pipeline operators.

Certification of operators and inspectors is required for similar professions, such as boiler operators and inspectors. The Committee recommends that DOT immediately begin developing a certification program required for all pipeline operators. While the Department may be interested in the results of the Alabama program to license operators, that experience should be used as a basis of how to establish a licensing program, not as an excuse to delay consideration of whether it should be done.

At the March 18, 1986, hearing, the Department testified that when the issue of certification of operators was addressed several years ago, DOT concluded that such certification was "properly a state prerogative, not a federal prerogative." The Committee rejects this view. The Committee notes that pipelines are the only form of transportation that do not already require a licensed operator.

Concerning the licensing of pipeline inspectors, the Department stated in a March 6, 1986, letter that a certification or licensing program could assist in raising the professionalism of state inspectors. The Department stated that because of state inspector's diverse backgrounds in education and experience, the Department believes that the appropriate method to enhance their professionalism is "by increasing their knowledge and skills through training at RSPA's Transportation Safety Institute." This statement implies that certification and training at TSI are mutually exclusive. The Committee believes they are not. "Divergent backgrounds in education and experience" argue in favor of both TSI education and a certification procedure to ensure a minimum acceptable level of education and experience for inspectors.

3. The Department should clarify the term "unaccounted-for gas" and clearly identify the systems which represent imminent or potential safety problems.

Currently the concept of unaccounted-for-gas is only slightly correlated to a safety problem, since much unaccounted-for-gas is simply gas which is used without being metered.

A more useful concept might be "lost gas." "Lost gas" is gas which is not consumed and for which there is no explanation except leakage. High leakage is expected to have strong correlation to safety problems. The Department should require the estimation of all gas consumption by distribution systems and publish this information in a form that indicates the potential or lack of potential for a system to be a safety hazard. The Committee believes that the Department has the information already in hand to do this expeditiously. However, the Committee believes that the Department has not been clear in organizing this information and communicating the safety condition of distribution systems to the Committee or the public. The Committee expects DOT to develop and clearly identify those systems with severe safety problems and to clarify the terms and measurement of "unaccounted-for-gas" so that individuals outside DOT can reasonably understand the safety derived significance of the numbers.

4. The Committee directs DOT to submit to the Committee a report on the advisability of holding operators and owners individually responsible for operation of pipelines with conditions known to be unsafe.

There is precedent for this concept in environmental areas as well as the engineering, architecture and medical professions. The Department may already have authority to hold operators individually responsible. The Committee wishes clarification on when this authority would be or has been utilized.

The report should also consider the possibility of imposition of the penalties for pipeline transmission companies that knowingly sell gas to distribution companies that the transmission company knows to be unsafe. DOT has advised the Committee that it may already have the authority to do this. The Committee recommends that DOT develop and publicize a plan for using this authority and seek any additional legislative authorization needed.

5. The Committee directs the Department to make improvements in its communications which will ensure notification of reportable incidents to appropriate agencies in each State, and to report to the Committee on improvements made and results achieved.

The Committee is concerned about reports it has received regarding poor communication between the Office of Pipeline Safety (OPS) and State agents with respect to reportable incidents on interstate transmission facilities. The Committee recognizes that progress has been made by the OPS to ensure that it is notified once a telephone report has been made to the National Information Center. However, the Committee believes it also is vital for States, and in particular States which serve as agents for the Secretary with respect to interstate facilities, to receive notification at the earliest opportunity following discovery of a reportable incident.

This recommendation is a direct result of State concern voiced subsequent to the three accidents on the same pipeline system in Kentucky during 1985 and 1986.

6. The Committee directs the Department to include carbon dioxide (CO_2) pipelines in their regulation of hazardous liquids pipelines.

The Committee believes that due to both the high pressure and high volume of these lines, they constitute a possible severe hazard that is not yet fully recognized. the Committee also notes that CO_2 is regulated as a hazardous material for truck and rail transportation but is not regulated as a hazardous material in pipelines. The Committee sees no rational explanation for this inconsistency and directs DOT to include CO_2 pipelines within their safety regulation.

If the Department feels it does not have sufficient authority with existing law to do this, it should advise the Committee.

Section 3

Section 3 contains additional reporting requirements. Historically pipeline operators were only required to report pipeline "incidents." The specific requirements were detailed in 49 CFR 191.3 for natural gas. An incident is basically a major pipeline accident. Near accidents or severe conditions have not required reports. A company could simply correct the condition without advising anyone of the problem. Section 3 corrects this deficiency. DOT must now issue regulations requiring a pipeline to report all severe unsafe conditions to DOT and the appropriate state authority. The intent of this section is to provide safety regulating authorities with greater information on the condition of pipelines subject to the reporting requirements of the NGPSA and HLPSA.

The federal and state regulators will be expected to review proposed corrective action to assure that it is appropriate for the severity of the condition.

Two types of conditions are required to be reported. The first is conditions that constitute a hazard to life or property. In determining a condition that constitutes a hazard to life or property, it is not the intention of the Committee to require reporting of routine replacement, repair or other types of maintenance. It is the Committee's intent that reports be rendered to the Secretary and appropriate state authority when the circumstances or the physical characteristics of the pipeline facilities change to the extent that a severe and proximate hazard to life or property exists requiring expeditious corrective action.

The Committee expects both isolated conditions and aggregate conditions to be included. Any single severe condition must be reported as well as a severe safety hazard that exists because a number of less severe conditions in total may indicate a deteriorating or questionable system. For example, extensive corrosion along a pipeline might require notification even if each individual example of the corrosion would not require reporting.

Second, any safety-related condition that causes or has caused the operator to restrict operating conditions would require reporting. For example, if an operator found evidence of extensive corrosion or flaws in a pipeline, the operator might simply reduce the operating pressure and continue to operate the line. This reduction in pressure would eliminate the potentially unsafe condition. These reductions in pressure and other similar operating restrictions would require reporting.

The Committee has required that written reports be made within five working days of discovery of an unsafe condition. This method was selected over a telephone report to allow for accurate transmittal of complete information to DOT. The Committee emphasizes that DOT must receive the report within five days of discovery. To ensure that this occurs, operators should avail themselves of overnight delivery services or electronic mail. If necessary, DOT should establish an electronic mail box for this purpose.

The five working days starts from the time any individual or representative determines that a severe safety related condition exists. If a field inspector is the first individual to observe the problem, the five day period starts when he first determines there is a severe problem, not when higher management is advised of the problem.

The Committee notes that the reporting of conditions as opposed to incidents is a significant change in the pipeline safety program. Historically, the program has been a reactive one. If there was an accident, there was an enforcement action. Near accidents were not reported, and enforcement action typically was not taken. The reporting of conditions will allow DOT to take action prior to an accident. The Committee feels this is a significant improvement and expects the Department to use the additional information to aggressively correct potential hazards.

H.R. 2092 is a 1-year authorization. As the committee has reviewed the Pipeline Safety Program, we have noted that it is severely in need of continued congressional oversight. I can assure other Members that this will be a high priority during the next Congress.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HOWARD] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 2092, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

The title of the bill was amended so as to read: "An act to amend the Natural Gas Pipeline Safety Act of 1968 and the Hazardous Liquid Pipeline Safety Act of 1979 to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1987, and for other purposes."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks, and to include extraneous matter, on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

AUTHORIZING FUNDS TO PRESERVE OFFICIAL PAPERS OF JOSEPH W. MARTIN, JR.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4244) to authorize funds to preserve the official papers of Joseph W. Martin, Jr., as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.R. 4244

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. ASSISTANCE AUTHORIZED.

In recognition of the public service of the former Speaker of the United States House of Representatives, Joseph W. Martin, Jr., and of the need for preserving the official papers of Speaker Martin, the Secretary of Education is authorized to provide funds in accordance with the provisions of this Act to assist in the construction of the Joseph W. Martin Institute for Law and Society at Stonehill College, North Easton, Massachusetts.

SEC. 2 CONDITIONS FOR ASSISTANCE.

No payment may be made under this Act except upon an application at such time, in such manner, and containing or accompanied by such information as the Secretary of Education may require in order to certify the amount of eligible funds. All such payments may be used in furtherance of the mission of the Joseph W. Martin Institute for Law and Society to establish a regional and national academic center for scholarship and applied research on the development of domestic and foreign policy during the career of Joseph W. Martin, Jr.

SEC. 3. DURATION OF ASSISTANCE.

Funds appropriated pursuant to this Act shall be made available to Stonehill College on or after October 1, 1986, and prior to the close of the fiscal year ending September 30, 1990.

SEC. 4. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATION.

There are authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out this Act for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1986, and for each of the three succeeding fiscal years, except that the aggregate amount so appropriated shall not exceed $6,000,000. Funds appropriated pursuant to this section shall remain available until expended.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] will be recognized for 20 minutes and the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS] will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS].

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4244, a bill to authorize funds to preserve the official papers of Joseph W. Martin, Jr.

In the entire history of the United States, we have only had 55 Speakers of the U.S. House of Representatives. Joseph W. Martin was among that small handful of leaders of this House which has rightfully been called the people's House.

Speaker Martin served in this body for 42 years, first being elected in the 69th Congress and serving through the 89th Congress. He also served as the minority leader from 76th through the 85th Congress with the exception of 4 years when he served as Speaker.

When the Republicans were elected as the majority party in 1946, their representatives chose Joseph Martin as their leader, and Congressman

Martin became Speaker Martin. Those years, 1947 and 1948, were a time of great turmoil with the United States emerging for the first time as the leading power in the world. Speaker Martin left his imprint on all the legislation moving through the Congress during that period.

When the Republicans again became the majority party after the election of 1952, they again chose Joseph Martin to be their leader. He again served with distinction as the Speaker of this body in 1953 and 1954.

The bill we have before us today authorizes $6 million in funds to be granted for the construction of an institute for law and society at Stonehill College in Massachusetts. This institute will be named after Joseph Martin, and will serve as a regional and national academic center for scholarship on the development of domestic and foreign policy during the long and distinguished career of Speaker Martin.

I can think of no more appropriate tribute to the worthy service and distinguished career of the gentleman from Massachusetts. I also believe that it is a wise expenditure for the country to invest in a study of the policymaking which occurred during that long and crucial period of our Nation's history.

Therefore, I urge the adoption of this bill and commend Congressman CONTE for introducing it and encouraging its adoption.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] the author of the bill.

Mr. CONTE. I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, as the author of this legislation, I rise in strong support of H.R. 4244, a bill to preserve the papers of former House Speaker Joe Martin of Massachusetts. And I want to thank my good friends GUS HAWKINS, JIM JEFFORDS, BILL FORD, and TOM COLEMAN for allowing this bill to be brought up today under suspension of the rules.

An amendment is needed to the bill to clarify that the funds authorized go to the Secretary of Education. I want to thank Chairman HAWKINS for making these changes when he moved to bring the bill up under suspension of the rules.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 4244 authorizes up to $6 million to assist in the construction of the Joseph W. Martin Institute for Law and Society at Stonehill College in North Easton, MA. The legislation specifies that the library must serve as a regional and national academic center for scholarship and applied research on the development of domestic and foreign policy during the career of former Speaker Martin.

Joe Martin represented Massachusetts in the House of Representatives from 1925 to 1967, and for two terms as Speaker. His career spanned four decades of our Nation's life. He saw the Great Depression, World War II, the Korean conflict, the vision of John F. Kennedy, and the Vietnam conflict. His personal papers—housed now at Stonehill College in Massachusetts—reflect America's struggles to define itself during those four decades. It is fitting and appropriate that we honor former Speaker Martin in this way.

Mr. Speaker, when I introduced this bill, I went back and looked through the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of October 20, 1966, at the special order I took out for the retiring Joe Martin. And as I looked through the remarks of Members of the House from both sides of the aisle, I became convinced of the rightness of my approach in introducing this bill.

Former Speaker McCormack said that his "respect and admiration for Joe Martin is limitless." Jerry Ford said that Joe's "step has been slowed a little in the past 42 years but his kindly smile is still the same, and it beams from a face that we have come to know and love in the time he has been with us. The Halls of Congress will be a little darker and colder after he has left." And TIP O'NEILL said that the class of Joe's character "shines through in such crystal clear fashion that it strips him of any partisan label and establishes him as a great American citizen."

This is the man we honor today, Mr. Speaker. To me, he was always "Uncle Joe," a beloved and respected adviser and counselor. He was a speaker at my very first testimonial dinner following my first election to this body. It was because of him that I was appointed to the Appropriations Committee when I came here in 1958.

Mr. Speaker, on the floor here in 1966, I said that one of the "most distinguished lights ever to shine in these Halls will shine for the last time when the Speaker's gavel signals an end to the current session." H.R. 4244 will insure that that light will shine on still. Support the legislation. Honor the legacy of former Speaker Martin.

□ 1605

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to my good friend, the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, I want to thank the gentleman for pursuing this.

I think it would be a crime if we did not honor Joe Martin as we have today. He was a distinguished Speaker.

I must also add that Massachusetts, over the past several decades, has made an incredible imprint upon this Congress, with three distinguished Speakers, and not to have included Joseph Martin among them would have really been a sad oversight.

I also want to say that if the New England Republicans should ever have the chance to annoint at this moment a Speaker, I am sure that you would be the one that we would choose, having such a glorious history here in the House and having come from the great State of Massachusetts.

Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of this bill to honor Joseph W. Martin, a fine Republican and a fine man. It is fitting that we find time to pay tribute to a man who provided many years of service to this Nation and to his home State of Massachusetts. There is not much that I can add to the eloquence of the gentleman from Massachusetts, but I would like to make an additional comment or two.

It was clear from an early age that Joseph Martin would be a leader. At 7 he was a newsboy for the North Attleboro Chronicle; at 24 he was the paper's publisher. He entered politics at an early age as well. By the age of 30 he had been a State representative and had become a State senator. Joseph Martin was a political power in his home State and in national Republican affairs for most of his life.

As a Member of the U.S. House of Representatives for 42 years, Joseph Martin served almost continuously from 1939 to 1959 as the House GOP leader. More notably though, were the two periods during which he served as the Speaker, from 1946 to 1948, and from 1952 to 1954.

Republicans are fortunate to be able to claim Joseph Martin. He carried our banner well. This bill recognizes the public service that was provided by him, and acknowledges the need to preserve his official papers. Over the next 4 years, an aggregate amount not to exceed $6 million would be available through the Secretary of Education to Stonehill College for the purposes of assisting in the construction of the Joseph W. Martin Institute for Law and Society.

Such an institute appears to be a fitting commemoration to the former Speaker Martin. I urge my colleagues to support this worthy legislation.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MOAKLEY].

Mr. MOAKLEY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the motion to suspend the rules and pass the bill (H.R. 4244) to provide Federal assistance in connection with the establishment of the Joseph W. Martin Institute for Law and Society at Stonehill College.

The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE] and I have introduced this bill to provide an appropriate tribute to the late former Speaker, Joseph W. Martin, Jr.

Joe Martin was one of the ablest and most honorable men our State has ever produced. The Republican Party was quick to recognize his character and wisdom. Most of his 42-year career in the House was spent as his party's leader, both as minority leader and as Speaker during the 80th and 83d Congresses.

He served as national chairman of the Republican Party in the early 1940's and was permanent presiding officer of the party's national conventions from 1940 to 1956.

The records of House committees are preserved by the National Archives. But the papers of our Speakers are customarily donated to colleges. Speaker Martin deposited his papers at Stonehill College in North Easton. The college is establishing an institute that will serve as an academic center for scholarship and research on the development of domestic and foreign policy during the important years that Joe Martin was a national leader.

Mr. Martin's official papers span more than a generation, and are an important historical resource, and Federal assistance to the college in carrying out its archival responsibilities with respect to these records is highly appropriate.

I commend my friend from Massachusetts for his leadership in that matter, and I thank the bipartisan leadership of the Committee on Education and Labor for presenting this matter to the House today.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

I only do so for the purposes of thanking the chairman of the committee for his cooperation and help in bringing this piece of legislation to the floor, which I know means an awful lot to those of us who come from that area of Massachusetts.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4244, as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof), the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider as laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on H.R. 4244, the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 4421, COMMUNITY SERVICES PROGRAMS AMENDMENTS OF 1986

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 543 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 543

Resolved, That all points of order for failure to comply with the provisions of clauses 3 and 4 of rule XXVIII are hereby waived against the conference report on the bill (H.R. 4421) to authorize appropriations for fiscal years 1987, 1988, 1989, and 1990 to carry out the Head Start, Follow Through, dependent care, community service block grant, and community food and nutrition programs, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. BONIOR] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. QUILLEN], pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 543 waives clauses 3 and 4 of rule XXVIII against the conference report on H.R. 4421, the Human Services Reauthorization Act of 1986.

Clause 3 of rule XXVIII prohibits House conferees from reporting a conference report that recommends provisions which are outside of the scope of the matters that were committed to conference. Clause 4 of that rule provides that House conferees may not agree to include in the conference recommendation any proposal contained in the Senate legislation if, during consideration of the measure in the House, the Senate provision in question would not be considered to be germane. If we fail to waive these points of order, the conference report could be defeated by a single Member's action and the conference agreement so carefully crafted would collapse.

In order for the conference report to receive due consideration, the scope violation must be waived because—in certain instances where either the House or Senate passed provisions that the other House did not address—language was added to the original provision in order to make it acceptable to conferees from each House. In nearly every case, these technical improvements serve to add clarity to the program involved.

The waiver against nongermane Senate amendments included in the conference report is necessary mainly because the other body choose to use the bill as a vehicle to authorize two programs relating to human services that were not addressed in the House bill: Namely, the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Program and the Child Development Associate Scholarship Program. House conferees agreed to authorizations for both programs. In the case of the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Program, the authorization levels included in the conference report are lower than the levels originally contained in the Senate amendment.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 4421, as proposed to be passed by the conference committee, would reauthorize programs which are key to Federal efforts to mitigate poverty in our Nation. The bill would reauthorize Head Start, Follow Through, Dependent Care Block Grants, Community Services Block Grants, Community Food and Nutrition Programs, and the Low-Income-Home Energy Assistance Program. Each of those programs would be extended by 4 years.

By adopting the rule before the House, we will enable the compromise worked out in conference to be brought to a vote by the full membership. I urge adoption of the rule and swift passage of H.R. 4421.

□ 1615

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself as much time as I may use.

Mr. Speaker, this is a good rule. It is necessary because the conference report exceeds the scope of the legislation submitted to the conference and because it contains nongermane amendments from the other body. It extends six important programs to fight poverty.

Incidentally, all these programs were created since I came to Congress. One of the better programs is the Head Start Program. This bill extends its funding. I think it is a very necessary program, starting young children out to learn to dream and to get ahead.

We are headed into the fall and the winter and the Low-Income-Energy Program is a very fine one and should be passed with this conference report.

The other four are equally important. We have embarked on these programs over the past several years. They continue to be operative and that is sometimes the tragedy of the Congress itself. Once programs are initiated, they continue to be operative. In this instance, these are good programs.

Mr. Speaker, I do not object to the rule. I urge passage of the rule.

Mr. BONIOR of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, I call up the conference report on the bill (H.R. 4421) to authorize appropriations for fiscal years 1987, 1988, 1989, and 1990 to carry out the Head Start, Follow Through, Dependent Care, Community Services Block Grant, and Community Food and Nutrition Programs, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the conference report is considered as having been read.

(For conference report and statement, see proceedings of the House of September 12, 1986.)

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE] will be recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE].

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the conference agreement on H.R. 4421 extends six vital human services programs under the jurisdiction of the Subcommittee on Human Resources. They include: Head Start, Follow Through, the Dependent Care Grants Program, the Community Services Block Grant [CSBG], the Community Food and Nutrition Program, and the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Program [LIHEAP].

Although not included in the original House bill, provisions reauthorizing LIHEAP were part of the Senate bill. A modified version of the Senate provisions have been included in the conference agreement with the knowledge and cooperation of the Energy and Commerce Committee.

The conference agreement also contains provisions from the Senate bill creating two new programs. The Child Development Associate Scholarship Assistance Act and the CSBG demonstration partnership agreements. These provisions were included at the request of and with the strong support of the Senate.

The Child Development Associate Scholarship Program authorizes grants to States to assist eligible low-income candidates for the CDA credential, a performance-based certification for Head Start classroom staff and other child care providers. The CSBG demonstration partnership agreement authorizes 50 percent matching grants for the development of new, innovative approaches to addressing the critical needs of the poor. The total authorization for these new programs is $6.5 million, a reduction of $3.5 million from the amount proposed in the Senate bill.

All of the programs in the conference agreement would be authorized for 4 years from fiscal years 1987 through 1990, except for the CSBG demonstration projects, which would have a 3-year authorization.

A major difference between the House and Senate bills was the authorization levels. The House bill authorized such sums for all programs except CSBG which was authorized at $390 million for fiscal year 1987 and such sums thereafter. The conference agreement provides specific authorization for each program at levels which total $266 million less for fiscal year 1987 than the fiscal year 1986 authorization for these same programs—even when taking into account the new programs.

The total conference agreement authorization for fiscal year 1987, including the new programs but including LIHEAP, are $86 million less than the CBO estimate for the House-passed bill. Even when LIHEAP is included, the difference in authorization levels is less than 1 percent.

All of the programs in the conference agreement have the goal of increasing the ability of individuals and families to become economically and socially self-sufficient. They share a common orientation, working within the community to address the needs of low-income children and families. Most have a common legislative history as essential maneuvers in the war on poverty. They are important programs not only because of the populations they serve but also because they are cost-effective and can prevent the need for additional expenditures in the future. On the question of the Senate reading amendment including the conference agreement, I agree with the statement of Mr. GOODLING.

The arguments regarding the cost-effectiveness and successfulness of Head Start and the Community Services Block when President Reagan talks about public-private partnerships, local initiative, local control, local decisions, that is what community action is.

The original House bill, H.R. 4421, was approved by an overwhelming 377-to-33 vote. I urge my colleagues to join me again in supporting the reauthorization of these critical community services programs.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the conference report on H.R. 4421 which reauthorizes, through fiscal year 1990, a number of community-based service programs which afford a wide range of education, nutrition, medical, and other social services as well as opportunities for self-sufficiency to low-income families. Included in this measure are the highly successful Head Start, Community Service Block Grant, and Low-Income Energy Assistance Programs. In addition, Follow Through, the State Dependent Care Development Grant Act, and the Community Food and Nutrition Program are extended for 4 years. Finally, two new initiatives, the Community Services Demonstration Partnership Discretionary Authority and the Child Development Associate Scholarship Assistance Program, both of which were included originally in the Senate-passed bill, have been retained and authorized for 4 years in the conference committee agreements.

A key provision of the conference report reauthorizes the expiring Head Start Program for fiscal years 1987 through 1990. Head Start is unique in that it has historically enjoyed virtually unanimous, bipartisan support in the House and in the other body as well. Why? The reason is simply this: In its 21-year history, the Head Start Program has provided a broad array of exemplary educational programs and vital health, nutrition, medical, and related social services to preschool children from low-income families. But Head Start does much more.

With a major emphasis on parental involvement, the Head Start Program can rightfully claim credit for establishing and strengthening important linkages between Head Start parents and local school systems.

Since Head Start utilizes parents as teachers, classroom aids, and volunteers, it provides education, training, and on-the-job work experience that improves their employability and increases their options for greater self-sufficiency.

The benefits of the Head Start Program, however, extend beyond those families participating in the program to the community at large. Clearly, Head Start programs have demonstrated their ability to effect institutional changes within the community and serve often as an invaluable information and referral resource for non-Head Start low-income families.

In short, there are no major policy changes called for in the Head Start provisions of the conference report; several technical and perfecting changes have been made. The current funding formula remains in place. Adequate resources are assured for Indian and migrant grantees. Sufficient funding for training and technical assistance is maintained in full recognition of the fact that the quality of the Head Start experience is dependent on the quality and commitment of its staff. And last, but certainly not least, is the reaffirmation of our commitment to serving handicapped preschoolers through Head Start.

Let me turn briefly to two provisions of the conference report which are directly related to dependent care, in general, and to our growing demand for quality child care services, in particular. The State dependent care development grant authority has been reauthorized through fiscal year 1990. This program was established just 2 years ago under the terms of the 1984 Human Services Reauthorization Act. Funds awarded to States were for planning, development, establishment, expansion, and improvement of State and local resource and referral systems to provide information concerning the availability, types, costs, and location of dependent care services. Special emphasis was placed on child care services for school-age children before and after their regular school program. It should be noted that no funds were provided under this authority in fiscal year 1985. For fiscal year 1986, $4.8 million has been allocated to the States.

The conference report includes a new Child Development Associate Scholarship Assistance Program [CDA] that was included in the Senate-approved bill. The purpose of this authority is to provide access to competency based training in child development and early education skills to low-income child care providers working in Head Start programs, child care centers, and family day care homes. The CDA initiative is authorized for fiscal years 1987 through 1990 at $1.5 million annually.

In my judgment, the merits of both of these provisions must be viewed in the light of some very recent and very sobering statistics released last month by the Department of Labor.

Based on an analysis of data from the current population survey, almost 51 percent of women with children under 3 years of age were in the labor force in March 1986, compared with approximately 42 percent just 6 years ago. Over the same period, that is, from March 1980 to March 1986, the labor force participation rate of mothers with school-age children rose from 64 to 70 percent. Even though the number of children in the population has fallen by 1.2 million since 1980, the number of mothers in the labor force has grown by 2.5 million. Children under age 6 accounted for 90 percent of the rise. Reflecting this development, there was also an increase from 53 to 59 percent over this 6-year period in the proportion of the children living in households where either both parents or the sole parent was in the labor force.

Clearly, the demand for quality and affordable child care services continues to grow and the gap between the demand for and the availability of quality child care services continue to widen.

The conference report would continue the community services block grant for 4 years with a few minor changes designed to tighten its administration. These changes are technical, and should have a positive impact in providing services to people in need.

Among these changes are measures to complete the transfer to the Secretary of Agriculture of the rural development loan fund. This transfer was begun in the farm bill of last year, and is completed here. This issue was first brought to my attention by my colleague from Maine, JOHN MCKERNAN, and I want to express my deep appreciation for his early and active interest in this issue. My colleague, TOM COLEMAN, who is the ranking member of the Agriculture Credit Subcommittee as well as being a member of the Education and Labor Committee, was also very helpful in his report.

The conference agreement also makes several technical amendments relating to the Low Income Home Energy Assistance Program, or LIHEAP, several of which were suggested by the administration. Two major changes in the program were also made. First, the agreement reaffirms the longstanding policy of Congress that the receipt of energy assistance benefits should not serve to reduce food stamp benefits. And second, the bill establishes three basic performance standards for the energy crisis program. While we do not mean to reduce flexibility in this block grant, we must insist on minimal guidelines if the notion of a crisis program is to make any sense at all.

Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss if I did not address some of the reasons why the final terms of the conference committee report do not enjoy the full support of my colleagues on this side of the aisle who were House conferees. I fully respect their judgment on this matter. I would say, in all candor, that I, too, share some of their reservations on certain provisions included in the conference report under consideration this afternoon.

Originally designed as a research, development, and demonstration companion to the Head Start Program, Follow Through continues to receive mixed reviews. One of the major criticisms of Follow Through is the fact that funds are now allocated exclusively to current sponsoring organizations and participating local educational agencies. There was a consensus among the conferees that the Follow Through grant award process should be open and competitive. To this end, the conference report deleted certain statutory provisions which may have contributed to this limitation. This is a long overdue and important step in the right direction which I fully support.

Some of my colleagues firmly believe that the legislation reauthorizing programs which have demonstrated their effectiveness should not be a vehicle for creating new authorities or extending others which do not enjoy the strong support of Head Start, the Community Services Block Grant [CSBG], and the Low-Income Energy Assistance Programs. A strong argument can be made in support of considering each program on its individual merits.

Concern has also been expressed that some authorization levels are excessively high and that appropriations will, in all likelihood, fall short of the authorization levels. With specific reference to the State dependent care planning grant authority, funding for fiscal year 1986 is $4.8 million. I, too, have serious doubts that the appropriations will equal the $20 million annual authorization level provided for in the conference agreement.

When all is said and done, the bottom line is this: None of us is totally satisfied with each and every provision included in the conference agreement. In all likelihood, each of the conferees would have written it somewhat differently.

Mr. Speaker, on balance, I can support adoption of the conference report on H.R. 4421 for the following reasons:

First, I believe that 4-year reauthorizations of major service programs such as Head Start, CSBG, and the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Program are essential for long range and sound planning, and prudent program management at the Federal, State, and local levels.

Second, authorizations of appropriations for Head Start, the community service block grant, and the low-income home energy assistance programs—all of which have demonstrated their effectiveness in meeting ongoing and critical social and community service needs—constitute more than 99 percent of the funding provided for in the conference committee agreement.

Therefore, I strongly urge my colleagues to join me in voting for passage of this important conference report.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TAUKE].

Mr. TAUKE. Mr. Speaker, let me begin by thanking my colleague from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS] and my colleague from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE] for their cooperation in the development of this legislation. Although we have a differing viewpoint on the final product, I have very much enjoyed the opportunity to work with these fine gentlemen, and I want to commend them for their commitment to the programs contained in this bill and the people who are served by them.

Mr. Speaker, there's an old cliche that cautions us not to judge a book by its cover. I urge my colleagues not to judge this book—H.R. 4421, the Human Services Reauthorization Act of 1986—by its cover—the popular Head Start Program.

I support the reauthorization of Head Start—and of the community services block grant and the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Program. These programs provide valuable benefits to many of the most needy people in our society, and they have proven track records of success.

Unfortunately, however, these popular and effective programs are being used. They are being used as cover for five smaller, but less proven programs. Programs that, because they are buried in a Head Start authorization bill, have not and will not receive the scrutiny that we should give them.

This conference report includes multiyear reauthorizations of Follow Through, community food and nutrition, and State dependent care planning grants, and it creates two new programs—child development associate scholarships, and the Community Services Block Grant Demonstrations Program. These programs may, in fact, be worthy of our support. But they should not escape critical review by Members of the House.

Authorizations for these five programs total $37 million in fiscal year 1987. While $37 million may seem like a drop in the bucket, it is essential that we consider carefully even this amount of funding authority given our existing budget problems. I am not convinced that part or all of this $37 million could not be better spent elsewhere in the budget or even elsewhere in the programs authorized by this bill. It seems to me that when we are asking Head Start to absorb cuts because of sequester orders, it is not the time to be creating duplicative new programs. This conference report fails to recognize budget realities and to set priorities accordingly.

Let me review briefly some of the programs authorized by this legislation. Follow Through, for instance, is once again extended for 4 additional years. This program originated 20 years ago for the purpose of developing model compensatory education programs. These model programs have been successfully developed and disseminated. Compensatory education plans are widely available, and Federal funds are provided to local schools through the chapter 1 and chapter 2 programs for this important compensatory education. Follow Through can and should be considered a success. Further funding of Follow Through simply provides repeat grants to a handful of schools so that they may reinvent the wheel. Authorizations for Follow Through should be ended.

This measure creates a Child Development Associate Scholarship Program. Certainly, providing financial assistance to low-income child care providers so that they may attain this training and credentialing is a worthy goal. But is a new, separate program necessary? Head Start training and technical assistance funds already provide this service to many low-income Head Start employees, and States already have authority to pay the costs of CDA training and credentialing under the social services block grant. I cannot justify creation of this new, duplicative program.

In addition, the bill creates another new, separate authorization for 5 million dollars' worth of discretionary grants to a few of the agencies that are already guaranteed 90 percent of a $390 million block grant. The purpose of this program—the Community Services Block Grant Demonstration Program—is reportedly to develop innovative approaches to combat poverty. Again, this is a laudable objective, but is the new program justified? I, for one, am already very proud of the innovative approaches and accomplishments of the community action agencies in my district and State. Certainly those agencies that happen to receive a piece of this discretionary grant program will enjoy a brief period of lucrativeness, but I am not convinced that the additional $5 million in discretionary grants will significantly improve the overall operation of the block grant or have any impact at all on the programs offered by a vast majority of community action agencies.

This legislation has an attractive cover. I urge you to look inside the cover and evaluate all of the chapters of this book.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this has been a long and pleasant journey on this bill. I have enjoyed working with the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TAUKE] on the bill. We have not always agreed, but we have reached a high degree of agreement.

I know that he feels very strongly on the Follow Through Program, and he did offer an amendment when this bill was in the House. The House did speak its will on that amendment by voting 245 to 161 to retain the Follow Through Program.

I will enjoy working with him in the future on similar bills. It has been, I think, a very productive debate, a very productive journey, and he certainly is to be commended for his diligence and his contributions to this bill. As I say, we are not in full agreement, but it has been a very pleasant journey.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KILDEE. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Vermont.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, I just want to say that I want to warn my colleagues, I served with the gentleman on this conference committee, and he has a very disarming and wonderful personality and a great background, but I tell him, he is the toughest tiger in negotiations that I have run into, and what he got and gained from the Senate was something to watch with great admiration. So I would just like to express that to my colleagues here, and also congratulate the gentleman on his birthday.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for both the comments. I appreciate them.

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. MARKEY].

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Mr. Speaker, I agree wholeheartedly with the sentiments that have been expressed about the legislative abilities of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE]. They are considerable and unquestioned, at the conclusion of the negotiations on this bill, and I have considered it a great opportunity to be present at the birthing of this piece of legislation to be of whatever modest assistance that I could be to the gentleman in the crafting of the compromise that is before us here today.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the conference report on H.R. 4421, which reauthorizes Head Start, Dependent Care, the Community Services Block Grant, Community Food and Nutrition Programs, and the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Program [LIHEAP].

As chairman of the Energy Conservation and Power Subcommittee which shares jurisdiction over LIHEAP, I was pleased to serve as a conferee from the Energy and Commerce Committee for purposes of working out an acceptable compromise on that critical safety-net program. Mr. KILDEE, chairman of the Human Resources Subcommittee of the Education and Labor Committee, and Mr. HAWKINS, chairman of the full Education and Labor Committee, deserve special applause for their hard work on this conference. I am especially appreciative of their attention, and the attention of their staffs, to the concerns of members of the Energy and Commerce Committee.

The LIHEAP Program means real help for poor families. In my own Commonwealth of Massachusetts, this program assists over 140,000 households annually, and over one-half of those households have annual incomes less than $6,000. For these families, the choice between "heating or eating" is not a thought-provoking rhyme, but rather the essence of a daily struggle for existence itself.

This conference report preserves LIHEAP at adequate levels and makes certain other programmatic adjustments which will aid the efficient administration of this program.

The conferees have been responsive to budget concerns by cutting the President's original request of $2.1 billion in fiscal year 1987 by $50 million. At the same time, we have recognized that when it comes to helping alleviate energy bills in poor households, our vaunted "safety net" is tattered and thin. Even with the current downturn in oil prices, the fact is that two-thirds of the families eligible for this program never receive any help, and for those lucky enough to get any assistance, it is only sufficient to cover approximately one-third of their home energy bills. Therefore, the conferees have agreed on a fiscal year 1987 authorization level which is sightly—2 percent—above fiscal year 1986.

H.R. 4421 includes several provisions intended to improve service delivery to the working poor by relying on community-based organizations to reach out to eligible families. It also gives the Secretary discretion to improve the sharing of information among service providers so that effective State or local techniques can be put to use nationwide. And it strengthens the provision of emergency services through the crisis assistance component of LIHEAP.

I urge my colleagues to support this conference report so that we do not delay delivering services as the winter heating season begins.

□ 1640

In conclusion, I would like to say that this compromise reflects once again a continuation of that understanding that was implicit in the omnibus energy legislation of the 1970's. In return for the promises to the energy industries of this country, the energy producers of this country asked that the proper incentives would be given to them, that they would, in fact, have the needed impetus to go forward and develop new energy sources; in turn we would construct a program which would ensure that the very poorest in our Nation, those families that really do suffer from high energy prices, would in fact have billions of dollars put aside for their needs as well.

It was a compact. It was an understanding. This piece of legislation keeps intact that compact and helps to recognize that while, in fact, we might be enjoying the benefits of some of those energy deregulation oil and natural gas programs of the 1970's with lower energy prices; at the same time we still have millions of families in this country that have not been able to see increases in their family income sufficient to be able to cover the still incredibly onerous burden which is placed upon their very limited discretionary family income. This bill helps to ensure that those problems will continue to be dealt with.

I congratulate once again the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE]. He has been the leader in ensuring that a solid program would be continued. I have enjoyed working with him and assisting him and the Committee on Energy and Commerce, which is the other committee of primary jurisdiction on this legislation, which comes here to compliment you today on your good work.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I rise to address an issue of particular concern to myself and to educators. The conference report on H.R. 4421 requires the Department of Education to conduct a study in order to compile a complete list of beginning reading instruction programs and methods, including phonics.

The language of the conference report is substantially different from that of the Senate amendment. These changes were made to address concerns of mine and other conferees that we not put the Department of Education in the position of issuing a stamp of approval for a specific reading or other instruction program. Given the limits of the criteria set out, as well as the constant changes in reading programs, it would be extremely improper for the Department to endorse one publisher's product over another's.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the conference report on H.R. 4421, the Human Services reauthorization bill.

Of interest to my home State of West Virginia, the conference agreement authorizes the Head Start, Follow Through, Dependent Care, Community Food and Nutrition, Community Services Block Grant, and Low-Income Energy Assistance Programs through fiscal year 1990.

With regard to the Head Start Program, a pre-school program designed to give children of low-income families the skills and self-confidence they need to enter school on an even footing with other children, the agreement authorizes, $1.2 billion in fiscal year 1987, $1.26 billion in fiscal year 1988, $1.33 billion in fiscal year 1989, and $1.4 billion in fiscal year 1990. The agreement also includes the House provision that continues through fiscal year 1990, the current method of counting income for purposes of determining eligibility for Head Start. Under current law, 10 percent of the Head Start enrollment must be available for handicapped children, and individuals who meet the definition of handicapped children in the Education of the Handicapped Act would continue to be served by the Head Start Program. In the past, I have been contacted by many of my constituents with regard to the tremendous success of this program in West Virginia. The reauthorization of this program highlights our commitment to ensuring the benefit of education to all Americans by providing necessary educational assistance to our Nation's low-income youth.

The Follow Through Program, which is designed to help children who participated in Head Start or similar programs when they enter kindergarten and primary grades, is authorized at $7.5 million in fiscal year 1987, $7.8 million in fiscal year 1988, $8.1 million in fiscal year 1989, and $8.4 million in fiscal year 1990.

The Dependent Care Program, which provides 75 percent matching grants to States for before- and after-school child care programs and for local information and referral programs, is authorized at $20 million in each of fiscal years 1987 through 1990. These authorization levels are identical to the Senate authorization levels, rather than based on need as in the House bill.

For the Community Service Block Grant Program, which provides block grants to States to fund community action agencies, the agreement authorizes $390 million in fiscal year 1987, $409.5 million in fiscal year 1988, $430 million in fiscal year 1989, and $451 million in fiscal year 1990. The agreement includes provisions to expand eligibility to include organizations that came into existence in fiscal year 1982 as direct successors to community action agencies and meet all the board composition requirements, specify procedures to review proposed State termination of funding of community action agencies or migrant farmworker organizations, authorize the funding of national conferences, newsletters, and collection and dissemination of data about programs funded under the Community Services Block Grant Program as part of training activities. The Community Services Block Grant Program is crucial to the communities in southern West Virginia, and throughout the State, which have suffered greatly due to natural disasters and economic developments which have increased unemployment levels and left many businesses and industries floundering in the wake.

The conference agreement authorizes $3 million in each of fiscal years 1987 through 1990 for the Community Food and Nutrition Program. The agreement provides that 60 percent of the funds be allocated on the basis of the number of poor and unemployed in each State, and 40 percent on a competitive basis.

The agreement authorizes $2.05 billion in fiscal year 1987, $2.13 billion in fiscal year 1988, $2.22 billion in fiscal year 1989, and $2.31 billion in fiscal year 1990 for the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Program. The measure also includes provisions designed to ensure that energy crisis intervention programs respond in a timely way to emergencies, provide the maximum assistance to those most in need, and clarify that low-income home energy assistance payments should not be considered income for the purpose of determining eligibility for food stamps.

The continuance of these programs are of paramount concern to communities and individuals throughout West Virginia who are trying to overcome the recent destruction wrought by floods as well as the economic conditions which have plagued our State in recent years. Unemployment and poverty are rampant in my district, but West Virginia is struggling to overcome these restraints. The programs reauthorized by this legislation are helping and are a part of the revitalization of West Virginia and other States suffering from similar predicaments. I applaud the efforts of the conference committee in bringing this legislation before us today, and rise in full support of the conference report on H.R. 4421.

Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of the conference report on H.R. 4421, the Human Services Reauthorization Act of 1986. This bill includes reauthorization, without making major legislation changes, in the following bills under the committee's jurisdiction: The Head Start Program, the Follow-Through Program, the Community Services Block Grant Program, State Grants for Dependent Care, Community Food and Nutrition and the Low-Income Energy Assistance Program. Although the Low-Income Energy Assistance Program reauthorization was considered in a separate bill by the committee, it was part of the Senate's original package which was subsequently modified and included in this conference agreement.

The conference agreement authorizes two new programs for 3 years which were included in the Senate bill. The Child Development Assistance Scholarship Program authorizes grants to States to assist eligible low-income candidates to obtain the CDA credential. The conference agreement also authorizes a Community Service Block Grant demonstration project to develop innovative approaches to deal with the critical needs of the poor.

The conference agreement under consideration today represents the culmination of the tireless efforts of the members and staff of this committee who worked for many weeks to fashion a compromise.

I particularly want to congratulate the subcommittee chairman, Mr. KILDEE, and his staff, for their leadership and dedication in fashioning this conference agreement which extends six of these human services programs for another 4 years. These reauthorizations provide the means to enable many low-income individuals and their families to become self-sufficient.

For more than two decades, the Head Start Program has been providing comprehensive services to meet the educational, health, nutritional, and social needs of preschool-aged children from low-income families. We, in the Congress, are well aware of the many studies which document not only the effectiveness of this program, but also the benefits which outweigh the cost of the program by more than 7 to 1. Since the Head Start Program serves only 17 percent of the eligible population, there continues to be a significant need for these services. The conference agreement authorizes the Head Start Program at a level of $1.198 billion for fiscal year 1987 with a 5½-percent increase in the outyears.

The conference agreement also reauthorizes the Follow Through Program which builds on the Head Start experience for disadvantaged children. Although the Senate-passed bill did not contain a reauthorization for the Follow Through Program, the conferees included a 4-year reauthorization of this program for children from kindergarten through the third grade.

Despite repeated attempts by the administration to eliminate the Community Service Block Grant Program, the House and Senate conferees provided for a 4-year reauthorization of this program which provides funds for the States to ameliorate the cause of poverty.

The conference agreement incorporates the reauthorization for the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Program which provides assistance to the poor and the elderly to help defray their household energy costs. The Education and Labor Committee and the Energy and Commerce Committee, which share jurisdiction over this program, worked closely with the Senate to reauthorize this program for the next 4 years.

Both the House and the Senate bills provided for reauthorizing the Community Food and Nutrition Program and the Dependent Care Program. I am pleased, however, that the conferees agreed to the 4-year reauthorizations for these programs that were contained in the House-passed bill.

Finally, I want to state that I share the concern of Mr. Goodling and others regarding the reading study authorized by the conference report. This study is not intended to authorize the Department of Education to endorse or disapprove any specific reading program, or compare one program with another. In implementing the study, the Department is to be guided by the requirements and intent of section 432 of the General Education Provisions Act (GEPA), which provides——

No provision of any applicable program shall be construed to authorize any department, agency, officer, or employee of the United States to exercise any direction, supervision, or control over the curriculum, program of instruction, administration, or personnel of any educational institution, school, or school system, or over the selection of library resources, textbooks, or other printed or published instructional materials by any educational institution or school system. . . . (20 USC 1232a)

Although the conference agreement provides dollar figures in lieu of the "such sums" authorization contained in the House-passed bill, I have been assured by the chairman of the Budget Committee that the conference report accompanying H.R. 4421, does not violate any of the provisions of the Budget Act for fiscal year 1987.

Mr. Speaker, earlier this year, the House passed these reauthorizations by an overwhelming vote of 377 to 33. I urge my colleagues to once again demonstrate their commitment to extend programs designed to combat poverty and support the conference report on H.R. 4421.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues in support of the conference report to accompany H.R. 4421, the Community Services Programs Amendments of 1986. I commend the members of the Committee on Education and Labor, for bringing this bill through conference and before us today. Through the leadership of the gentleman from California [Mr. HAWKINS], the gentleman from Vermont [Mr. JEFFORDS], the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE], and the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TAUKE], we will be able to offer our State and local community service program the helping hand that they so desperately need.

The conference report reauthorizes a number of community services programs for fiscal year 1987 through 1990 and includes authorizations for two new programs included in the Senate, the Child Development Associate Scholarship Assistance Program, and the Community Services Block Grant Demonstration Partnership Agreements. I can say, without exception, that each of the programs reauthorized under this conference report are currently thriving in my 22d Congressional District in New York State. Cities throughout the 22d Congressional District have benefited significantly from the Community Services Block Grant Program which directly addresses the causes of poverty and seeks to alleviate its impact within communities. The Head Start Program provides invaluable education, health, and social services to low-income preschoolers, starting them on the right education path in those vital early years. The Follow Through Program builds on those preschool gains to help disadvantaged youngsters in kindergarten and the primary grades, again stressing the important patterns that can be established in those early years.

Also authorized under this legislation in the Low-Income Energy Assistance Program [LIHEAP] which provides assistance to the poor and elderly to help defray their household energy costs; the dependent care development grants authorizing funds to help set up or expand school-age child care programs for latchkey children and child care information and referral systems; and the Community Food and Nutrition Program, which assists in the coordination of efforts to meet the nutritional needs of low-income people.

Mr. Speaker, in each of these programs, we need to expand, not cutback on the Federal funds allocated. Mindful of the fiscal restraints we are currently faced with, I am pleased to note the modest increases in these programs—all of which are cost-efficient. I hope my colleagues will join in strong support of this conference report and that they will join hands in future efforts to insure that our low-income population is afforded every opportunity to quality services.

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, today we have the opportunity to reaffirm our commitment to the poor and needy citizens of our Nation, a chance to reaffirm our desire to continue to wage war on poverty. I rise today to pledge my commitment and urge House passage of the conference report on H.R. 4421, the Human Services Programs reauthorization.

I want to recognize the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE] for his work on behalf of this legislation. His untiring efforts are to be commended. He played an instrumental role in the development and formulation of this legislation, and the conference report.

This conference agreement authorizes the Head Start, Follow Through, Dependent Care, Community Food and Nutrition, Community Service Block Grant, and the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Programs through fiscal year 1990. We know that in this Nation the rate of poverty is going up among all groups. We also know that there are few, if any, programs besides these that are specifically designed to alleviate the problems posed by poverty. For more than two decades, these programs have provided consistent and cost-efficient services to low-income persons throughout the Nation. The choice here is simple—these programs must be continued.

The picture of poverty in America can be viewed in both rural and urban areas throughout the country every day. In my home State of New York, approximately 13 percent of the total population is poor. These 2.3 million people rely on these programs to ensure that their needs are addressed on many different levels. Of these programs, the community services block grant program is of special significance.

During the last fiscal year, New York received over $30 million for the CSBG Program. These funds served over 2 million people in my State. These services include:

Efforts to secure and retain meaningful employment, including training, skill enhancement, and direct job placement activities. These efforts helped almost 100,000 across New York.

Activities to counteract the conditions of starvation and malnutrition. These nutrition activities served over 1.6 million people in New York.

Operations to improve the quality of housing, to renovate and rehabilitate existing housing, and to build new housing. These operations assisted over 110,000 needy citizens in my State.

Clearly, in our efforts to fight the war on poverty, the Community Services Block Grant is a focal point at the local level for the needs of the poor.

This conference agreement also extends the successful Head Start Program. Head Start was a pioneer in the concept of providing services for both young children and their families. During its 21 years of existence, this program has come to epitomize an example of a cost-effective investment in our society. This national education program of early intervention for disadvantaged children provides classroom instruction, in addition to essential social and human services. Yet, Head Start is suffering from the problem of limited funding. It is a problem that does not see any immediate recovery in the future. At this time, Head Start reaches only 18 percent of those who are eligible. I am pleased that this conference agreement provides an increase in funds during the next 4 years. While it may not completely address the fiscal problems facing Head Start, these authorizations will allow for reasonable growth while taking into account the economic realities facing this Nation today.

I also wish to note the continuance of the Follow Through Program and am pleased to see that the conference recognized its importance and included it in the final version of the agreement. This program has helped ensure that those educational gains made by children who participated in Head Start and similar programs are continued once they enter public schools.

This agreement also provides grants to States for both before and after school child care programs—programs instrumental in allowing mothers to enter and remain in the workplace. If we are to effectively utilize our strength as a nation with respect to the workplace, the dependent care program and similar programs are vital in these efforts.

And finally, this conference agreement address two problems plagueing many people throughout the country, but in particular, our elderly population. These problems include hunger, addressed by the Community Food and Nutrition Program, and the problem of sufficient and affordable home energy, as addressed by the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Program. As an original member of the House Select Committee on Aging, I know first hand how particularly severe these problems are for senior citizens. In fact, they are reaching crisis proportions. I am pleased that the services and programs they so desperately need will help be provided under the Community Food and Nutrition Program and the Low-Income Home Energy Assistance Program.

In closing, I want to say that all of these human services programs will help to address many of the more pressing problems facing our society today. As an original cosponsor and strong advocate of these programs, I urge my colleagues to vote in support of this conference agreement. It will allow an estimated 40 million citizens move from a life of poverty into one of self-sufficiency.

There is no question that our Nation is struggling with the most severe economic crisis to face this country for quite some time. Yet that crisis does not give us a license to walk away from those in need. It does not give us a license to walk away from our commitment to help the poor. It does not give us a license to place the deficit burden on the backs of those most in need. However, this conference agreement does give us the opportunity to utilize our resources to assist those escape poverty's clutches, or prevent them from falling into it, while fully recognizing the economic realities of today.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the Human Resources Subcommittee, it is a pleasure to be able to support this conference report. I want to take this opportunity to congratulate my subcommittee chairman, Congressman KILDEE, for his handling of this bill and the conference. We were able to bring to the House floor a piece of legislation that will serve those who truly deserve our assistance. The many programs that were reauthorized show the commitment that the Congress has to education and communities.

I am especially happy to see that we were able to see fit to reauthorize the Follow Through Program for another 4 years. This program has proven its worth to us many times over in the support and continued learning that it provides for our youth who get to take part in the program. We are able to reinforce the learning and study habits that we attempt to instill while they are in the Head Start Program. As Head Start was another program that we were able to continue in this reauthorization I felt that it was critical for us to continue the Follow Through as the tie we have with the children leaving Head Start and entering grade school.

We were able to get $7.5 million for the first year of the reauthorization and then the authorization for the program will increase at a 4 percent rate for each year of the reauthorization, when the authorization level will reach $8.4 million in 1990. This authorization for funding levels is very small compared to the amounts that we were putting into the legislation when Follow Through was at its peak and we were able to serve over 75,000 children with a funding level of $70 million. But maybe on another day we will be able to revive that kind of commitment to our children and we can see this reauthorization as the time we turned the corner.

Included in this reauthorization for the Follow Through Program we have deleted section 668(b) of the act. This section stated that programs that are in existence would not be denied on their application unless in emergency situations or the program is given opportunity to show why denial should not take place. We removed this section because some people felt that by this would be opened up the competition for other applicants. I felt that the competition was there all along and the best of the available applicants received what was left of the smaller funding level. I am in full agreement to the intent that this remains a competitive program. But those who are calling for open competition are not willing to join with me in calling for higher authorization levels so that more applicants can be awarded grants to serve their kids. We can't have it both ways, be awarded grants but provide no money to fund the program.

We in no way want to send a signal that those who have been successful in winning financial assistance for their programs will not be able to get funding in the future. They will continue to be looked at and considered equally with the other applicants. We must remember that in using our limited amount of funding those programs that can benefit the most students and spread the program in the most efficient manner will be funded so that the taxpayer will get the most for his money.

Again I want to compliment all those who worked to see this legislation become law. By supporting this conference report we will be continuing of programs that provide the needed infrastructure for many in our society. Programs such as Dependent Care, Community Food and Nutrition, Community Services Block Grant Demonstration Program, Low Income Home Energy Assistance Program, and the others that are included in this reauthorization are important and should be continued and expanded in the years to come.

Mr. JEFFORDS. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). The question is on the conference report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. RUSSO. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The Clerk announced the following pair:

On this vote:

Mr. Gray of Illinois for, with Mr. Lungren against.

Messrs. STUMP, MARLENEE, ROBERTS, and LOTT changed their votes from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. HANSEN changed his vote from "nay" to "yea."

So the conference report was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

(Mr. STRATTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. STRATTON. Mr. Speaker, on rollcall No. 381, relative to sanctions for South Africa, H.R. 4868, which took place in the House on September 12, 1986, I was hospitalized at the Navy hospital in Bethesda and therefore was not in the Chamber or able to be present.

Had I been present in the House, I would have voted "aye."

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that this statement appear in the permanent RECORD following the vote.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

There was no objection.

LABOR PROTECTIVE PROVISIONS FOR AIRLINE EMPLOYEES

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). Pursuant to the provisions of clause 5 of rule I, the pending business is the question of suspending the rules and passing the bill, H.R. 4838, as amended.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. MINETA] that the House suspend the rules and pass the bill, H.R. 4838, as amended, on which further proceedings were postponed earlier today and on which the yeas and nays are ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 329, nays 72, not voting 30, as follows:

On this vote:

Mr. Wirth and Mr. Bonker for, with Mr. Lungren against.

So (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the bill, as amended, was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

REQUEST FOR CONSIDERATION OF HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 727, MAKING REPAYABLE ADVANCES TO THE HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCE RESPONSE TRUST FUND

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 727) making repayable advances to the Hazardous Substance Response Trust Fund, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi to explain what is being attempted here.

Mr. WHITTEN. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, the resolution will take care of what is essentially a technical problem in regard to the Superfund. It is my understanding that this has been cleared by the affected authorizing committees on both sides of the aisle. I am told that all parties in the issue are in agreement that this needs to be done.

At the end of this month there will be about $600 million remaining of the 1986 Superfund appropriation, which EPA has not obligated because the trust fund is out of money. The Appropriations Committee intended these funds to be carried over into 1987—and we specifically provided that the funds remain available until expended.

However, both OMB and GAO recognize that if there is no cash balance in a trust fund during the year of the appropriation—the appropriation expires. That is exactly the situation we face in Superfund—if new taxing authority and reauthorization is not enacted before September 30, $600 million will be lost on October 1.

This resolution will take care of the problem. It will permit the $600 milion to be advanced from the general fund to the Superfund trust fund—so that it can be carried over into 1987. This action provides no new budget authority and no additional outlays. Finally, language has been included to fence these funds so that EPA cannot make any obligations until after taxing authority has been enacted.

This $600 million is essential to provide for an expanding Superfund Program in 1987 and 1988. The 1987 HUD bill provides $861 million, assuming substantial funds would carry over. If this $600 million is lost, it cannot be replaced within our 302 allocation, so the Superfund Program will suffer in 1987 and beyond.

Without a doubt, the Superfund Program is now suffering from a severe shortage of funds. However, the solution must be a long-term reauthorization bill—not another Band-Aid. Most members of the authorizing committees and supporters of Superfund believe that making additional funds available at this point would backfire and actually work to undermine or delay passage of reauthorizing and tax legislation.

Finally, let me say that this will in no way breach the $8.5 billion authorization total. This concerns the other side of the ledger—the Appropriations Committee's problem in preserving the budget authority to provide the levels of funds anticipated in the legislation. We will not exceed the $8.5 billion total for Superfund during the 1987–91 period.

Mr. FLORIO from the legislative committee is in agreement and other Members are too.

To correct that situation, I hope that we can pass this this afternoon so we can save this $600 million from expiring at the end of this fiscal year.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FLORIO].

Mr. FLORIO. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, I would just say that I support the motion of the chairman of the Appropriations Committee. I hasten to point out that the action that is being taken is important to take so that we do not in any way lose the opportunity to use the $600 million that has already been appropriated that will lapse on the 30th of September.

It should in no way, however, detract from the urgency of our getting an authorization before the end of this year because this step is an important step to take, but we still at the end of this period of time will have no money in the authorization. This language is quite clear that this money will be available in fiscal 1987 subject to the establishment of an authorization bill which is yet to be done this year.

I thank the gentleman and rise in support of the gentleman's motion.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. GREEN].

Mr. GREEN. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Speaker, I want to join the gentleman from New Jersey in his explanation of this situation. As I understand the technicalities of the matter, without this action the trust fund would expire on September 30 and this $600 million would be lost and given the budget situation in which we find ourselves it would, in all probability, be lost irretrievably. So that the effect of what we are doing is to preserve this $600 million for future use.

However, as the gentleman from New Jersey has said, that in no way reduces the need for proceeding with the resolution of the revenue issues relating to the Superfund and the resolution is so drawn as to make it clear that this money shall not be available for obligation until the new legislation with regard to the Superfund taxing authority is enacted.

So we must do this to preserve the $600 million. It should be understood that our doing this in no way reduces the urgency of resolving the revenue issues and enacting the new Superfund legislation.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I strongly support my chairman.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. Speaker, this motion catches me by surprise. I am sure it was unintentional and I do not question the motives. I am concerned that what you are doing here is either transferring money from one or two sources and putting it into some kind of mythical fund to use in case the authorization finally comes through.

Let me remind the chairman and the Members of the House: We have had quite a battle on the Superfund. You will recall that earlier in this Congress the Ways and Means Committee voted that the Superfund would be funded by a broad-based tax, which was passed after a very heated debate within the committee. When we got to the floor the funding was changed because the House labeled the broad-based tax as a value-added tax.

Many debates were had on it; it was not a very becoming debate. The Superfund excise tax was not a value-added tax at all; it was just an excise tax.

You have extended the Superfund, on either one or two occasions since that date. There is still considerable discussion and argument about how it is to be funded. Those people who represent States with oil and gas and chemical industries are very distressed that we cannot seem to get an equitable resolution on funding in spite of the fact that our committee voted that we would have a broad-based tax.

The onus on paying for the cleanup fund now and in the House bill is on the oil and gas industry and on the chemical industry. I see my friend from New Jersey standing here. There is more waste in sites in New Jersey then there is in any State in the United States, and yet those of us from about four or five States are paying anywhere from 60 to 90 percent of the cost. We are asking that that be spread on an equitable basis.

Now, if I understand this amendment offered today, it seems to me that what you are doing is transferring some money and then you are going to renew the Superfund again for another 30 to 60 or 90 days. If that is the case we will not have resolved this question about the Superfund again.

It is not right for us to be faced with another funding mechanism if in fact this is a back door way to avoid settling the tax issue. I am told that this does nothing but just take some money from one fund to be used just in case it is needed.

In conclusion, I fear you are just getting money from somebody else's pocket. Then you are going to renew this Superfund again just as we have before and we will never have given this House a chance to vote on it.

□ 1735

That is not right. I do not know that that is what the gentleman intends, but that is my concern. If you trot this out of chute 1 here today without us having any notice about it, we get concerned about it.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PICKLE. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, others may want to discuss some of the specifics. The Appropriations Committee spent the afternoon on the continuing resolution before we found out that the Congress has fenced itself in a thousand ways here: The budget resolution; the fact that the other body is controlled by outlays, which is in reality controlled by the executive branch. We have been wrestling with that all afternoon, knowing what it does.

So what this joint resolution does from the viewpoint I have is that this $600 million dips into this year's budget resolution, dips into what we have already appropriated. Unless we do this, it will be out of place in the coming resolution.

I do not know whether the gentleman realizes how we have tied our hands with Gramm-Rudman and other things. So what is involved here is whether the Appropriations Committee loses it or not. It is not a case of taking it from one place to another.

My friend, the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. FLORIO], can discuss the detailed questions that you bring up better than I can, but that is the situation so far as this $600 million is concerned.

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, let me ask the gentleman, does the present extension for Superfund expire on September 30?

Mr. WHITTEN. On the first of October, this $600 million will expire.

Mr. PICKLE. Then if you were to get $600 million from some other source, then you could renew it again for another 30, 60 or 90 days.

That is what I suspect is going to happen.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PICKLE. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, by way of clarification, if I in any way had any thought that this was a back-door way of funding Superfund, I would stand shoulder-to-shoulder with the gentleman in opposition to it. That is not what this is.

The legitimate policy consideration that the gentleman raises with regard to who is to pay the amount that this bill, this basic Superfund bill, would authorize are yet to be resolved.

What the gentleman is doing, and I think commendably so, is providing for the elimination of the problem that results from the expiration of the authority to use the $600 million, which has already been appropriated, after October 1, of September 30 of this year.

That money cannot be used, absent a specific authorization by this Congress, which has not yet been forthcoming.

All we are doing is preserving the right of the Congress to utilize that money when we determine how it is that it is going to be utilized. The difficulty that the gentleman is going to have if this does not take place is that $600 million less toward the $9 billion that the Congress has already approved is going to have to be made up somewhere else.

Mr. PICKLE. If the gentleman contends that this is not back-door support and it is only getting the money to use once the authorization is effected, my question to you, then, is why does the gentleman not go and get the authorization out? Why do we not know what the vote is, instead of carving out $600 million, or whatever this sum amounts to, so we can continue the program?

I think I have one of the most reliable records on environmental matters as anybody in this Congress. Of course I think we ought to continue the Superfund.

I am willing to go for the higher sum, but I will tell the gentleman what is going to happen. If the gentleman takes this $600 million, whatever it is, to be used if it is authorized, as you say, I will tell the gentleman what is going to happen. You are going to renew the program again by September 30, probably, on the same basis as before, and you are going to be funding Superfund at about $1 to $2 billion instead of the $8.5 billion that has been agreed on between the House and the other body.

You are going to buy about one-fourth of a good program if you fail to face the question of having an authorization.

For some reason or another, you do not do it. You want to have an authorization, but you cannot handle the funding question because there is such opposition among some people here; so much so that they are going to call this broad base funding plan a value-added tax. It is not a value-added tax, although everybody can make their own choice.

I am just saying to you that what you are doing is creating a little mechanism here so you have this fund to be used once the authorization comes through. If you cannot get an authorization, then you just extend it for another 30 or 60 or 90 days. That is what you have done twice this year.

I think this is a repetition again of the same thing.

It seems to me that this is not the appropriate time to do it, certainly without some kind of notice.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PICKLE. I yield to my friend, the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I want the gentleman to listen carefully. We are not taking this money, $600 million, from some other place.

At the end of this month there will be about $600 million remaining of the 1986 Superfund appropriation, which EPA has not obligated because the trust fund is out of money. The Appropriations Committee intended these funds to be carried over into 1987—and we specifically provided that the funds "remain available until expended."

However, both OMB and GAO recognize that if there is no cash balance in a trust fund during the year of the appropriation—the appropriation expires. That is exactly the situation we face in Superfund—if new taxing authority and reauthorization is not enacted before September 30, $600 million will be lost on October 1.

This resolution will take care of the problem. It will permit the $600 million to be advanced from the general fund to the Superfund trust fund—so that it can be carried over into 1987. This action provides no new budget authority and no additional outlays. Finally, language has been included to fence these funds so that EPA cannot make any obligations until after taxing authority has been enacted.

Why is the $600 million so important? This $600 million is essential to provide for an expanding Superfund Program in 1987 and 1988. The 1987 HUD bill provides $861 million, assuming substantial funds would carry over. If this $600 million is lost, it cannot be replaced within our 302 allocation, so the Superfund Program will suffer in 1987 and beyond.

Why not let EPA use the funds immediately? Without a doubt, the Superfund Program is now suffering from a severe shortage of funds. However, the solution must be a long-term reauthorization bill—not another band-aid. Most members of the authorizing committees and supporters of Superfund believe that making additional funds available at this point would backfire and actually work to undermine or delay passage of reauthorizing and tax legislation.

Will this resolution bust the budget? This resolution provides no new budget authority and no additional outlays. The original $900 million 1986 appropriation has already been scored by CBO for BA and outlays. This resolution simply provides an advance from the general fund, which will be repaid from Superfund taxes as soon as they are enacted.

Will this resolution increase the $8.5 billion authorization level agreed to by the Superfund conferees? No. This will in no way breach the $8.5 billion total. This concerns the other side of the ledger—and the Appropriations Committee's problem in preserving the budget authority to provide the levels of funds anticipated in the legislation. We will not exceed the $8.5 billion total for Superfund 1987-91.

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, let me respond to the gentleman [Mr. CONTE].

The problem here is that we do not have an authorization for a Superfund and that we do not have a decision on the taxing mechanism.

Mr. CONTE. If the gentleman will yield, we agree on that.

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, that has been delayed all this year and is still hanging in the balance.

Mr. CONTE. We agree on that, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, what is the gentleman going to do that at the last minute, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. CONTE], representing the Committee on Appropriations, to try to have funds to keep the Superfund so it can continue? That is your purpose, is it not?

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman is right.

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, so the gentleman wants to sack up money from different agencies just to have in case.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, we are not taking this from any other agency. We have already appropriated this money for the Superfund.

Mr. PICKLE. It is being redirected. It is not a new appropriation. But it is money that you are going to use and I am saying to the gentleman, the more straightforward way to do it is to settle this authorization and have a vote on it and to settle this funding question, the taxing question.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I could not agree with the gentleman any more. I agree with the gentleman.

However, this is money that we appropriated, $600 million for the Superfund. Because of an interpretation by OMB and GAO, we cannot spend this money. So all we are saying is that we are going to comply with you; we are going to take this $600 million that we have appropriated for the Superfund, and we are going to put it in a trust fund.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PICKLE. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GREEN. Mr. Speaker, let me try to explain, perhaps, in a little more detail as ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on HUD-Independent Agencies of the Committee on Appropriations, which appropriates for EPA, the difficulty in which we find ourselves and why we are asking for this accommodation.

I want to represent, first off, to the gentleman that we have not the slightest intention of trying to short-circuit the conference on the Superfund or the Committee on Ways and Means on this issue.

□ 1745

Mr. PICKLE. That is comforting.

Mr. GREEN. The problem we face is that we have $600 million which was appropriated for fiscal year 1986 which will lapse on September 30 unless this resolution is dealt with and passed.

We do not have enough budget authority left to our subcommittee under the 302(b) process to fund the Superfund operations for fiscal year 1987 at the $1½ billion level, unless we can take advantage of this $600 million. If this $600 million lapses on September 30, even if the gentleman's conference thereafter succeeds, as I hope and pray it will in resolving the fiscal issues involved in the Superfund, our subcommittee will be unable to respond and operate the Superfund at a $1½ billion level unless we can keep this $600 million for fiscal year 1986 alive. That is all we are trying to do.

We are not trying to short-circuit the gentleman's negotiations in the conference. We are not trying to run an end run around the authorizing process. We are simply, given the budget constraints under which we are operating, trying to keep ourselves able when the gentleman resolves his problems to fund the program next year at the $1½ billion level and we will not be able to do that if this resolution does not pass.

PARLIAMENTARY INQUIRY

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, I have a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). The gentleman will state it.

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, is the motion by the gentleman from Mississippi a unanimous-consent request?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. That is correct.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. PICKLE. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTEN. May I say finally that language has been included to fence these funds so that the EPA cannot make any obligations until after Superfund taxing authority has been enacted. Those who handled it in the subcommittee under no circumstances would agree to the prior release of these funds.

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to get more familiar with this. I would like to know the plans we have for a vote on the Superfund and the funding of it. I will try to cooperate with the leadership; but at this point I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

REQUEST FOR COMMITTEE ON APPROPRIATIONS TO FILE A PRIVILEGED REPORT ON JOINT RESOLUTION MAKING CONTINUING APPROPRIATIONS, FISCAL YEAR 1987

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Appropriations may have until midnight tonight to file a privileged report on a joint resolution making continuing appropriations for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1987, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have reserved the right to object on the request of the gentleman to file the report on the conference report tonight, recognizing full well that while the committee was deliberating all afternoon, my feelings is that the conference report is ultimately going to be vetoed if it does not take a considerably different form from what I see currently. If that is the case, well, maybe some action should be taken, giving the President an opportunity to veto it and then reworking it. I do not want to be delaying our target date of October 3 by any stretch of the imagination.

It may be unfair to ask the gentleman from Mississippi, but what I would really like to do is ask some member of the Budget Committee or the Democratic leadership when they expect to bring up the reconciliation measure.

Now, there has been considerable thought on our side and I see that the gentlewoman from Illinios is on her feet and probably wants to make pretty much the same point that the gentleman from Illinois is making, that we are probably going to have to have a reconciliation bill.

May I say, if we are going to avoid sequestering, we had better get busy around here an get a reconciliation bill passed by the House and into conference and agreed upon.

Now, we are going to have to have at least $11 to $12 billion, and unfortunately in view of what the Appropriations Committee did this afternoon with the inclusion of general revenue sharing, you bumped it another $3.4 billion. Now you are up to $15 or $16 billion.

I just have to keep asking the question, when are we going to get around to making the difficult decisions here and cutting something, rather than adding something to what we already cannot add anything more to and still live within our limits?

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHEL. I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi.

Mr. WHITTEN. May I say to my colleague and friend, the gentleman knows what we have been through all afternoon. The outlook is that we may be coming back here after the election because of this.

Now, we have got to get something to the President before he will have anything to veto.

Our problem is to get this bill through the Congress. While we can file it tomorrow if we cannot tonight, I do think time is of the essence in this matter.

I just work here, as I said earlier. If we have to wait until tomorrow, we will wait until tomorrow, but we are skating on thin ice timewise if we want to go home anytime around the first of October.

May I say again, with reference to the gentleman's statement, it is clear that all the cuts are in the midpart of the United States, while the two coastal areas are getting increases in carryover funds. That was very evident before our committee today; so whatever it is and however we think about it, we cannot handle it until we file it and the President cannot veto it or sign it until we send it to him.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I hope the chairman just made a teensyweensy mistake. Generally we prefer getting bills to the President that he can sign, rather than automatically wanting to give him bills he can veto; but with that in mind, the gentleman knows that I do this with a bit of fear, frankly, standing up to the chairman of the Appropriations Committee.

My concern is this, and this is why I am reserving the right to object. It seems like a simple matter to define the rest of our few weeks here. If we go to the conference report, which I know the gentleman has worked on, no one is questioning that, Thursday or even Friday, and if we do not have reconciliation agreed to before we do the conference report, you can kiss goodbye any idea of saving anything. Everything we have all said about helping the deficit and making it less is incredible smoke; so I am not trying to impose on either the genial chairman or his staff, but I am wondering if the chairman would agree that he would not call the conference report, and I trust the gentleman from Mississippi implicitly to keep his word until we have a conference report on reconciliation. If the gentleman will hold that, the gentleman's word is good enough for me.

Mr. WHITTEN. May I say, I have no idea of what will happen to the reconciliation bill, but with regard to this bill I have tried to cooperate with the President. I have had this issue raised before. The gentlewoman may not know it, but the first year of the Presidency we were asked to rescind $15 billion and we rescinded $14.7 billion. Out of 77 bills I have handled, he signed 72.

I believe we have to work together in this Congress and certainly the gentlewoman is in her right. I was just explaining the situation and the time element is such that where the Senate has outlays, they have limits on outlays which their Budget Committee accepted, and that is an entirely different rule. This should not have been adopted, in my opinion, since outlays are under the control of the Executive.

But we have got a bill here, a continuing resolution, and we need to bring it up as soon as we can. If we cannot bring it up now, we will bring it up when we can.

Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois. Excuse me. I really tried to understand. I really do not understand what the gentleman's answer was. I mean, will the gentleman agree to hold it until we get the reconciliation we have all promised to do?

Mr. WHITTEN. Well, the schedule for reconciliation is decided by the leadership. I am just told what to do around here. I am not part of the leadership to make those determinations; but we are ready and if the Congress is not ready on either side, we will just wait.

Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, if I tell the gentleman to say no, the gentleman will say no?

Mr. WHITTEN. I cannot tell the gentlewoman when the reconciliation will come up. The leadership will have to decide that. I understand there may be some controversy, but I cannot speak to that issue.

Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I am going for the nonce, anyway, to object, with the hope we can work it out with the short features.

Mr. WHITTEN. The gentlewoman is certainly within her rights.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

GARN-ST GERMAIN DEPOSITORY INSTITUTIONS ACT OF 1982 EXTENSION

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 5521) to extend until October 13, 1986, the emergency acquisition and net worth guarantee provision of the Garn-St Germain Depository Institutions Act of 1982, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island?

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I reserve the right to object to afford the chairman an opportunity to explain what we are doing here.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentlemn yield?

Mr. WYLIE. I yield to the gentleman from Rhode Island.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Well, Mr. Speaker, absent this extension and pending the possible adoption of what is known as the regulators' bill, this is necessary in the event that we have some banks that have to be merged or acquired under the emergency acquisition powers contained in Garn-St Germain.

The emergency acquisition provisions are those that we have been operating under since the adoption of Garn-St Germain to allow the FDIC to work out acquisitions and mergers over State lines using the guidelines within those provisions.

In addition to that, there is also extensive provision of the net worth certificate provisions until we can get the FSLIC recapitalization as well.

Mr. WYLIE. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, and I do not intend to object, the chairman has given a good explanation of what we are doing here in H.R. 5521.

The regulators ought to have the emergency powers which were granted to them under Garn-St Germain, which has now expired, and will provide for the method by which they can now act in the case of failed institutions.

So I am pleased to join with the chairman, the gentleman from Rhode Island [Mr. ST GERMAIN], in asking for passage of this bill.

The Garn-St Germain provisions, as I have suggested, have been useful to the bank regulators in the past and will continue to be needed.

It is my hope that we can act on more permanent legislation, hopefully next week when the full Banking Committee meets on this legislation, but today I think we need to pass this bill, and I support the chairman's motion.

Although there are a lot of different opinions about what can and should be accomplished in the closing weeks of the 99th Congress, I believe that action on the regulators' bill providing the FDIC with expanded emergency acquisition authorities, and the bill to recapitalize the FSLIC is of paramount importance. Delay on these bills will only add to the problems encountered by the Federal Deposit Insurance funds, which underpin public confidence in our depository institutions, and invites problems like those experienced in Ohio and Maryland last year.

We have 14 legislative days left in the 99th Congress. Faced with this deadline, priorities must be assigned. Action on the regulators' bill, H.R. 4701, and the FSLIC recapitalization bill, H.R. 4907, is urgently needed. So far this year, the FDIC has dealt with over 100 bank failures and is anticipating at least 140–160 for the year as a whole—versus a total of 120 in 1985. Moreover, absent the expanded authority contained in H.R. 4701 to sell an entire holding company interstate, the FDIC is likely to be faced with additional situations where open bank assistance must be provided at a very high cost.

The problems of FSLIC are well known. Some say that the unobligated reserves of FSLIC are now as low as $2 to $2½ billion. A September 9, 1986, GAO report entitled "Thrift Industry Cost to FSLIC of Delaying Action on Insolvent Institutions" concludes that failure to give FSLIC the needed resources will force the agency to continue propping up a number of sick institutions and will result in higher resolution costs of roughly $1.4 billion.

Mr. Speaker, these bills are designed to prevent a massive taxpayer bailout of our Federal Deposit Insurance funds. I hope that as we act on yet another short term extension of a more limited authority, we will not lose sight of the fact that Congress needs to pass the more permanent legislation before adjournment.

Mr. BARNARD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WYLIE. I yield to the gentleman from Georgia.

Mr. BARNARD. Mr. Speaker, I asked the gentleman to yield for the purpose of discussing further the bill with the chairman and to indicate that certainly there is no controversy about this. This is a very, very important piece of legislation. It is one that was enacted several years ago. It has served a very, very worthwhile purpose in the assistance to troubled thrifts and troubled banks, but I would like to ask the chairman, if the gentleman will yield, why have we selected the date of October 13? It looks to me that this is important enough that we would go ahead at this time and select a date that is far enough away in the future, such as 5 or 6 months, in order that we would not have to be coming back to the House every 30 days to ask for this extension.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Hopefully, Mr. Speaker, we will not be coming back to the House every 30 days. It is our hope, as the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WYLIE] began to say a few moments ago, the Banking Committee will be meeting next week. We intend to consider at that time legislation that would supersede this. By having this type of an abbreviated extension, it gives added motivation to act on the other legislation that would supersede.

Mr. BARNARD. In other words, I am led to believe then by the chairman that we will definitely consider a bill that will extend this date on a permanent basis?

Mr. ST GERMAIN. That is our hope. We are working toward that end.

Mr. BARNARD. But that particular bill has not been considered by the full committee as of this point?

Mr. ST GERMAIN. It will be considered next week.

Mr. BARNARD. Or by the House?

Mr. ST GERMAIN. It will be considered next week by the full committee.

Mr. BARNARD. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

THE SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

H.R. 5521

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) section 141(a) of the Garn-St Germain Depository Institutions Act of 1982 is amended by striking out "September 15, 1986" and inserting in lieu thereof "October 13, 1986".

(b) Section 206(a) of such Act is amended by striking out "September 15, 1986" and inserting in lieu thereof "October 13, 1986".

(c) No amendment made by section 141(a) or section 206(a) of the Garn-St Germain Depository Institutions Act of 1982, as in effect on the day before the date of the enactment of this Act, to any other provision of law shall be deemed to have taken effect before such date of enactment and any such provision of law shall be in effect as if no such amendment had taken effect before such date of enactment.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXECUTIVE EXCHANGE PROGRAM VOLUNTARY SERVICES ACT OF 1985

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 3002) to provide for the establishment of an experimental program relating to the acceptance of voluntary services from participants in an executive exchange program of the Government, with Senate amendments thereto, and concur in the Senate amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendments, as follows:

Senate amendments: Page 4, line 9, strike out all after "1989," down to and including "function)" in line 11 and insert "the General Accounting Office".

Page 4, line 14, strike out "Commission (or successor entity)" and insert "General Accounting Office".

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Colorado?

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I will not object, but I take this time to offer the gentlewoman from Colorado [Mrs. SCHROEDER], the chair of the Subcommittee on Civil Service of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, who handled this bill in this House, an opportunity to explain what the purpose of this action is.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HORTON. I am happy to yield to the gentlewoman from Colorado.

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, this action will clear for the President H.R. 3002, the legislation which the gentleman from New York [Mr. HORTON], the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. DWYER], and I introduced last summer. The bill establishes an experimental program under which the Government can accept the voluntary services of up to 10 private sector participants per year in the Executive Exchange Program. These participants would be paid by their private sector employers and could be paid more than the Federal pay cap. The Senate amendment provides that the report on the advantages and disadvantages of the experimental program will be prepared by the General Accounting Office. The House passed bill provided that the report would be prepared by the President's Commission on Executive Exchange. I think the Senate amendment is a good one and we should accept it.

Mr. HORTON. Mr. Speaker, this is a good bill, I urge its adoption, and I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Colorado?

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

TRIBALLY CONTROLLED COMMUNITY COLLEGE ASSISTANCE AMENDMENTS OF 1986

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Education and Labor be discharged from further consideration of the Senate bill (S. 2095) to reauthorize the Tribally Controlled Community College Assistance Act of 1978 and the Navajo Community College Act, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

Mr. GOODLING. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I shall not object; I merely reserve the time to give my friend, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. KILDEE], an opportunity to explain the bill.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GOODLING. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, today I ask for the unanimous consideration of S. 2095, a bill to reauthorize the Tribally Controlled Community Colleges Act and the Navajo Community College Act. This bill, which is the product of substantial compromise by both chambers, was passed unanimously by the Senate. These programs, which totaled an appropriation of $11.3 million in fiscal year 1986, are two small, but very vital, programs which provide basic support to 20 colleges providing education to reservation based students.

The bill reauthorizes the colleges by extending the current authorizations for 4 additional years. It freezes the per capita amount used in the computation of payments at the fiscal year 1986 level for the life of the bill. Other substantive provisions simply clarify provisions in the reauthorization of 1983, provisions which the Bureau of Indian Affairs has never implemented.

This is a bill which contains no new authority. It is a noncontroversial bill, which will guarantee these institutions the financial stability they need to continue to grow. I ask my colleagues to support the measure.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

S. 2095

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

This Act may be cited as the "Tribally Controlled Community College Assistance Amendments of 1986".

SEC. 2. AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.

(a) GRANT PROGRAMS.—Subsection (a) of section 110 of the Tribally Controlled Community College Assistance Act of 1978 (25 U.S.C. 1810(a)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "1985, 1986, and 1987" in paragraph (1) and inserting in lieu thereof "1987, 1988, 1989", and

(2) by striking out "such fiscal years" in paragraphs (2) and (3) and inserting in lieu thereof "the fiscal years 1987, 1988, 1989, and 1990".

(b) ENDOWMENT PROGRAM.—Section 306 of the Tribally Controlled Community College Assistance Act of 1978 (25 U.S.C. 1836) is amended by striking out "1985, 1986, and 1987" and inserting in lieu thereof "1987, 1988, 1989, and 1990".

SEC. 3. DEFINITIONS.

(a) SATISFACTORY PROGRESS.—Subsection (a) of section 2 of the Tribally Controlled Community College Assistance Act of 1978 (25 U.S.C. 1801(a)) is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (6),

(2) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (7) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and", and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(8) 'satisfactory progress toward a degree or certificate' has the meaning given to such term by the institution at which the student is enrolled.".

(b) INDIAN STUDENT COUNT.—Subsection (b) of section 2 of the Tribally Controlled Community College Assistance Act of 1978 (25 U.S.C. 1801(b)) is amended—

(1) by striking out ", in accordance with the standards and practices of the appropriate accrediting agency or the institution at which the student is in attendance," in paragraph (5),

(2) by redesignating paragraphs (3), (4), and (5) as paragraphs (4), (5), and (6), respectively, and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (2) the following new paragraph:

"(3) Credits earned by any student who has not obtained a high school degree or its equivalent shall be counted toward the computation of the Indian student count if the institution at which the student is in attendance has established criteria for the admission of such student on the basis of the student's ability to benefit from the education or training offered. The institution shall be presumed to have established such criteria if the admission procedures for such studies include counseling or testing that measures the student's aptitude to successfully complete the course in which the student has enrolled. No credits earned by such student for purposes of obtaining a high school degree or its equivalent shall be counted toward the computation of the Indian student count."

SEC. 4. OPERATION AND IMPROVEMENT GRANTS.

Paragraph (2) of section 108(a) of the Tribally Controlled Community College Assistance Act of 1978 (25 U.S.C. 1808(a)(2)) is amended to read as follows: "(2) $5,820,".

SEC. 5. CONTRACTS UNDER INDIAN SELF-DETERMINATION AND EDUCATION ASSISTANCE ACT.

Subsection (b) of section 109 of the Tribally Controlled Community College Assistance Act of 1978 (25 U.S.C. 1809(b)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(3) No tribally controlled community college for which a tribe has designated a portion of the funds appropriated for the tribe from funds appropriated under the Act of November 2, 1921 (42 Stat. 208; 25 U.S.C. 13) may be denied a contract for such portion under the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act (25 U.S.C. 450 et seq.) (except as provided in that Act), or denied appropriate contract support to administer such portion of the appropriated funds.".

SEC. 6. REPORT ON FACILITIES.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 112 of the Tribally Controlled Community College Assistance Act of 1978 (25 U.S.C. 1812) is amended—

(1) by striking out "Administrator of General Services" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "Secretary", and

(2) by striking out "enactment of this subsection" in subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof "enactment of the Tribally Controlled Community College Assistance Amendments of 1986".

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—Section 113(a) of the Tribally Controlled Community College Assistance Act of 1978 (25 U.S.C. 1813(a)) is amended by striking out "Administrator of General Services" and inserting in lieu thereof "Secretary".

SEC. 7. NAVAJO COMMUNITY COLLEGE.

Section 5 of the Navajo Community College Act (25 U.S.C. 640c-1) is amended—

(1) by striking out "the fiscal year beginning October 1, 1984, and for the three succeeding fiscal years" in subsection (a)(1) and inserting in lieu thereof "each of the fiscal years 1987, 1988, 1989, and 1990", and

(2) by striking out "for any fiscal year" in subsection (b)(1) and inserting in lieu thereof "for each fiscal year".

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on S. 2095, the Senate bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

REAPPOINTMENT OF DAVID C. ACHESON AS CITIZEN REGENT OF BOARD OF REGENTS OF SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on House Administration be discharged from further consideration of the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 517) to provide for the reappointment of David C. Acheson as a citizen regent of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the joint resolution, as follows:

H.J. RES. 517

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the vacancy in the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, of the class other than Members of Congress, which will occur by the expiration of the term of David C. Acheson of the District of Columbia on December 22, 1986, be filled by the reappointment of the present incumbent. The appointment is for a term of six years and shall take effect on the day after the current term expires.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, this resolution, which was ordered reported by unanimous consent, by the Committee on House Administration, on August 7, 1986, is to provide for the reappointment of David C. Acheson as a citizen regent of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution. Mr. Acheson, as a member of the executive committee, has shared the breadth of his intellect, interests, and experience to the great benefit of the Smithsonian. Mr. Acheson's familiarity with the Institution and the seriousness with which he approaches his work has proven to be a tremendous asset. The Smithsonian is indeed fortunate to have Mr. Acheson contribute his hard work and talent to the Board of Regents. The Committee on House Administration has reviewed and favorably recommends this reappointment.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

U.S. DISTRICT COURT FOR THE DISTRICT OF MARYLAND

(Mr. HOYER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HOYER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 5525, a bill which I just introduced.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. BARNES, Mrs. BENTLEY, Mrs. BYRON, and I are introducing legislation to create two divisions within the U.S. District Court for the District of Maryland. The demographic realities of Maryland today and Maryland in the future dictate the creation of two divisions.

Within the fourth judicial circuit, Maryland is the only State with one district or without divisions. However, the population of Maryland now exceeds that of several multidistrict States in the fourth circuit at the time they became multidistricts. The 1980 population figures provided by the Bureau of Census for this circuit are:

North Carolina, 5,874,429.
Virginia, 5,346,818.
Maryland, 4,216,975.
South Carolina, 3,119,208.
West Virginia, 1,949,644.

North Carolina has three judicial districts—eastern, central, and western. Virginia has two judicial districts—eastern and western. South Carolina has a single district, but 10 divisions. In West Virginia, there are two judicial districts—northern and southern.

The U.S. District Court for the District of Maryland comprises the entire State, including 23 counties and 1 city. The court is based in the city of Baltimore.

The five-county region of Maryland that would comprise the southern division—Calvert, Charles, Montgomery, Prince George's, and St. Mary's—had a population of 1,411,408 in 1980. By 1990, it is projected that this area will have 1,576,500 people, or almost 35 percent of the total population of Maryland. These counties are the fastest growing in Maryland in terms of population, business activity and development, and legal activity, as measured by civil, criminal, and bankruptcy court filings. These trends are projected to continue.

In addition to total population, consideration must be given to the attorney population within the State and within the proposed new division. Approximately 33.4 percent of currently practicing Maryland attorneys reside in what would be the southern division.

Under the auspices of Senator CHARLES MCC. MATHIAS, JR., the Task Force on the Organization of the United States District Court for the District of Maryland submitted a report endorsing the establishment of a Southern Division. Quoting from the report:

"Federal Courts should be located where the people and the lawyers reside so as to maximize their participation and access to these courts. It appears clearly that one-third of the lawyers and approximately 40 percent of the people of Maryland [the Task Force has included Anne Arundel County in a six-county Southern Division] live in the area proposed for the new division."

Furthermore, the existing judicial and law enforcement organization already serving what would be the southern division—the Bankruptcy Court, the U.S. Magistrate and his clerk, 18 members of the Probation Office, approximately 5 members of the Clerk's Office, and a satellite office of the Federal Bureau of Investigation—lends credence to the proposal for two divisions. Cost, even at a time of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings fiscal constraints, would not be an issue. The additional costs would be approximately 2 percent more than the current operating budget.

The Montgomery County and Prince Georges County governments are regularly and frequently party-litigants in district court. This has entailed a substantial cost for travel and related expenses.

On another note, under the weighted caseload system for determining judicial manpower needs, there is more than sufficient work to justify the assignment of two judges to a newly created division. By a fortunate coincidence, at present, there is one vacancy to be filled on the court. Thus, there is an opportunity to select at least one judge who does not have to relocate from Baltimore.

In their report, the task force members wrote, "* * * the arguments are just too compelling in support of the need and right of the public to have a southern division with an accessible courthouse and an available judge or judges to conduct the daily business of a Federal court which will be as busy as this proposed one will inevitably be." The report concludes, "Accordingly, we recommend that the process of implementing this concept be begun at once; and that Congress create a new division of the District of Maryland, to be known as the 'Southern Division,' and to comprise the counties of Montgomery, Prince Georges, Calvert, Charles, and St. Marys."

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 4759, INTELLIGENCE AUTHORIZATION ACT FOR FISCAL YEAR 1987

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 545 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H.RES. 545

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 1(b) of rule XXIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 4759) to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1987 for intelligence and intelligence-related activities of the United States Government, the Intelligence Community Staff, and the Central Intelligence Agency retirement and Disability System, and for other purposes, and the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. All points of order against the bill for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 5(a) of rule XXI are hereby waived. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule by titles instead of by sections except for section 107, and each title shall be considered as having been read. The amendments recommended by the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence and by the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service now printed in the bill shall be considered to have been adopted in the House and in the Committee of the Whole. Section 107 of the bill shall not be considered for amendment until the remainder of the bill has been considered for amendment in its entirety, and until section 107 is considered for amendment, no amendment to the bill, including an amendment in the nature of a substitute, shall be in order which affects the subject matter of section 107, funding for military and paramilitary operations in Angola. No amendment to section 107 shall be in order except one motion to strike and said section, if offered by Representative Stump of Arizona or his designee, and said motion to strike shall be debatable for not to exceed two hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the proponent of the amendment and a Member opposed thereto. After the disposition of said motion to strike, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, for the purposes of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. QUILLEN], pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this rule provides for consideration of H.R. 4759, the Intelligence Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1987. It is a modified open rule, providing 1 hour of general debate to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence.

The rule waives all points of order against the bill for failure to comply with clause 5(a) of rule 21, which prohibits appropriations in a legislative measure and it provides that amendments recommended by the Select Intelligence Committee and the Post Office and Civil Service Committee and printed in the bill will be considered to have been adopted in the House and in the Committee of the Whole.

Under the rule the bill will be considered for amendment by titles rather than by sections, except for section 107. Section 107 requires that support for groups engaged in military and paramilitary operations in Angola must be the openly acknowledged policy of the United States before any military or paramilitary aid can be sent. Any germane amendment that does not violate the rules of the House may be offered to any part of the bill, again except for section 107, on the Angola matter, the rule provides for one motion to strike section 107, if offered by Representative STUMP, and no other amendment is in order to section 107. The motion to strike will be debatable for 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the proponent and a Member who is opposed.

The rule provides that section 107 will not be considered for amendment, and no amendment affecting funding for military or paramilitary operations in Angola will be in order, until the remainder of the bill has been considered for amendment. After disposition of the motion to strike section 107, the rule provides one motion to recommit.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 4759 authorizes appropriations for U.S. intelligence activities for fiscal year 1987. It is an important measure and one that deserves our support. As a member of the Intelligence Committee and the Rules Committee, I can say there appears to be only one item of significant controversy—the Angola issue. The bill now requires that the President request and Congress approve support for military or paramilitary operations in Angola before such assistance may commence in the current year or in fiscal year 1987. This is an important foreign policy question and the rule provides for a motion to strike the language. The rule also provides for full and orderly debate of the issue after consideration of the remainder of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of the rule and adoption of this important legislation.

□ 1810

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may use.

Mr. Speaker, the rule has been ably explained by the gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON]. It would be redundant for me to go into the details again. There is no objection, so far as I know, to the rule itself, although there will be some controversy on the measure when it is debated on the floor.

Mr. Speaker, we all know that the intelligence operations of this Government are most important, and we must not ever tie the hands of those who are in control.

Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of the rule.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the distinguished gentleman from Arizona [Mr. Stump].

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Speaker, the minority supports the proposed rule for consideration of H.R. 4759. The minority generally supports H.R. 4759. Although we strongly oppose section 107, which eliminates the covert action option for support of freedom fighters in Angola. The rule provides for us to offer an amendment to strike section 107, and I anticipate that the Angola amendment will be the only significant issue in the floor debate of the bill.

Other than a technical amendment, a budget amendment, a South Africa amendment, and the Angola amendment I will offer, I am not aware of any amendments to be offered to the bill as reported by the Intelligence, Armed Services, and Post Office and Civil Service Committees. The Angola amendment should be the only issue in contention.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to point out that it is no small achievement to bring forth an intelligence bill which, with the exception of the Angola provision, has solid bipartisan support. LEE HAMILTON has done an outstanding job during his tenure as chairman of the committee, and I believe the House owes him a debt of gratitude.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. MONTGOMERY). The question is on the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

VACATING ENGROSSMENT, THIRD READING, AND PASSAGE OF HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 517, REAPPOINTMENT OF DAVID C. ACHESON AS CITIZEN REGENT OF BOARD OF REGENTS OF SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the action of engrossing, reading a third time and passing the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 517) to provide for the reappointment of David C. Acheson as a citizen regent of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, will be vacated.

There was no objection.

AMENDMENT IN THE NATURE OF A SUBSTITUTE OFFERED BY MS. OAKAR

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment in the nature of a substitute.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by Ms. OAKAR: Strike out all after the resolving clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

That, in accordance with section 5581 of the Revised Statutes of the United States (20 U.S.C. 43), the vacancy on the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution, in the class other than Members of Congress, occurring by reason of the expiration of the term of David C. Acheson of the District of Columbia, is filled by reappointment of the incumbent for a term of six years, effective December 22, 1986.

Ms. OAKAR (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment in the nature of a substitute be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. OAKAR].

The amendment in the nature of a substitute was agreed to.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

TITLE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MS. OAKAR

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the title offered by Ms. OAKAR: Amend the title so as to read: "Joint resolution providing for reappointment of David C. Acheson as a citizen regent of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution.".

The title amendment was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

INTELLIGENCE AUTHORIZATION ACT FOR FISCAL YEAR 1987

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 545 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 4759.

The Chair designates the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MURTHA] as chairman of the Committee of the Whole, and requests the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. ENGLISH] to assume the chair temporarily.

□ 1815

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 4759) to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1987 for intelligence and intelligence related activities of the U.S. Government, the intelligence community staff, and the Central Intelligence Agency retirement and disability system, and for other purposes, with Mr. ENGLISH [Chairman pro tempore] in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Pursuant to the rule, the first reading of the bill is dispensed with.

Under the rule, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HAMILTON] will be recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. STUMP] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HAMILTON].

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 4759, the Intelligence Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1987.

I credit the hard work and long hours put in by the 16 members of the committee for the recommendations of this bill. They worked diligently, cooperatively, and constructively, and they have produced a good bill under difficult circumstances that advances the national security interests of the United States. I would especially commend the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. STOKES, and the gentleman from Arizona, Mr. STUMP, the chairman and ranking minority member, respectively, of the Budget Subcommittee.

This bill is the result of more than 30 hours of hearings by the Budget Subcommittee with witnesses from each major intelligence and intelligence-related program. Those hearings also resulted in written responses to many additional questions.

I am pleased to report that there is bipartisan support on the part of the Intelligence Committee for this bill and for the intelligence functions it authorizes. As far as I am aware, the bill, which deals with scores of complex intelligence issues, contains only one major controversy—and that is not strictly an intelligence matter: military or paramilitary operations in Angola.

H.R. 4759 authorizes appropriations for all U.S. intelligence programs supplying information to the President and other national decisionmakers—the National Foreign Intelligence Program—and those which supply intelligence to military commanders—the tactical intelligence and related activities. The levels of expenditure and the number of personnel recommended by the committee for fiscal year 1987 in these areas represents an adequate but by no means fully satisfactory level of effort for U.S. intelligence activities.

At the appropriate time. I will offer an amendment to the bill to bring it into congruence with H.R. 4428. The Defense Authorization Act, as it has passed the House. The bill, as reported by the Intelligence Committee, authorizes a level of intelligence expenditures pegged to the budget resolution's ceiling for budget authority for the 050 function of $292 billion. Members will recall that in considering the defense authorization bill. The House reduced that budget authority level to about $286 billion. This reduction necessitates a decrease in authorizations for a full range of intelligence programs. Both national and tactical.

This decrease was partially offset by the adoption of an amendment to H.R. 4428 providing some $90 million in national foreign intelligence programs for counterintelligence, counternarcotics and counterterrorism. The resulting level of intelligence expenditures in fiscal year 1987 remains only adequate. The cuts will impair, but not cripple, intelligence by eliminating or slowing many collection and processing programs and by denying personnel increases to handle new intelligence problems. These cuts represent a responsible, careful approach that accepts the fiscal constraints upon us with the least possible amount of impairment to our intelligence capabilities.

In addition to the authorization of appropriations and personnel ceilings, the bill has several legislative provisions to provide survivor annuities and health benefits for certain former spouses of CIA personnel; to improve U.S. counterintelligence and security programs; to provide new management authorities and new benefits for intelligence personnel; to provide for international mapping and data exchanges; to require prior notice to the intelligence committees of covert arms transfers; and last, to provide restrictions on support for military or paramilitary operations in Nicaragua and Angola.

In the case of Nicaragua. The committee recommends reenactment of a provision in the fiscal year 1986 Intelligence Authorization Act which essentially prohibits the use of contingency funds to supplement the $100 million already approved by the House. This provision would not affect in any way the expenditure of that $100 million but it would require that the Congress approve any additional assistance to the contras. This is consistent with the provision on Nicaragua contained in H.R. 5052. The defense military construction appropriations bill, which the House passed earlier this year.

In the case of Angola, the committee recommends that no covert assistance be permitted to UNITA unless and until the President publicly requests such assistance and the Congress approves it by law. This is the major controversy in this bill. Under the rule which we have adopted, we will debate the Angola provision after the consideration of all other matters pertaining to the bill. This issue of aid to UNITA is an important foreign policy question and members of the Intelligence Committee are closely divided on it. I support the committee's recommendation but I will reserve my remarks on that subject until we reach that section.

Members should be aware, however, that the issue on which they will be asked to vote deals only with the question of covert assistance to Angola. It is not a referendum or an attack on covert action as a means of achieving the foreign policy ends of the United States. The committee supports the use of covert action in many areas of the world. The fiscal year 1987 authorization bill, like its predecessors, funds the vast majority of ongoing covert action operations. The issue before the House on the question of covert aid in Angola will be whether, under the present circumstances, the Congress should play a role in approving aid to UNITA.

Several amendments to the bill will be offered. I will offer first a committee technical amendment to correct punctuation and printing errors.

I will then offer an amendment to replace the schedule of authorizations setting forth the amounts authorized for intelligence and intelligence-related programs with an amended schedule conforming to the actions taken by the House in amending H.R. 4428, the Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1987. It will have the effect of reducing intelligence programs to a level pegged to a $286 billion defense budget.

The amendments recommended to H.R. 4759 by the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service and the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence were adopted with the approval of the rule for H.R. 4759. The first were technical corrections and a reporting requirement. The latter was a provision denying retirement benefits to Federal employees convicted of exposing undercover intelligence agents.

Mr. Chairman, the Intelligence Committee has had to recommend significant reductions in the intelligence budget request in light of fiscal constraints imposed on all Government programs. The Intelligence Committee believes strongly that the administration must reorder its funding priorities within the defense function to reallocate funds to the intelligence function in recognition of the important contributions intelligence makes to overall defense readiness, effectiveness of weapons systems, and the viability of military planning. The committee urges the Secretary of Defense and the Director of Central Intelligence to provide higher priorities for intelligence programs in the future, even in the regime of more restrained defense budget requests.

I appreciate the understanding and support of the members and staff of the Committee on Armed Services for adjustments in the intelligence budget. I also commend and appreciate the professional and skilled assistance of the staff of the House Select Committee on Intelligence.

Mr. Chairman, this bill meets the budget targets of the House and provides for a strong intelligence program. The committee will continue to work for improved intelligence capabilities, not only to deal with traditional high-priority targets such as the Soviet Union, but also to assist in our war on terrorism, the war on drugs, and counter Soviet block espionage activities in this country.

□ 1820

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in general support of H.R. 4759. The Intelligence Authorization Act for fiscal year 1987, although I strongly oppose section 107 of the bill. Section 107 takes away from the United States the option for effective support to Angolan freedom fighters. I will offer an amendment later to strike section 107.

Aside from section 107, I support the bill. The funding authorizations contained in this bill for intelligence and intelligence-related programs ensure that U.S. policymakers will continue to have the capability to collect needed intelligence on foreign powers; detect and counter hostile activities by foreign powers; and to influence world events. The bill provides a balanced and effective allocation of scarce taxpayers dollars to U.S. intelligence programs and generally represents bipartisan agreement on such programs.

Because the effectiveness of intelligence programs depends upon secrecy, the details of intelligence programs and associated funding levels must, of course, remain secret. Those details are in the classified schedule of authorizations accompanying the bill and in the classified annex to the committee's report on the bill, both of which have been available to Members of the House.

There are several amendments to the bill of which we have been made aware.

One is a technical amendment to be offered by Chairman HAMILTON to correct three minor printing errors in the bill. Another is an adjustment to the intelligence budget figures necessitated by actions which have occurred since the Intelligence Committee markup. Another is an amendment relating to South Africa to be offered by Mr. STOKES. These amendments have been cleared with the committee minority and should not be controversial.

The last amendment is a motion to strike section 107 of the bill prohibiting covert support to Angolan freedom fighters, which I will offer.

I urge my colleagues to support the amendment to strike section 107, which I will address in greater detail later.

I would like to take this opportunity to thank the members of the committee from both sides of the aisle for their time, attention, and efforts to bring our bill to the floor in substantial agreement. I wish to express my appreciation to Chairman LEE HAMILTON for his leadership and his fair and even-handed approach in responding to the minority's concerns. I also wish to thank LOU STOKES, chairman of the Program and Budget Authorization Subcommittee, and the other members of the subcommittee for their dedication especially DICK CHENEY and BOB LIVINGSTON who were the two new members of the Budget Subcommittee on the minority side.

And of course a special thanks to the staff. If not for them, this would not be possible.

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. STOKES], the chairman of the Budget Subcommittee of the House Intelligence Committee.

Mr. STOKES. Mr. Chairman, at the outset I want to thank the distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. HAMILTON] for yielding to me. The gentleman has been an outstanding chairman and it is an honor to serve with him on this committee.

Mr. Chairman, H.R. 4759, the Intelligence Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1987, is the ninth such bill reported out by the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence. I am proud to say that, like its predecessors, the budget provisions in the bill were approved unanimously in committee, and were supported by the Committee on Armed Services.

This bill authorizes all the funds for the next fiscal year for the intelligence and intelligence-related activities of the U.S. Government.

The category of intelligence activities includes all the activities of the Central Intelligence Agency; the Defense Intelligence Agency; the National Security Agency: other intelligence components of the Department of Defense, and the Departments of the Army, Navy, and Air Force; the Bureau of Intelligence and Research of the Department of State; the intelligence divisions of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, intelligence elements of the Departments of Treasury and Energy, and the Drug Enforcement Administration; and the intelligence community staff on the Director of Central Intelligence. These activities provide intelligence for the use of the President, the Cabinet, the National Security Council, and the Joint Chiefs of Staff.

Further, this bill authorizes intelligence-related activities of the Department of Defense, which are programs that are integral to the defense force structure, but which are similar to national intelligence programs and are often used for national intelligence purposes, particularly in peacetime.

The similarity of programs and functions between the national intelligence programs and the intelligence-related activities of the Defense Department is the reason that both are considered by the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence and authorized in this bill. We have worked to insure that the program areas are complementary and mutually supportive, but not duplicative. The referral of this bill to the Committee on Armed Services has assured that the judgments we have made from an intelligence viewpoint are equally sound from a military perspective. We worked closely with that committee on a continuous basis and achieved a position agreeable to both committees.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to summarize briefly the organization of the bill.

Title I provides for the bulk of our intelligence and intelligence-related activities. Most activities are necessarily classified and details are contained in the classified schedule of authorizations and annex to the report. The schedule and annex have been available to members in the committee office since July 31. They will continue to be available.

Title II provides necessary authorities for the intelligence community staff, whose function is to assist the Director of Central Intelligence with his responsibilities for overall coordination of intelligence and preparation of the budget. The staff is made up of representatives of all elements of the intelligence community. Administratively, it is treated as though it were part of the CIA. The bill provides $21.7 million for this purpose.

Title III provides authorization of $125.8 million for the Central Intelligence Agency retirement and disability system. This is a program established by Congress in 1964 to provide for those CIA personnel who perform hazardous duties or are in special situations, usually abroad, which may limit the length of their career. In addition, title III contains a provision regarding survivor and health benefits for certain former spouses of CIA personnel.

As Chairman Hamilton has stated, title IV contains four provisions regarding counterintelligence and security.

Title V provides several administrative authorities including authority for the National Security Agency and Central Intelligence Agency to establish educational programs to facilitate the recruitment of minority high school students with a demonstrated capability to develop skills critical to the intelligence agencies such as engineering, computer science, and foreign language.

Title VI contains several miscellaneous authorities, including a section to require notice of the transfer of military equipment.

Mr. Chairman, as in the last fiscal year, this bill authorizes less than the administration requested. Some specific proposals have been recommended for deferral, others for termination, while a few have been increased. I believe that the authorization provided is adequate to meet our Nation's needs.

Mr. Chairman, let me close by stating that, as in year's past, the committee has made, and continues to make, the classified annex to its report available to all Members of the House during business hours in the committee's rooms. I would invite Members who have not yet had an opportunity to do so to read this annex.

I also want to take this opportunity to express my appreciation to BOB STUMP, the ranking minority member, for his hard work on this bill along with all the members of our subcommittee on both sides of the aisle.

I also want to express my appreciation to the staff of the committee for the excellent work they do for our committee.

□ 1830

Mr. STUMP. Mr Chairman, I yield 7½ minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. SILJANDER].

Mr. SILJANDER. I appreciate the gentleman yielding this time to me.

Mr. Chairman, we have worked hard over the last year or so attempting to untie the hands of President Ronald Reagan, in a decade of effort to repeal the infamous Clark amendment which prohibited any ability for America to assist those fighting for freedom in Angola.

I stand in general support of this bill but in deep opposition to the section that prohibits any covert assistance to UNITA in Angola.

One of the arguments ushered forth as to why we should eliminate covert aid is because we should not be in the business of overthrowing legitimate governments.

Well, let me remind the membership that the Government of Angola has never been elected. We have never recognized the Government in Angola by diplomatic means. Ford did not, Carter did not, and obviously President Reagan has not.

In terms of territory there is about equal control with UNITA and the so-called dos Santos government. The dos Santos government is totally, unequivocally propped up by Cuban troops.

It is a puppet government regime that could not exist without the help of 35,000 Cuban troops.

The other issue, "well, we should debate whether or not we should help any freedom fighters in an open format." Well, may I remind those who use that argument, we sat and stood on this floor for hours and debated whether or not the Clark amendment should be repealed. And it was, thank goodness, finally repealed. In the subcommittee where I serve as ranking member of the Africa Subcommittee, we debated the Clark amendment. Should it be overt or covert aid to help Jonas Savimbi in Angola?

We had the same debate in the Committee on Foreign Affairs and the Intelligence Committee, the same debates were engaged there. We debated on the floor.

I also had a bill. The gentleman from Indiana full well knows I had a bill to aid UNITA overtly. One hundred ten bipartisan cosponsors.

Mr. HAMILTON's name is not one of those cosponsors.

I also had resolution, sense of Congress, expressing the importance of at least assisting UNITA in Angola without any legal ties or binds. Mr. HAMILTON is not a cosponsor of that resolution either.

So I must wonder what is the real intention behind this section? I think the intention is clear, to cut off any hope of assisting Jonas Savimbi fighting for his freedom in Angola.

The other argument, if we help Savimbi the Cubans will stay and they will never leave. But the truth is when the Clark amendment a decade ago was implemented there were 12,000 Cuban troops. That was in 1975.

In 1985 there are 35,000 Cubans, nearly 3 times that number.

So did the Clark amendment stifle Castro's intentions? It did not.

Ten years ago Castro said he would leave when the MPLA stabilized the situation. And we believed him.

Seven years ago Castro said, "Well, we will leave when the Namibian independence has been finally secured." At the same time Andrew Young said that Cuban troops are a stabilizing factor in southern Africa.

And we believed him.

Now 1 week ago Castro has changed his tune for the third time in a decade and said he will not leave until the white apartheid regime in South Africa has been dismantled and there is majority rule. A good goal, but obviously Castro's intentions are to remain.

When one uses the argument that by supporting a black freedom fighter we somehow are in bed with the white racist regime in South Africa, is, minimally, absurd. He fought for 25 years, Jonas Savimbi, against white Portuguese rule and now white Cuban domination in his country. Do you think for a moment that a black freedom fighter in Angola after 25 years of fighting for independence of his nation would somehow welcome in the white apartheid regime and say "please set up a racist apartheid regime in Angola. We welcome you."? This is an absurd notion.

Obviously, yes, he is accepting aid from South Africa. Why not? Because for 10 years this country was unwilling to do so.

We fought, as CLAUDE PEPPER, Senator PEPPER has said, with the Soviets in World War II and that did not make us Communists. Iran is helping the Mujahdeen in Afghanistan and so are we. That does not make us part of the Iranian-Khomeini madness. Every country in southern Africa relies on South Africa either economically, militarily, or in some way or other. Are we going to cut off ties to every country in the southern region of that continent?

We think the Cubans are such a wonderful force in Africa, I would like to close by reading an excerpt from the essay entitled "The Village of the Living Dead." These by the way are testimonials from Angolans, black Angolans living in villages where the Cubans have plundered and raped and murdered the townspeople.

Let me read from this article:

[From the American Spectator, August 1986] Vol. 19. No. 8 / AUGUST 1986

THE VILLAGE OF THE LIVING DEAD

(By Nicholas Rowe)

I was in Angola earlier this year with a Canadian news team. Outside Jamba, the provisional capital of rebel leader Jonas Savimbi's UNITA movement, is a small village housing refugee women from the regions under the control of the Luanda Communist regime. It is known as "the village of the living dead." Some of the women are mutilated, others have lost their mind, all are victims of Soviet-inspired barbarism. And yet they speak of themselves as the lucky ones: they have survived.

Through our interpreter we spoke to some of the women able and willing to recount their experiences. The first was Madalena Ngueve, who looked much older than her forty-five years:

"It was the second of November 1984 when the Cubans came to our village. I tried to stop them taking away my son. He was twelve, and from the age of ten and upwards they come and ship them off to Cuba. I tried to stop them but one of the Cubans cut off my arm with a bayonet. They were beating the children who didn't want to leave their parents, beating them with the butt ends of their rifles. So, while I was bleeding, they took away my son. He was my only child. I've had no contact with him since that day.

Severina Chilombo arms crossed tight over her stomach, rocked compulsively back and forth as she told us her story:

"The Cubans arrived at my village just at daybreak. They locked some of the people into the huts and burned them alive. Others, their limbs—arms and legs—were cut off. My father burned to death in one of the huts, also my uncle. They poured gasoline on the huts and with torches they lit the fires. They ripped the baby I was carrying off my back. They swung and smashed her against a tree. She died, her little head cracked open. I was pushed into a lorry with some of the other younger women and boys. Later they stopped. I was raped the first time by ten men. We were raped in front of the boys deliberately. The Cubans said to them, 'Look how we rape your mothers and sisters so they can't have any more children.' During the journey we could choose whether we wanted sex voluntarily or not. Those who resisted were stabbed by bayonets. Then they were raped. Then they were killed. At the end of the journey the boys were taken away and the women put into prison. We weren't allowed to wash or anything for the first seven days. But every day the Cubans came . . . and . . . violated us. I lost my father and my mother. Everybody. There are days when I don't have any more tears left to cry. Today is almost one of those days. It was my first baby. My only baby.

Veronica Kahali was concerned that we would not believe her. She kept repeating to our interpreter. "I am not inventing a story, I saw what I saw with my own eyes." She would point to her companions in distress. "They know I am telling the truth. . . . We have all seen so much, been through so much." Reassured that we did not doubt her and that our tape-recorder would capture every word, she began in a flat, emotionless voice, as if memory of her Calvary would be erased by its telling:

"When the Cubans arrived at my village, all the people were rounded up. The older people were killed, the younger ones taken away, the boys to the army. The young women were separated from the men and taken to prison." Almost as an afterthought, she added, "The pregnant women in prison were killed by having their bellies cut open. The Cubans cut open the pregnant women by bayoneting them from just below the breast downwards."

There was an involuntary gasp of horror from our interpreter, herself a mother. Veronica Kahali was again immediately on the defensive. "But I saw it! My sister was close to her time and her belly was ripped open. She died next to her unborn baby. I saw it!"

Once calmed, she resumed her monotone monologue:

"Our people were sorted out into groups: old men, young men, old women, young women, children. The old men were killed right there on the spot. The children who gave problems were beaten to death with rifle butts . . . anything . . . hacked with choppers, pangas. The group of girls I was in, the Cubans and Fapla [soldiers of the Angolan Communist army] came every day. . . . five of them sometimes. They chose a woman and took her out of the cells. I was raped continuously. They had no mercy. If you screamed or made any noise they just gagged your mouth and held you down. Of course some of the women cried. That made it worse for them. They were beaten up and then, afterwards, they were killed."

Angelina Missoji was much more emotional; anxious that we should hear her story but ashamed of her part in it:

"It was a very sad morning. The people were walking down to the fields, it was harvest time. We walked into an ambush laid by the Cubans and some Fapla soldiers. When we fell into this ambush, I tried to run away but I was shot in my foot. Later I was taken away by the Cubans. The bone in my foot was not shattered by the bullet, but in prison the bottom part of my leg was amputated anyway."

At first undecided whether to display her mutilation or to conceal it, she finally tucked her truncated leg under the wooden bench where she was hunched.

"The villagers were divided into groups. The very old people were killed immediately, other old women taken to prison to work there. The younger women were raped and the young men sent for military training. I saw with my own eyes two different ways of killing the old. Some were lined up and shot. Others who were very old were simply clubbed to death, or kicked to death with boots or bayoneted. Both my mother and father were killed by the Cubans. I was there, I saw it. Both were killed in more or less the same way. First they were clubbed and then shot. I was very sad and also angry with myself that I did nothing, said nothing. But I would have been killed as well. I was afraid. It is very difficult for me to remember these things. No, I can't talk any more about this. I'm sorry. Forgive me."

The question we all asked ourselves was why: why attack these villages deep inside the part of Angola nominally controlled by José Eduardo Dos Santos and his Cuban allies? The answer came from an unexpected source, a Cuban who deserted to join UNITA. Miguel Garcia Enamorado, from the Cuban province of Gran Ma, explained that any village more than ten kilometers outside a town was automatically considered to favor UNITA and was therefore subject to punitive measures, "pour encourager les autres." Orders were, "Destroy everything, burn down the houses, kill the cattle, neutralize the population."

The above testimony makes me think that if Jonas Savimbi and UNITA lose their war, the village of the living dead may become the country of the living dead.

Now granted there are atrocities probably in any conflict. But, my colleagues, the issue is so abundantly clear; communism, Castro fanaticism versus fighting for freedom. The true intentions of this amendment are not just to have an open debate, because we are doing it now and we have done it before. It is time we faced what the truth is here. The truth is we need to help those fighting for freedom, and this amendment would tie our President's hands to do that.

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Chairman, before yielding to the gentlewoman from Ohio, I want to express to her my appreciation for the cooperation she has given us with regard to section 504.

Mr. Chairman, the gentlewoman from Ohio is chairman of the Subcommittee on Compensation and Employee Benefits of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service, and we have appreciated very much her cooperation.

Mr. Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentlewoman from Ohio [Ms. OAKAR].

Ms. OAKAR. I thank the gentleman from Indiana for yielding, and I want to compliment him and the distinguished ranking Member from Ohio [Mr. STOKES] and his committee for the fine cooperation they have given to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service. Today, the House will consider H.R. 4759. H.R. 4759 includes a section which would allow the Secretary of Defense more flexibility to manage civilian intelligence personnel by permitting establishment of personnel systems outside the constraints of title 5. It would permit the creation of a system similar to those used by the Central Intelligence Agency and the National Security Agency to appoint individuals and fix their pay.

The Committee on Post Office and Civil Service favorably reported H.R. 4759 on July 28 with amendments developed by my Subcommittee on Compensation and Employee Benefits. The first of these amendments were technical in nature, aimed at clarifying the intent of the bill. The amendment added a new section to require a joint report from the Secretary of Defense and the Director of Central Intelligence. The report would describe the systems that would be implemented by the various intelligence agencies within the Department of Defense; provide a comparison of these systems to the CIA and NSA; and address any recruitment or retention problems which may continue to exist within those systems.

Mr. Chairman, I am very interested in changing the current system of setting pay for Federal employees, to improve our ability to recruit and retain well qualified individuals to carry out our many critical Federal programs. On May 1, 1986, I introduced H.R. 4738, the Federal Pay Management Act of 1986. The legislation would require several demonstration projects using various alternative pay systems. These demonstration projects would enable us to take a closer look at several methods, and evaluate the pros and cons of each before making a decision on which is best for the entire Federal work force. It would also limit the President's ability to submit alternative pay plans to Congress, such as the one he recently submitted, which would grant only a 2-percent increase in pay for Federal workers.

Furthermore, my legislation would also require the establishment of an independent Commission on Federal Pay Management. This Commission would evaluate the alternative pay systems established under the bill and provide recommendations to the President and each House of Congress 5 years after enactment.

Section 507, of H.R. 4759, would require that a joint report from the Secretary of Defense and the Director of Central Intelligence on Personnel Systems for civilian intelligence personnel be submitted to the House Committees on Post Office and Civil Service, Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, Governmental Affairs, and the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence. This would provide Congress the opportunity to review the effect of the new personnel system on recruitment and retention at these agencies. The report will assist the committees in fulfilling their oversight role and in reviewing the impact of the new system.

I would like to thank the members of the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence for their cooperation and support.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to give favorable consideration to H.R. 4759.

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3½ minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. COURTER].

□ 1845

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, I rise not because I oppose this bill, but because I have grave reservations about one particular part of it: Section 107, which would bar any further covert aid to Angola's legitimate resistance movement. The House will hear others speak on this matter tomorrow, but I will be unable to be present, and ask for a few minutes now.

Mr. Chairman, U.S. law permits the President to conduct covert aid programs, with proper oversight and review by specific congressional committees, committees whose members are elected by the American people. To my knowledge, the administration is in full compliance with all requirements in the Angolan case. If it were not, I cannot imagine that the Intelligence Committees would not be enforcing compliance. Compliance is not the issue here; further public exposure is the issue.

The supporters of section 107 are telling us that all they want is open debate of any further aid. But it is my view that section 107 in the Intelligence bill is intended not to make our aid to Angola more overt or more public, but to throw a road block against aid simply. None of those who have been pressing for section 107, I would venture to guess, is a cosponsor of the bills which would assure aid to the Angolan resistance. Those bills have never reached the floor for debate. Indeed, those bills were never even debated in the Full Foreign Affairs Committee. It isn't really debate on Angolan aid which concerns us here, but the aid itself.

It is worthy of note that those who have expressed approval of section 107 do tend to support aid to Afghanistan. Yet none of them is pressing for a section 107-style law in respect to Afghanistan. No one has made such a demand because we all know that getting aid into Afghanistan is a tricky business which requires silence all around routes and methods and local allies. Why should it be any different in Angola?

We don't need more debate on Angola, we need to assist the President in pressing forward with the policy we have now. The modern history of Angola has been a history of foreign occupation. It teaches that doing nothing to help Angolans remove foreign troops achieves nothing. We learned that over 10 long years of Angolan servitude, and now we have at last begun to try another way, a variety of argument that the Soviet bloc occupation force understands—military force. No troops, no advisors on the ground, no Vietnam. Just military aid, delivered with discretion, to a proven and legitimate and large resistance movement. The other method—absolute nonintervention—is an unmitigated failure, both for our national interests and for those of the average Angolan.

All the arguments with which the Clark amendment was first put in place have become self-evident failures too. In the other body, the gentleman from Iowa who put the Clark amendment in place promised that nationalism was far stronger than communism in Angola. "If the MPLA wins," he said, "the Soviets will be lucky if they can hang on a year or two." The prediction failed. There are more Soviets and more Cubans than ever. They arrived over many years and without any opposition from American sources.

They moved into the vacuum, and they will stay there.

In this Chamber the leading argument was the same: Nationalism will hold Communist internationalism at bay. One of my colleagues—who still opposes aid to Angola—declared on January 27, 1976, that Angola would never become a Soviet satellite. "The tides of nationalism run far stronger in Africa than the imperatives of ideology," he said. "Having just managed to extricate themselves from the clutches of the Portuguese, the Angolans are most unlikely to submit themselves to the domination of the Soviets," he said. But that argument proved illusory. Angola is now a Soviet and Cuban base, and a country under occupation which has little to no choice about its status.

Well now those in Congress who explain away the massive Cuban presence have changed the argument. Now we are told the Cubans are there because the South Africans are in Namibia. Look back at the transcript of the special order of the House on Angola on December 9, 1985. The problem, we were assured, isn't the enslavement of Angola; the problem is South African control of Namibia. Well, it's not. Even Fidel Castro no longer says the problem is Namibia. At the meeting of non-aligned nations which just ended in Zimbabwe, Castro declared that many of his troops would remain in Angola even if the South withdrew from Namibia. Similarly, this April Angola's President Dos Santos proclaimed that while the issue of Namibia was vital, the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola was "unrelated * * * irrelevant." But none of this diplomatic chatter is as important as the little-noted fact that in April new agreements were made which promise the intensification of relations between Angola and Cuba in a number of areas, including defense.

And the Soviets? What do they say? On March 14 the Soviet Ambassador to Lisbon emphasized at a news conference that the withdrawal of Cuban troops from Angola is a matter on which "only Angola and Cuba have a say." Buy why? Why is Cuba's say about Angolan independence equal to Angola's? The sorry fact is that Cuba's say is more important than Angola's. The Angolan MPLA couldn't get them to leave even if it wanted to. The fall of last year the Angolan Minister of Trade, Ismael Gaspar Martins, met with the scholars of the Heritage Foundation here in Washington. Asked if the MPLA could force the removal of all Soviet bloc personnel if it wished to do so, the Minister declined to answer. The question was put to him three times, and he would not answer.

I have little to add to that remarkable silence. I think we know what it means. The Cubans are there because the MPLA needs them as a praetorian guard to defend the regime against the dissatisfactions and arms of its people. Because the regime is one of the most economically incompetent and unpopular in the world, the Cubans should be expected to remain there for a long time. And I suggest that, while clever diplomacy, or unfailing patience, or saying "please" will not get them out, aid to Jonas Savimbi's large and disciplined army may well get them out. And is that not what everyone in the House claims to want?

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SOLOMON].

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Chairman, I would like to take a few moments here during general debate to express my deep concern, and the concern of many Members of the House, about a section of this bill which has very dangerous implications for the conduct of U.S. foreign policy.

I am referring to section 107, which says, in effect, that the United States may not provide aid to the UNITA movement in Angola unless such assistance has been publicly acknowledged by the administration, openly debated in Congress, and approved in Congress by the passage of joint resolutions.

Let me just say at the outset that a return to the Angolan issue at this particular time strikes me as being an exercise in legislative schizophrenia. Just 1 year ago, the House voted, 236 to 185, to repeal the so-called Clark amendment, which was enacted in 1975 and virtually guaranteed that the Angolan people would be doomed—condemned—into living under a Communist puppet government whose only protection from the Angolan people is the presence in that country of more than 35,000 foreign troops—Cubans.

There is no more vivid example of the consequences of the Vietnam syndrome in American foreign policy than the establishment of a Communist government in Angola. And Congress, recognizing the grievous error that was made in 1975 by enacting the Clark amendment, voted last year to repeal that ill-conceived attempt to micromanage foreign policy.

Now this legislation comes along 1 year later, and section 107 proposes essentially to reverse our action of last year in repealing the Clark amendment. And make no mistake: section 107 does precisely that—it has the practical effect of restoring the Clark amendment. That alone is reason enough to oppose this section.

But going beyond the debate concerning United States policy toward Angola, the ultimate eventual implications of section 107 will be to eliminate covert action from the foreign policy options available to the President and the executive branch. Indeed, the whole concept of covert action is likely to become an oxymoron if section 107 becomes law.

First, section 107 is unnecessary. It intrudes itself into the carefully crafted and controlled procedures that are already in place providing for congressional oversight of intelligence activities. Congress already possesses the authority to oversee covert actions and to terminate such actions by cutting off the funding. If the Intelligence Committee wants to come before this House and recommend that we not be involved in Angola, then let us vote on that particular proposition. But section 107 is designed not so much as to terminate activities in Angola as it is to strike at the whole concept of covert action itself. It is one more attempt to encumber the foreign policy apparatus of the United States with country-specific restrictions.

Second, I would suggest that section 107 does not serve the interest of foreign policy consistency. It carries with it the subliminal message to our friends and allies around the world that any covert program once initiated can also be publicly exposed at any time. How can we possibly hope to enlist the support of other nations in pursuit of vital policy objectives, when the confidentiality that must protect such undertakings can be subject at any time to public exposure?

Third, section 107 seems to me to be part and parcel of a larger approach to foreign policy that seeks to tie the hands of the President when prompt and decisive moves are called for. The President must have options at his disposal that lie between the two extremes of doing nothing or sending in U.S. forces. And this is precisely the dilemma that President Reagan and any future President will have to face, if we continue to enact restrictive legislation.

Mr. Chairman, we will have the opportunity to strike section 107 from this legislation when our colleagues BOB STUMP and CLAUDE PEPPER offer an amendment to do so. I implore my colleagues in the House to consider the implications of section 107 and to support the Stump-Pepper amendment.

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. LAGOMARSINO].

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Chairman, I want to discuss an amendment that will be offered by Mr. STUMP of Arizona regarding section 107.

Recently, many of my colleagues have stood here demanding that America take action to help bring about the political and societal changes necessary to institute true democracy, respect for human rights, and freedom in South Africa. Yet many of these same advocates of liberty in southern Africa operate with a different standard when considering Angola. While they are willing and anxious to support freedom and liberty for the South African people, they are unwilling to assist neighboring Angolans. This attitude is, ironically, very discriminatory.

While the situation in Angola does not share the specific characteristics of the one in South Africa, the general principles are the same: Freedom, liberty, democracy and respect for human rights. In 1975 when the Portuguese withdrew from Angola they left behind three major independence movements all of whom agreed to hold free elections and abide by the outcome. Instead, the Soviets airlifted billions of dollars of military hardware, scores of "advisers" and over 35,000 Cuban mercenaries to ensure a military victory by the Communist MPLA, the least popular of these movements. In response, the U.S. Congress passed the infamous "Clark amendment" which banned any support for the other prodemocratic forces. The MPLA and their Communist allies were overjoyed—they believed that they had successfully subjugated another country.

But, the people of Angola continued their opposition to this brutal, unpopular regime kept in power by the Cuban Army even without American help. In fact, since 1975, over 60,000 Angolans have joined the opposition and now control one-third of Angola. The rest of the country is contested. The objectives of the two opposition forces, UNITA and the FNLA are clear. They seek to bring freedom, democracy and respect for human rights to Angola.

Success for the freedom fighters in Angola can greatly help alleviate the crises in Namibia and South Africa. Presently, the only obstacle to a peaceful transition in Namibia is the presence of the Cubans across the border in Angola and the MPLA's support for Namibian terrorists. A free Angola would eliminate this problem. Many of those opposing change in South Africa do so because they fear the rights of the minority and South Africa's free economy and pro-Western ties would be compromised. A free Angola would prove just the opposite—that there can be a black majority government that respects the rights of the minority and respects an individual's freedom and rights. A positive change in Angola is an important catalyst to positive change in South Africa.

Last year, the House wisely voted to repeal the Clark amendment by a margin of 236 to 185. Now, in desperation, those who would reduce the President's options in conducting our foreign policy are cynically trying to take advantage of sincere and justifiable United States opposition to apartheid in South Africa. According to them, support for the brave freedom fighters in Angola who are struggling to liberate their country from a wicked regime propped up by 35,000 Cuban combat troops and thousands of Soviet and East Bloc advisers would be immoral and wrong because some of these Angolan freedom fighters receive aid from South Africa. As my colleague, the ranking minority member of the Foreign Affairs Committee, Mr. BROOMFIELD, wisely noted, "consistent with this logic, the United States should not have fought Hitler in World War II because it placed our country on the same side as Joseph Stalin and the Soviet Union." Of course, if we keep the President's foreign policy options open, as we have done by repealing the Clark amendment, there would be even less need for the Angolans to turn to South Africa, a government they, too, find immoral and in need of change.

I strongly urge my colleagues to support the Stump amendment to H.R. 4759 which would strike the provision relating to Angola. I urge my colleagues to examine how hypocritical and discriminatory it is to call for positive change in South Africa and deny freedom and liberty to those across the border in Angola. There has not been a free election in Angola since the MPLA and Cubans harshly seized control. While it remains United States policy to encourage negotiations among all factions in Angola, United States support of UNITA and the FNLA could have the effect of forcing the Angolan regime to come to terms with its popular opponents. To remove the important policy tool needed to promote this goal will not end the Angolan conflict, it will only increase the suffering of its people. If we truly believe in the principles of freedom and democracy we espouse, we should support the Stump amendment which strikes section 107 from the intelligence authorization bill and help the Angolans defeat their brutal Communist conquerors.

Mr. Chairman, reinstituting the Clark amendment will not serve the interests of freedom or justice in southern Africa. When this body repealed the Clark amendment in July of last year, we did so in the belief that freedom deserves to be supported, whether in Asia, Africa, or Latin America. The Reagan doctrine to assist those fighting for freedom against Soviet repression and persecution deserves our strongest support.

Thirty-five thousand Cubans in Angola are not there to promote the cause of freedom. They are there, and have been there for longer than I care to remember, for the sole purpose of maintaining an unpopular Marxist government in power. Those who oppose the Marxists in Angola do not have the luxury of a political solution to the totalitarian regime of the MPLA. The Angolan people seeking an alternative to their Marxist-Leninist government have taken up arms in order to give expression to their political views. It is right and just that we support them.

Restricting once again United States assistance for the freedom fighters in Angola, particularly those under Jonas Savimbi and his UNITA forces, will do nothing to promote United States interests in southern Africa and certainly will not help deal with our problems in South Africa. Trying to tie those two issues together is a bogus attempt to deflect attention away from the real objective of United States policy, to end Cuban and Soviet involvement in Africa and to allow the Angolan people the opportunity to determine their own government.

If the Congress chooses to reinstitute the Clark amendment, we will not only adversely affect our interests in southern Africa but also our vital security interests in other parts of the world, as our allies witness our unwillingness to oppose Soviet and Cuban military force in areas away from our immediate borders. It is a signal we must not send.

I urge my colleagues to support strongly the Stump amendment.

□ 1855

Mr. STUMP. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MACK].

Mr. MACK. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I too want to take my few minutes to discuss section 107 of the bill that prohibits covert aid to those fighting for freedom in Angola.

I think the real question that we have to ask ourselves is: Why would this prohibition be only in Angola? The conclusion that I come to is that it is nothing more than a tactic to delay aid to those who are fighting for freedom in Angola.

You might then ask the question: Well, fighting for freedom from whom? I would say that it is not just the repressive Government of Angola. But it is fighting those who are interested in continuing Soviet expansionism around the world. Also from those who have supported international terrorism.

There are 35,000 Cuban troops, Soviet, North Korean, and East German troops in Angola today. One result is that Castro brings in a half a billion dollars in hard United States currency so that he can continue his Soviet-style expansionism in Central America.

I would ask the Members to support the amendment to delete section 107. American aid is holding back the tide of communism in Africa. Now is not time to cave into another repressive, uncivilized regime whose goal is to squash the emerging spirit of freedom in the Third World.

I urge the Members to support the amendment striking section 107 of the bill.

At this point I include the following.

CASTRO IN ANGOLA

(A Paper Prepared for the Cuban-American National Foundation Jack Wheeler)

The Portuguese called southeastern Angola Terras do Fin do Mundo: The Land at the End of the World.[1] Today that region is controlled—and much more beyond it—by a pro-Western, anti-Marxist liberation movement called UNITA: Uniao Nacional para a Independencia Total de Angola, the National Union for the Total Independence of Angola. UNITA has over 60,000 well-armed guerrillas, and is led by a man many consider to be the single most dynamic and charismatic leader in all of Africa: Dr. Jonas Savimbi.

For five weeks in October-November of 1983, I traveled over 2500 kilometers through UNITA-held territory in Angola with Savimbi. At the village of Lunguebungo near the Benguela railway (which UNITA has completely severed), Savimbi, together with three of his lieutenants, and I had dinner in a communal thatch hut. The villagers had a huge bonfire going nearby, with some spirited drum-pounding, dancing, and singing of UNITA songs getting underway. Once the antelope stew was finished, Savimbi, seated in an oversized reed chair, his hands resting on his ebony swagger stick, leaned over to tell me the story of how he met Che Guevara, Castro's legendary revolutionary comrade.

"I first met Che in 1964 in Dar Es Salaam [capital of Tanzania]. Julius Nyerere [President of Tanzania] had called a meeting of all the African liberation movements—there were people from Mozambique, Angola, Southern Rhodesia [now Zimbabwe], Eritrea, South Africa, Portuguese Guinea [now Guinea-Bissau], and Brazzaville-Congo. The purpose was to discuss his friend Che's idea of forming a united front for the purpose of overthrowing Kasavubu, Tshombe, and Mobutu in Zaire.[2]

"The Soviets had never forgiven Mobutu for killing Lumumba," Savimbi confided to me. "They encouraged Che to help Lumumba's Marxist disciples, who had been given sanctuary by their new friends in Brazzaville, to get rid of Mobutu.[3] Che thought he could get all the other liberation movements in Africa to join in—and everyone at the meeting liked the idea but me. I objected, saying the idea was naive, for if we lost in Zaire, it would set back our own struggle possibly for years to come. Che admitted that was a good point. He asked me out to dinner that evening, and invited me to come with him to Algeria. I liked Ernesto [Che's real first name]—but he was, I must admit, not very bright. Mao was right in saying that a guerrilla force must build its political base first, and carefully secure the support and confidence of local people, before starting militarily. But Che was impatient, and thought by immediately beginning military actions the peasantry would rally to him spontaneously. So he was caught and killed in Bolivia three years later.

Savimbi's story, told by the light of that bonfire in the Angolan bush, personally illuminated for me Castro's early involvement in Africa.

The pampered son of a rich landowner who hated America,[4] Fidel Castro was described in his student days by a fellow law-student as "a power-hungry person, completely unprincipled, who would throw in his lot with any group he felt could help his political career."[5] In 1948 at age 21, he was reported to have helped organize riots at the Pan American conference in Bogota, in which 3,000 were killed.[6]

Castro's seizure of power from Fulgencio Batista on January 1, 1959, was assisted by the support of the New York Times, the CIA, and the State Dept.[7] But the ardor cooled as Castro proceeded quickly to construct a totalitarian regime, announcing: "Revolutionary justice is based not upon legal precepts but on moral conviction."[8] By mid-1959, Castro was receiving Soviet arms shipments, accompanied by Soviet advisers, and KGB operatives who set up his internal security/informer apparatus. The purge trials began in December.[9]

All Marxists claim the right to impose their ideology on others by force. For the Marxist, the world consists of contradictory forces opposing and struggling against each other, overcoming or being overcome. Militant aggression against non-Marxist or bourgeois societies is hard-wired into Marxism-Leninism. As an anti-American caudillo who embodied the will to dominate by force, Castro embraced missionary Marxism with a vengeance. This secular missionary zealotism is called, in the Marxist-Leninist lexicon, "internationalism." A recent observation notes that "internationalism—the assistance of fellow revolutionaries—is a key element of the faith to Marxist-Leninists; and telling them not to practice it is like telling a priest not to pray."[10]

As early as 1957, Castro had proclaimed he would attempt to overthrow "other Caribbean dictators."[11] But he saw Africa, containing dozens of countries just beginning the decolonizing process, as the most fertile place of all. Within a few months of his takeover, Castro dispatched Che to Cairo to meet with the terrorist FLN, the National Liberation Front of Algeria.[12] By 1960, Cuban military aid and medical personnel were being sent to the FLN guerrillas in Algeria; once the FLN assumed power, a training camp for guerrillas in other African liberation movements was set up in Algeria, staffed by Cuban instructors. During the Algeria-Morocco border conflict in 1963, at least 50 Cuban military technicians, 3-400 combat and tank troops, 40 Soviet T-34 tanks, plus field artillery, mortars, and other arms, were sent by Castro to Algeria. The Cuban combat forces were evidently deployed at the front and took casualties.[13]

At the first Conference of Non-Aligned States in Belgrade in September of 1961, Che met Kwame Nkrumah, the leader of Ghana,[14] who had his followers refer to him as Osagyefo (The Redeemer), and his soldiers chant endlessly: "Nkrumah can do no wrong!" Before the year was out, a guerrilla training camp, similar to but smaller than the other in Algeria, with Cuban instructors, was established in northern Ghana near the Upper Volta border.[15]

A constant stream of African delegations and nationalist leaders began arriving in Havana in the early, '60s, particularly after Kennedy gave Nikita Khrushchev a security guarantee of no U.S. invasion of Cuba after the October 1962 missile crisis.[16] Cultural, political, and sometimes military ties were forged with many. According to Juan Benemires, a senior Cuban government official who defected to the United States in 1980, "Fidel had a plan for power and influence in Africa from the beginning. His main objective was to harm the United States as much as possible and saw Africa as an easy target. In this, Fidel always had the support of [Mikhail A.] Suslov [ultra-Leninist chief theoretician of the Kremlin and full Politburo member until his death in 1982]."[16A]

1963 saw Che back in Algeria[17], while from December 1964 to March 1965, he made a tour of several African countries, including Algeria, Ghana, Guinea, Congo-Brazzaville, and Tanzania where he met Savimbi. In the spring of 1965, Che led a small band of Cuban guerrilla fighters across Lake Tanganyika from Tanzania into Zaire. By July, he had linked up with another 200 or so Cubans who had come from Brazzaville with a shipment of Soviet arms from Havana. Together, they formed an "expeditionary task force" to fight with the CNL Marxist-Lumumbist rebels, whom Mobutu proceeded to soundly thrash. Che and his men retreated to Brazzaville.[18]

Che remained in Brazzaville until March 1966,[19] where the headquarters of Castro's subversive activities in Africa had been moved from Algiers after a coup overthrew Ben Bella the previous June.[20] With a contingent of perhaps 1,000 men, Cuba military personnel formed the presidential bodyguard for Congolese President Massamba-Debat, and organized and trained his private militia, the Civil Defense Corps. They also set up a guerrilla training school—and among their students were guerrillas from the MPLA: the Popular Movement for the Liberation of Angola.[21]

While attending a student conference at Kampala, Uganda in 1961, Jonas Savimbi—then a premedical student at the University of Lausanne in Switzerland—met Jomo Kenyatta, former leader of the Mau Maus in Kenya and soon to become his country's first president.[22] Kenyatta persuaded young Jonas to forgo medicine and enter the struggle to free Angola from colonial rule. But Kenyatta sternly advised him against joining the MPLA. "They are communists," Kenyatta warned him, "and have been supported by the Soviets from the beginning."[23]

The anticommunism of Portugal's Antonio Salazar (in power since 1932) had long aroused Moscow's hostility. As the nationalist impulses began to surge through African colonies after World War II, the Kremlin saw particular opportunities for subversion in those of Portugal: Guinea-Bissau, Sao Tome & Principe, Mozambique, and, especially, Angola.

Local agents of the Soviet-aligned Portuguese Communist Party (PCP) had established a secret branch of their organization in Luanda as early as 1948.[24] By 1952, a Soviet agent named Feld Matvin was reported to be organizing a liberation movement in Angola with the help of Portuguese Marxist teachers and civil servants, recruiting mostly mestizo (mixed black-white Portuguese) Angolan students in Luanda and studying in Portugal.[25] Sympathy for Soviet Marxist ideology was almost exclusively limited to Angola's tiny urban elite of educated African and mestizo assimilados. In October, 1955, members of this elite, with assistance from the PCP, founded the Angolan Communist Party (PCA), the leaders of which founded, in December, 1956, the MPLA. As one MPLA representative described it, the leaders of the PCA "were to be found at the head of the MPLA, whether in its internal or external organization."[26] A Soviet text, Africa Today, published in Footnotes appear at end of article.

Moscow in 1962, recounts that the MPLA was established in 1956 "on the initiative of the Communist Party and the allied Party of Joint Struggle of the Africans in Angola." [27]

One of the founders of the MPLA was Mario de Andrade, a mestizo educated at the University of Lisbon and the Sorbonne in Paris, and the head of the Angolan Communist Party in 1956. Andrade contributed a number of articles for Soviet publications such as Pravda and Trud, and attended, with Viriato da Cruz, the MPLA's first secretary-general, the Afro-Asian Writer's Conference in Tashkent, Soviet Uzbekistan, in October 1958.[28]

Andrade, da Cruz, and Lucio Lara, the son of a wealthy sugar plantation owner who was the movement's most doctrinaire adherent of Soviet Marxism-Leninism, began developing close relationships with French, Chinese, and Soviet communists in Europe.[29] Radio Lisbon reported in 1962 that over the past few years Andrade had made numerous trips to Moscow, Peking, and Prague, while the MPLA had been receiving "instructors, arms, and technicians of sabotage, propaganda, and subversive war" from the Soviet Union.[30] Savimbi personally witnessed 170 MPLA recruits transit through Dar Es Salaam enroute for training in the Soviet Union during the summer of 1965.[31]

As John Marcum notes, from the '50's on, "except for a pause in 1963-64 when the Organization of African Unity recognized the rival Frente Nacional de Libertacao de Angola (FNLA) and its government in exile,[32] the Soviets funneled a continuous stream of aid to the MPLA: arms; finance; university, technical, and military training; a communications nexus via Soviet embassies." [33] British and American intelligence sources estimate Soviet assistance to the MPLA from its inception to the April 1974 Communist coup in Portugal at approximately $63 million, the main conduit being the Portuguese Communist Party arranged by the PCP secretary general Alvaro Cunhal.[34]

It was evidently in Algeria that the first links between the MPLA and Castro were forged. In November 1962, Andrade announced to the press in Algiers the opening of an MPLA office there,[35] and one month later the New York Times reported that the MPLA had one thousand men at guerrilla training camps in Algeria,[36] which, as we saw earlier, were staffed by Cuban instructors.

Che Guevara met MPLA leader Agostinho Neto in Brazzaville in late 1964.[37] [Neto had moved the MPLA headquarters across the river from Leopoldville to Brazzaville, and it is perhaps more than merely ironic that shortly thereafter, in August 1963, a coup overthrew the Congo's pro-Western president and installed a radical Marxist in his place who immediately asked for support from Cuba and other Communist countries. See n. 3 below.] In May 1965, Neto met Cuban Army Major Florio Bravo in Brazzaville to arrange for military assistance to the MPLA.[38] Cuban ships began delivering arms for the MPLA in Congo-Brazzaville by mid-1965.[39] By 1966, Cuban-trained MPLA guerrilla units had assumed Cuban honorific names, such as the "Cienfuegos Column," after the Cuban revolutionary Camilo Cienfuegos.[40]

In January 1966, Fidel Castro hosted the first (and last) meeting of the Afro-Asian-Latin American People's Solidarity Organization in Havana, known as the Tricontinental Conference. Of the 79 delegations attending, 27 were from Africa, with only the MPLA permitted from Angola. Agostinho Neto led the MPLA delegation. In his address to the conference, Castro pledged "to help any revolutionary movement fighting imperialism and colonialism anywhere in the world" [41] El Jefe Maximo (as Fidel likes to be called) promised military and technical training for MPLA militants in Cuba to Neto. The first group of 90 MPLA recruits arrived in Havana in October 1966 for 7 months of military training.[42]

Savimbi formed UNITA at a conference at the village of Muangai in Angola's Moxico province during March of 1966, as an alternative to Neto's MPLA and Holden Roberto's FNLA. He had been the FNLA's secretary general and foreign minister, but split from Roberto in 1964.[43] The MPLA was "pro-Communist," guided by Moscow, and dominated by an urban elite of intellectuals in Luanda; while the FNLA was "supported by western forces," and dominated by emigres who had spent most of their lives out of Angola.[44] Further, the MPLA drew its support from the Mbundu people of Luanda and west-central Angola, while the FNLA drew its support from the Bakongo in the far north-west. There was no liberation movement, according to the founding UNITA rationale, that was purely nationalist and non-ideological; free of foreign influence; was directed towards the peasantry and not an intellectual/emigre elite; and represented all the people of Angola, including the Ovimbundu, Ganguela, and Chokwe peoples who comprised over 60% of the population.[45] Only UNITA, said Savimbi, had the patience and discipline to politically educate and mobilize the peasant villagers (and share their hard life in so doing) in order to generate massive civil disobedience to Portuguese authority—rather than have its ego massaged and conduct a public relations campaign in foreign capitals, as did the leaders of the MPLA and the FNLA.

As Savimbi explained to me:

"Our first task as a liberation movement was to get to know and gain the respect of the peasants, the local villagers, for you need the protection of the people above all. We spent months talking to people and their tribal chiefs, getting to understand them, their situation and difficulties. Holden [Roberto] had never shown any interest in this. The MPLA, on the other hand, could not understand the village mentality, and would kill any chief that did not cooperate with them—although they were very good at gaining the allegiance of workers and especially civil servants in the cities.

"I read Marx while studying at Lausanne. It cannot work, especially for Africa. Marx teaches people to hate others. We need cooperation, not class-hatred, which is not very different from race-hatred. Marx's materialism undermines the foundation of an African's basic world view, a belief in an ancestral force which transcends man, a higher Being whatever its name may be. We teach people to work for themselves, to be productive for themselves as individuals because that is how to make their village and their country prosper. Marx teaches that the individual is unimportant. We think the countryside must be developed before the cities and that Angola's first priority is to be self-sufficient in food. The MPLA wants an urban proletariat and heavy industries, which is wholly inappropriate for Africa. For the MPLA, the State must be the boss, and the people obedient servants. For us, the State must be a referee between free people."

From 1966 to 1974, except for an exile in Egypt from mid-'67 to mid-'68, Savimbi stayed inside organizing and proselytizing the villagers of eastern and southern Angola. While the MPLA claimed its headquarters were in Angola, Neto and other MPLA leaders only stepped briefly and infrequently inside, while operating out of Lusaka, Dar Es Salaam, and Brazzaville. Roberto and the FNLA leadership stayed safely in Kinshasa; they never went across the border at all.[46]

Neto began making frequent trips to the Soviet Union and other Soviet-bloc countries, often expressing gratitude in press interviews to "our most loyal friends, the people and government of the USSR." [47] The MPLA leaders were among the very few in the Third World—along with Fidel Castro—that staunchly defended the Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia in 1968. In 1970, the Director of the African Institute of the USSR Academy of Sciences, V. Solodovnikov, publicly acknowledged that the Soviet Union was providing the MPLA with "military equipment, various armaments, ammunitions, means of transportation and communications equipment," and that MPLA "military personnel and political cadres" were being trained in the USSR.[48]

But by 1972, the MPLA was riven with internal dissention and rival factions. The Portuguese Army had forced its fighters into retreat across the Zambia border (as it had forced the FNLA to retreat to Zaire, and Savimbi deep into the Angolan bush). Soviet aid began to slow and by early 1974, had almost come to a halt.[49] Then came the coup of the Armed Forces Movement (AFM) in Lisbon on April 25, 1974, which toppled Salazar's successor (Salazar had died in 1970), Marcello Caetano. One of the leaders of the coup was Rear Admiral (in the Portuguese Navy) Rosa Coutinho, a member of the Portuguese Communist Party and a long-time friend of the MPLA. He was appointed head of a military council to govern Angola, which, it was announced, would be given independence the following year.[50]

Neto's patron, Alvaro Cunhal, still secretary-general of the PCP, personally asked the Kremlin to resume arms shipments to Neto's faction of the MPLA.[51] Six million dollars' worth of Soviet military supplies was shipped to the MPLA via Dar Es Salaam in August, 1974, and subsequent shipments starting in October via Brazzaville.[52] By December, 250 more MPLA guerrillas had arrived in the Soviet Union for military training. That same month, the Soviet "Committee on Afro-Asian Solidarity" in Moscow declared 1975 "The year of practical aid to the peoples of the former Portuguese colonies." [53] The MPLA was allowed to open an office in Luanda, and suddenly possessed a surfeit of cash with which to propagandize and organize. By January, 1975, Neto had enough arms to equip up to 7000 men (from 1500 the previous August), and was able to distribute indiscriminately several thousand Soviet AK-47 Kalashnikov assault rifles to MPLA supporters—including boys from 12 to 15 [54]—in Luanda.[55]

Pressured by the OAU and Jomo Kenyatta, Neto, Roberto, and Savimbi met in Mobassa, Kenya on January 3-5 signing a trilateral accord of peaceful cooperation. They then flew to Alvor, Portugal and signed "The Alvor Agreement" on January 15 between all three and the Portuguese government. The MPLA, FNLA, and UNITA were designated "the sole legitimate representatives of the people of Angola," specifying that a coalition government be set up between them prior to the date of independence, November 11, 1975, and that legislative elections be held during the interim eleven months of transition government.[56]

With Washington preoccupied by the impending fall of Saigon to the North Vietnamese, Phnom Penh to the Khmer Rouge, and Vientiane to the Pathet Lao,[57] Soviet arms deliveries increased in March: by air to Brazzaville, by truck and rail to Pointe Noir on the coast, then by small boat down the Angolan coast. In April, one hundred tons of arms were flown by chartered aircraft to MPLA bases in southwestern Angola. Yugoslav, Greek, and Soviet ships arrived at Pointe Noire, and then Luanda harbor itself, with shiploads of heavy weapons, including large mortars and armor.[58] It should be clearly noted that, as one observer states. "The massive Soviet military supplies to the MPLA reached Angola in March and April [1975], several months before US shipments of military supplies began to reach the FNLA through Zaire." [59]

But now the MPLA had a problem. The Kremlin could supply it with an enormous amount of arms—but illiterate, untrained bush guerrillas couldn't use them, especially the armor and artillery. Neto sent MPLA defense minister Iko Carreira to Moscow to request Soviet combat troops to Angola. The Kremlin turned him down but gave him an alternate solution: We can't send in white-skinned Russian soliders to Africa—but we can send in black-skinned Cubans.[60]

MPLA leader Paulo Jorge was dispatched to Havana in early April. By May 7, 1975, the first Cuban military advisers arrived in Angola.[61]

Cubans had been training MPLA guerrillas at Dolisie on the Congo-Cabinda border for years now, and at the MPLA staging bases in Zambia since 1970.[62] Castro had been busy elsewhere in Africa and the Middle East. In 1966, Cuban advisers organized a popular militia for Sekou Toure in Guinea, staffed with Cuban officers. By October, 1966, Toure had his own Cuban presidential bodyguard. Castro himself dedicated the new militia training center in Conakry in May, 1972.[63]

By early 1967, Cuban advisers were reported among PAIGC guerrillas fighting inside Portuguesse Guinea, one of whom was captured in November.[64] By 1974, some 200 Cubans were with the guerrillas, operating their logistics and communications, and taking casualties.[65]

Cuban advisers trained a 500-man militia known as the Internal Security Unit Two (ISU-2) for President Siaka Stevens of Sierra Leone in 1972, with over 100 advisers remaining in the country through the mid-'70's.[66]

By December 1973, 200 Cuban advisers were in Equatorial Guinea, 400 by November 1974, 800 by 1977, training and staffing the militia and internal security apparatus of Francisco Macia Nyguema, a dictator more blood-stained than even Idi Amin.[67]

In April 1973, 300 Cuban advisers arrived in Aden in South Yemen (People's Democratic Republic of Yemen, PDRY) to provide guerrilla training for the PDRY army and the rebels in the Dhofar of neighboring Oman being sponsored by the PRDY. By June, they were training Yemeni pilots to fly Soviet MiGs, and setting up an internal security system for the government based on Cuba's Committees for the Defense of the Revolution.[68] By mid-1974 there were 6 to 700 Cubans in the PDRY; the number sharply decreased after South Yemen abandoned its support of the Dhofar rebellion in early 1976.[69]

Castro sent between 500 and 750 combat tank forces to Damascus, Syria, and then to the Golan Heights during the October (1973) War with Israel (he had broken relation with Israel the previous month), where they took part in the fighting. Cuban Air Force pilots worked with the Syrian Air Force. The contingent was withdrawn in February, 1975.[70]

The stage was set, then, for direct Cuban military intervention in Angola. By the end of May, 1975, 230 Cuban combat advisers had set up four military training camps in MPLA-held Angolan territory: at Henrique de Carvalho, Salazar, Benguela, and Cabinda,[71] and had operated tanks in combat with the MPLA against the FNLA at Caxito. By June, Cubans were manning missiles and armored cars for the MPLA in Cabinda.[72]

Under the Alvor Accord, the MPLA, FNLA, and UNITA all opened offices in Luanda. When Savimbi arrived in the capital in April, 1985, and began speaking to large crowds (to whom he was speaking for the first time), he had, according to Portuguese journalists on the scene, a "spectacular impact" upon the people of Luanda.[73] Savimbi's popularity began accelerating so quickly, in fact, that the MPLA soon realized it would not fare well against Savimbi and UNITA in a fair election scheduled for November 11. That left military force as the only means remaining for the MPLA to gain power.

With the Cubans assisting and instructing MPLA troops in the use of their vast array of Soviet weaponry, the MPLA was able to force both its rivals out of Luanda, taking control of the capital city on July 9. Full-scale civil war broke out throughout the country. Zaire and Zambia requested "assistance from the United States in preventing the USSR and Cuba from imposing a solution in Angola, becoming a dominant influence in south-central Africa, and threatening the stability of the area." [74] Peking authorized in mid-July the release of large quantities of Chinese military equipment held by the Zairois army [75], while on July 18 the US Congress voted $14 million in covert military aid, both primarily to FMLA with some going to UNITA as well.[76] The first US arms shipments reached the FMLA via Zaire in August.[77]

In Portugal, in Revolutionary Council of the Armed Forces Movement (MFA) controlled the government, with Vasco Goncalves, Commander of the MFA Security Forces, as Prime Minister and the Red Admiral, Rosa Coutinho, as Portuguese High Commissioner for Angola. Coutinho and many other radical MPLA sympathizers among the MFA placed in key positions in Angola were so helpful to the MPLA that in early August, Augustinho Neto had publicly lauded the MFA as the "fourth liberation front" in Angola and for giving "almost total support" to the MPLA.[78] But in late August, the Goncalves government fell to moderates less sympathetic to the MPLA. UNITA/FNLA launched a counteroffensive.

Castro reacted quickly. He began selecting soldiers from a unit under his personal control known as "The Prime Minister's Reserve Troops" in mid-August, and by early September three Cuban troopships were on their way to Angola. Disembarking at Pointe Noire (Congo) and Porto Amboin south of Luanda, at the end of the month, the Cuban soldiers joined MPLA units in Cabinda, Benguela, and those advancing from Lobito toward Nova Lisboa. On October 6, the latter fought a UNITA force with South African advisers at Norton de Matos, and were beaten.[79]

While the troopships were still enroute in mid-September, Castro and his Soviet advisers in Havana made an agreement with Congo President Ngouabi to use Brazzaville as a staging base for Cuban military personnel and Soviet arms shipments. Moscow and Havana's decision to go for broke in Angola had now been made.[80] By late September, Soviet and East German ships had left Cuba with more Cuban combat forces; by October 23, there were more than 1,500 Cuban troops and combat advisers fighting with the MPLA in Angola.[81]

On October 23, a mechanized force of some 2,000 men comprised of UNITA and FNLA guerrillas, white (Portuguese) Angolans, and regular South African Defense Forces crossed from Namibia (controlled by South Africa) into Angola and began to rapidly move north. Within days, four or five more Cuban troopships had left Cuba for Luanda, and by November 7, a troop airlift had begun from Holguin in eastern Cuba to Luanda—initially with Cuban Bristol Britannias refueling in Barbados and Bissau, and later with Soviet-supplied Aeroflot IL-62's, refueling in either Bissau or, more likely, Conakry.[82]

By November 5, the Cubans had fallen back from Benguela and Lobito, while the South African-assisted column had moved north of Nova Lisboa (Huambo)—over 500 miles in less than two weeks—and was on the outskirts of Nova Redondo (Ngunza). By November 11, MPLA-controlled territory had been reduced to a thin slice of the country, from the area around Luanda extending eastwards, sandwiched between FNLA-Bakongo territory of the north and the southern two-thirds of the country, now controlled by UNITA.

But November 11 had been declared at Alvor to be Angolan Independence Day, and the Portuguese government had determined that come what may, it would turn legitimate governmental authority over to whomever controlled the capital of Luanda on that day. The MPLA's declaration of legitimacy in Luanda received immediate diplomatic recognition from seven Moscow-aligned Africa states, Tanzania, Congo-Brazzaville, Mali, Guinea, Mozambique, Ethiopia, and Algeria; Cuba and the USSR: North Vietnam; the Soviet Bloc countries of Eastern Europe; and Brazil. The FNLA/UNITA coalition proclaimed a rival government in Nova Lisboa, but no one, not the US, nor any West European country, nor China, nor any African state extended formal recognition. A massive Soviet/Cuban invasion was put into full operation.

The South African intervention in late October was subsequently used by Moscow and Havana as a post facto rationalization for their invasion of Angola. The semi-official Cuban version of events was written by a Colombian author close to Castro, Gabriel Garcia Marquez, who dubbed the main invasion "Operation Carlota," and claimed it was not initiated until early November.[83] But reports from captured Cuban prisoners confirm that the plans to invade were decided upon well before October 23.[84]

Within less than a week after the MPLA declared "independence," at least 400 Soviet military advisers and weapons specialists had arrived in Luanda.[85] The Soviets had been supplying weapons and ammunition to SWAPO (Southwest Africa People's Organization) since 1980.[86] On November 23, the Washington Post reported that the Soviet ship Valery Mezhlauk offloaded 785 tons of arms at the Tanzanian port of Dar Es Salaam that were originally meant for SWAPO, and were now being diverted to the MPLA.

Cuban/MPLA and South African/UNITA forces fought several engagements, the most sustained being "The Battle of Bridge 14" from December 9 to 14 south of Luanda in which "by all accounts the Cubans were severely mauled." [87] UNITA had by then captured Luso, the terminus of the Benguela railway at the Zaire border.[88] These defeats resulted in Soviet/Cuban airlifts of 40 Cuban combat forces per week in December, which were more than doubled to around 1000 a week in January.[89] By December, most all of the effective fighting for the MPLA was being done by Cuban combat troops.[90]

Soviet aircraft flew in via Algeria and Brazzaville, and Soviet, Cuban, Bulgarian, and Yugoslav ships brought in by sea, a vast array of armaments, including Katusha rocket launchers ("Stalin Organs), BRDM-2 armored vehicles, T-34 and T-54 tanks, PT-36 amphibious tanks, SAM-7 antiaircraft missiles, helicopter gunships, and Mig-21J fighter-bombers. East Germans and North Vietnamese were flown to Luanda for weapons training, and Algerian and Cuban pilots to man the gunships and Migs. In the last months of 1975, the Soviet Union spent close to $300 million on military aid to the MPLA, $400 million by February, 1976.[91] Historians have begun to note that the Soviet Union became a military superpower at the end of 1975. With the invasion of Angola, it had "demonstrated a capacity to employ a global network of influence to support a major military intervention in an obscure area of the globe far from its periphery—a historical first." [92]

On December 19, the world saw America flinch and back down: The Senate passed an amendment sponsored by Sen. Dick Clark (D–Iowa) prohibiting any further covert aid to UNITA and the FNLA. When the House did the same on January 27, 1976, South Africa was convinced it had been betrayed by the United States. It ordered its units to withdraw, and negotiated a deal with the MPLA to guarantee the safety of the Cunene hyrdoelectric projects. The South Africans now had some 2000 men at the front, while the Cubans had between 15,000 to 18,000 combat troops.[93]

All during this, the Kremlin conducted a massive diplomatic and propaganda campaign on behalf of the MPLA, directed especially towards black African states for whom any association with South African (as UNITA and FNLA had made) was the kiss of death. The racist duplicity and cynical hypocrisy of Moscow's motives and actions—white Russians using black Cubans to defeat black Africans using white Africans—was nonetheless not lost on many. The OAU (Organization of African Unity) remained deadlocked on whether to recognize the MPLA as the sole legitimate authority in Angola. But on February 11, the then-president of the OAU decided to cast his tie-breaking vote with the MPLA. It is tragicomic irony that this vote which sealed the fate of Angola was cast by Idi Dada Amin, the Dictator of Uganda.[94]

Abandoned by the Chinese, the US, South Africa, and the OAU, and faced with a Cuban onslaught of overwhelming firepower including MiG jet fighters, heavy armor and artillery, the shattered remnants of UNITA and FNLA fled into the bush. The Soviet propaganda apparatus proclaimed the glorious "liberation" of Angola. But what the world witnessed was instead, as two scholars put it, "not a 'liberation,' but a military conquest, in which Soviet-supported regular Cuban troops imposed the rule of a minority ethnic group [the Luanda Kimbundu/Mestizo urban elite] on the majority of the Angolan populace." [95] Angola, far from obtaining independence from the colonial rule for which so many Angolans had fought so long, had merely switched from being a colony of Portugal to a colony of the Soviet Union.

By May, 1976, Cuban military advisers were organizing and training an Angolan state security corps and civilian militia for the MPLA.[96] 3000 Cuban "civilian technicians" had arrived in Angola by July.[97] And by the end of the year, Castro had to commit 4000 more combat troops: for while Roberto had retreated back to Zaire, leaving a few remaining bands of FNLA guerrillas in northern Angola to fend for themselves, Savimbi had regrouped in Terras do Fin do Mundo and had begun fighting all over again.[98] Castro, who had come to power as a guerrilla opposing a dictatorship, now had to use his conventional military forces to protect a foreign dictatorship against guerrillas fighting in their own territory. Castro's shoe was on his other foot.

Before 1976 came to a close, Castro's forces had taken over 1000 casualties, mostly at the hands of UNITA, as well as FNLA, and FLEC (Liberation Front for the Enclave of Cabinda) in Cabinda.[99] A cemetery for Cuban military graves was established at Quifangondo, near Luanda.[100] Castro visited this cemetery on his trip to Angola and six other African nations (Algeria, Libya, Ethiopia, Somalia, Tanzania, and Mozambique, plus South Yemen, and finally the Soviet Union) in March, 1977. On March 29, the MPLA chartered a Boeing 737 to fly Joshua Nkomo, leader of the ZAPU (Zimbabwe African People's Union) guerrillas in (then) Rhodesia, Sam Nujoma of SWAPO, and Oliver Tambo of the ANC (African National Congress terrorists in South Africa) to meet Fidel in Luanda.[101]

After Nkomo visited Havana in July, and again in August, 1977, Cuban military advisers began training ZAPU guerrillas in special camps in Angola.[102] SWAPO opened an office in Havana on November 1, 1977, and, as with ZAPU and Tambo's ANC, had training camps operated and staffed by Cuban military instructors inside Angola.[103]

That May, MPLA Interior Minister Nito Alves led a coup attempt against Agostinho Neto, which most observers consider would have succeeded had it not been for Cuban military and security forces.[104] (Neto remained in power until he mysteriously died in a Moscow hospital in 1979, succeeded by Jose Eduardo dos Santos, still President of Angola and leader of the MPLA at this writing.)

Castro had to come to the rescue of another Marxist African leader in 1977, Mengistu Haile Mariam of Ethiopia. Days after Mariam's Soviet-engineered seizure of power,[105] Cuban Western Army commander, General Arnaldo Ochoa arrived (on February 20) in Addis Ababa. When war broke out between Ethiopia and Somalia in the Ogaden Desert in mid-year, the Cuban troops began to arrive, airlifted by Soviet planes. Fidel's brother and Cuban Vice-Minister, Raul Castro, came to coordinate the military assistance in Addis. Four Soviet generals directed the Cuban Expeditionary Forces and Ethiopian Army against the Somalis. By March, 1978, 17,000 regular Cuban soldiers and pilots were fighting in Ethiopia, directly from Cuba and redeployed from Angola.[106]

By 1980, stories began to appear in the press such as Cuba's Angola Failure: An Exported Revolution Founders on Famine and Inefficiency, describing Luanda as a city that had "collapsed," the Angolan people as "impoverished" and worse off than before independence from Portugal, and every economic sector—save one—in a "steep decline." [107]

The one exception was oil.

In the late 1960's, Gulf Oil discovered substantial petroleum reserves in the coastal waters of Angola's Cabinda Enclave. Gulf's arrangement to extract them made with the Portuguese government was continued by the MPLA upon its seizure of power. In exchange Gulf became a loyal ally of the MPLA, stridently and powerfully lobbying Congress not to repeal the Clark Amendment and the Administration to extend diplomatic recognition to the MPLA regime.[108]

Today, the 193 offshore wells of the Cabinda Gulf Oil Company pump 90 percent of Angola's oil, making Angola the second-largest oil producer in sub-Saharan Africa after Nigeria, at 220,000 barrels a day. By 1987, production is expected to double to 367,000 barrels a day. Oil income, around $2 billion in 1985 accounts for over 90 percent of Angola's foreign exchange earnings. "Much of this hard currency," the New York Times reported in a story filed from Cabinda, "goes to pay for the estimated 35,000 Cuban troops who provide the backbone of Angola's defense." [109] An earlier article in the New York Times estimated that the MPLA must pay Castro for his troops (plus some 5,000 Cuban civilians), the Soviets for their 3,000 to 5,000 military advisers, and the 2,000 to 3,000 East German and Bulgarian advisers, upwards of $1.5 billion a year.[110]

This means that an American oil company is paying Fidel Castro a billion dollars or more a year for tens of thousands of Cuban mercenaries to protect its business interests and oil installations from a pro-Western, pro-free market democratic insurgency and keep in power a Soviet-backed Marxist-Leninist totalitarian dictatorship.[111]

The contempt that Lenin had towards capitalists, in his famous assertion that when it came time to hang them they would fight amongst each other to get the order for the rope, is today perhaps no where more justified than towards Gulf Oil, which has now been purchased by Chevron.

Rodolfo Estevez Lantegua was born in 1950 in Camaguey, Cuba. His father was an itinerant merchant before "the Revolution", afterwards a factory worker in Oriente province. Rodolfo received very little schooling, served in the Cuban Army from 1967 to 1970, then became a truck driver. In 1982, it was suggested to him that he "volunteer to fulfill his internationalist duty" in Angola.

When I met Rodolfo, he had been a prisoner of UNITA's for eight months. I interviewed him on October 12, 1983. Here is what he told me.

"Before leaving Cuba, we were not told anything about UNITA—just that there were a few small groups of counter-revolutionary bandits armed by South Africa. My unit, which was transport, not combat was based in a garrison 22 kilometers from Huambo. We had almost no contact with any Angolans, FAPLA or civilians, just staying in our garrison. My job was to drive a water-truck bringing water from Huambo to our camp.

"One day the truck broke down, and suddenly I was surrounded by men with rifles. That night, I attempted to escape and the UNITA men shot me. I was wounded so severely [in the head] that I was sure they would leave me to die or give me a coup de grace. Instead, their medical officer treated my wounds very carefully. They took very good care of me, bringing me here [a UNITA village a day's drive from Jamba near the Zambia border] to heal. My wounds were very bad, and I will always be grateful to UNITA for saving my life. [When I asked Rodolfo to repeat this last statement for a tape recorder, he refused, fearing reprisals against his wife, Fidelina, should the tape be heard on VOA radio in Cuba. He had 18 stitches in his head, and a finger on his right hand had been sewed back on.]

"I understand now that UNITA is fighting for the freedom of the Angolan people, and I respect that as an ideal. But I will not join UNITA. I want to return to my country and my people. The food here is normal and regular, and I have never been mistreated in any way. Yet for eight months, there is no one to talk to in Spanish, no books, music, news, no letters from home. I miss my family. I miss my children. I miss my Fidelina. . ."

Rodolfo was crying now and I tried to console him. I said I would speak to Savimbi myself about his release. When I did later, Savimbi explained: "The Cubans are holding many of our people prisoners. We have offered many times to negotiate a prisoner exchange, but the Cubans refuse to talk with us. What can we do if they won't talk to us at all?"

On April 13, 1986, I saw Rodolfo again, in Jamba. He recognized me immediately. Despite many messages from UNITA and letters from Rodolfo given to the Red Cross for his wife, Fidelina, there has been no reply of any kind. According to Juan Benemelis, no Cuban soldier in Angola is allowed to communicate with his family. No Cuban wife knows, for example, if her husband has been killed in Angola, because he is buried in Quifangondo cemetery near Luanda and just disappears. Four years after Rodolfo went to Angola, Fiedlina has heard nothing from him and has no idea whether he is alive or dead.

There must be a way, I thought, to overcome the insouciant inhumanity of Castro's regime, its utter unconcern for the individual human beings it uses and chews up. I asked Rodolfo to write a letter to Fidelina. I promised him that it would be read, word-for-word, on Radio Marti. It was, on ————, 1986. In the meantime, Roldofo sits alone in that UNITA village lost in the Angola bush.

Paulo Saheque was born in 1952 in Huambo. Forcibly drafted into FAPLA (the MPLA Army) in 1976, he was a battle-hardened 2nd Lieutenant when he was captured by UNITA soldiers on August 23, 1983.

"(MPLA President) Dos Santos tells us," Paulo confided to me, "that 'the Cubans must stay with us; there must be a Cuban next to every FAPLA soldier to insure victory over the UNITA bandits.' But relations between the FAPLA soldiers and the Cubans are deteriorating—although they are better between the FAPLA and Cuban officers. The FAPLA soldiers get very poor medical treatment, while the Cubans are helicoptered out if they get sick or are wounded. The helicopters also bring food and supplies to the Cubans in their garrisons, but never to us.

"So the morale of the FAPLAs is getting worse, and they take it out on the civilians, often with Cuban participation. Last March (1983), I was serving in one of the three battalions making up the 39th FAPLA Brigade on a search and destroy mission in the Andulo area of Bie province. We found nothing but an empty UNITA camp. In frustration, the entire 39th Brigade was assembled, numbering 1,000 men plus 45 Cuban advisers. FAPLA Captain Pena and Cuban Army Lt. Col. Diego Hernandez jointly ordered action upon a village some 50 kilometers from the town of Andulo. Most of the villagers had fled into the bush by the time we got there, but every man, woman, and child found in the village was shot, 48 people in all, with the Cubans directing and taking part in the killing. We were ordered to kill every living thing in the village, all the livestock, chickens, pigs, dogs, everything, then burn every hut in the village to the ground."

This incident, known as The Andulo Massacre and to which Paulo was an eyewitness, is not isolated. While Paulo did not participate in any others himself, he often heard stories told by other FAPLA soldiers describing the same tactics inflicted upon villagers—for the Cubans, he said, "consider almost the entire civilian population to be aiding UNITA and all young men in Angola as potential guerrillas."

"In the late 1970's the Cubans in Africa seemed to be enjoying themselves. Since then it has been all downhill," reported the London Economist in March of 1984. "Mr. Savimbi's men have been making spectacular advances. There has been a steady trickle of Cuban coffins Havana-wards." [112]

By 1985, the press was asking: "Is Angola Castro's Vietnam?" reporting that Castro seemed to be bogged down in an "unwinnable war," the momentum of which may have "shifted irreversibly in (UNITA's) favor." The MPLA, the report continued, is plagued by desertions, while the Cubans suffer "increasing morale problems." [113] This latter problem has become so serious that the official Havana newspaper, Granma, recently complained about Cuban families hiding relatives who have deserted or draft-dodged rather than serve in Angola.[114]

On January 31, 1985 Cuban Army Lt. Col. Joaquin Mourino Perez, Coordinator of Cuban Operations in Angola, defected in Madrid. The Spanish press quoted his reason: "I was tired of burying Cuban soldiers in Africa." [115] An intelligence source debriefing Cuban defectors said they reported: "Nearly 4,000 Cubans have been killed in Angola from 1975 through 1984.[116] The casualty rate sharply escalated in early 1983, and the dying continues. Returning troops are bringing diseases back to Cuba, malaria, liver disease, many strange tropical diseases. They are also bringing back a great deal of venereal disease: every Cuban officer has one or more Angolan women for his use, and incidence of rape of Angolan women by Cuban soldiers is widespread." [117]

When Soviet, Cuban, and MPLA leaders met in Moscow in early January, 1984, they decided on an escalation of the war against UNITA. Over the next 18 months, an estimated two billion dollars' worth of Soviet arms shipments was sent to the MPLA, and an additional 7,000 Cubans were transferred from Ethiopia, bringing the number of Cuban combat troops in Angola to 35,000.[118] In early 1985, the Soviet press was reporting on Soviet "specialists" who "live in battlefield conditions" and "work under fire," and on Cuban officers who were present in all FAPLA Units to the battalion level.[119]

It was evidently during another Soviet-Cuban-MPLA meeting in Moscow in March, 1985, presided over by Soviet Defense Minister Sokolov, that the decision was made to launch a massive attack on Savimbi's stronghold.[120]

A force of over 10,000 FAPLA troops, with vast air support mostly flown by Soviet and Cuban pilots, 800 Soviet and East German officers participating in direct command of tactical operations, and commanded overall by Soviet generals, began a two-pronged assault into UNITA territory in late July. The fighting raged on for two months, coming to a climax on the banks on Lomba river, 13 kilometers north of the UNITA-held town (with a strategic airstrip) of Maivinga. The result was a total defeat of the Soviet and Cuban-led MPLA. On September 29, the Soviet commanders ordered retreat, leaving four entire brigades of FAPLA soldiers massacred, 2,300 dead in all. As the FAPLA soldiers retreated on foot (the Cubans and Soviets were helicoptered out) through the dry bush, they deserted by the hundreds, many reduced to eating grass and their boots, drinking water from truck radiators, and suffering horrible deaths. UNITA shot down at least 18 helicopters, 4 MiG 21's, 2 MiG 23's, 3 AN 26's, and 1 AN 12 with a Soviet crew.[121]

Yet in the face of this disastrous defeat, the Soviets are still insisting on a military solution to their problem in Angola. From October, 1985 through January, 1986, fully one-tenth of the Soviet Union's global strategic airlift capability was used to replace the aircraft, weaponry, and military supplies lost fighting UNITA: 800 tons of war materiel per week flown into the MPLA base at Cuito Cuanavale during that time. Rains in February and March halted the resupply, but they resumed in April and continue at the time of this writing (May, 1986).[122].

The Soviet and Cuban-led FAPLA troops of the MPLA are now better armed than before. The next offensive is expected momentarily. But . . . masses of troops, thousands upon thousands, are needed to protect and use the new materiel, and while morale in Luanda is high with the resupply, among the rank-and-file FAPLA soldiers morale has collapsed. According to South African Military Intelligence, "There is an extreme morale problem within the MPLA army. The desertion rate is becoming quite dramatic. FAPLA recruits today are mostly illiterate 12-15 year old boys, with three weeks' training, no formal schooling at all, and who are terrified at going up against UNITA: they know full well what happened to their predecessors in the bush of Cuando Cubango." [123].

The question now for the Soviets is, then: to commit large numbers (5-10,000) of Cuban ground troops to the next offensive against UNITA. The Cubans are presently used mostly for garrison duty defending military sites or to prevent large-scale uprisings in the major towns and cities. There seems to be no way a new offensive against UNITA can be successful without massively using the Cubans. But . . . there may be no way it can be successful with the Cubans: for overwhelming air support is another necessary condition to defeat UNITA, and the fifty Stinger portable anti-aircraft missiles supplied by President Reagan, via the CIA, to Savimbi at the end of April neutralize the threat of the MiGs and MI-24 gunships as well.[124].

As of April, 1986, Cuban and other foreign military deployment in Angola is as follows:

On the National Security Council of the MPLA:

Gen. Van Status, East Germany.

Gen. Konstantin Tchaknovich, Soviet Union.

Col. Fernandes, Portugal.

Gen. Raul Mendez, Cuba.

Foreign Military Personnel:

2,500 East German (intelligence; internal security; communications).

1,500 Soviet (administration of all government ministries; political organization of FAPLA; military training/weapons handling; military advisors).

7,000 SWAPO (headquarters at Kabuita, southwest of Lunanda; indistinguishable from FAPLA troops, wear same unforms, eat in same barracks).

3,500 Portuguese (Portuguese Communist Party mercenaries under the direction of Rosa Coutinho: military logistics; special forces training).

1,200 ANC (mixed with FAPLA, based on Mulanje and Uige provinces).

2,500 North Korean (based in Uige and Cuanzo Norte provinces).

1,400 Katangans (based near Luso).

45,000 Cuban (35,000 troops, 10,000 technical workers with military training).

Cuban Deployment:

15 Regiments (A Cuban Army Regiment has 1,500 men).

Cabinda: one regiment.

Uige: one regiment (at Uige).

Malanje: one regiment (at Malanje).

Lunda: one regiment (at Saurimo).

Moxico: one regiment (at Luena).

Cuando Cubango: two regiments (at Menongue).

Huila: two regiments (at Lubando and Matala).

Mossamandes: one regiment (at Namibe).

Benguela: one regiment (at Benguela/Lobito).

Huambo: one regiment (at Huambo).

Bie: one regiment (at Kuito).

Cuanza Sul: one regiment (at Catafe).

Luanda: one regiment (at Luando).

In addition, most FAPLA infantry brigades (600 men) are commanded by a Cuban officer and have one or more Cuban companies (90–100 men), sometimes an entire battalion (200–300 men) attached to them. The FAPLA Army stands at some 60,000 men. All MPLA Navy ships are under Cuban command. Each MPLA Air Force (FAPA) unit has one Cuban squadron. Cubans fly all 24 Soviet MI-24 helicopter gunships (NATO codenamed HIND) and 18 MI-8 helicopters (codenamed HIP) in Angola.[125]

In addition to their role in FAPLA units, a recent article in Defense and Foreign Affairs reported that Cuban forces are used in Angola for artillery, logistics, mechanized infantry, maintenance of aircraft, armor, anti-aircraft and radar systems (which are manned almost exclusively by Cubans and Soviets), and various training roles. They also provide logistical support for SWAPO forces. Cuban combat units operate as "distinct and separate operational forces." The article noted that Soviet Ilyushin Il-76 military transport jets ferry Cuban and other Soviet Bloc troops and supplies in and out of Angola via the Cape Verde Islands airport at Ila da Sol. It reported "considerable friction between Cuban forces and local units, as well as between Soviet/East German (GOR) security forces and local units, including the MPLA." [126]

It has become commonplace to observe that Castro's forces stand between Savimbi and Luanda—that if the Cubans were withdrawn from Angola and the MPLA had to stand on its own feet and face UNITA by itself, Savimbi's forces would occupy Luanda and militarily defeat the MPLA within a few weeks. Indeed, Eduardo Dos Santos has publicly admitted, in a letter to the Secretary-General of the United Nations, that Cuban troops and armaments" were essential for the survival of his regime in "a war against UNITA gangs."[127]

Yet the State Department is far more preoccupied with the currently fashionable concern over Namibia than Angola. Giving the former a higher priority, State seems to think it must find a "solution" to Namibia—which the United Nations equates with turning governmental sovereignity and control in Nambia to Soviet-backed SWAPO—before tackling Angola. But, as Savimbi explained to me, State has got it exactly backwards:

"The situation in Angola must be solved before that of Namibia, not the other way around. Once freedom and democracy come to Angola, once the Cubans and Soviets are out, then SWAPO will no longer be able to operate in Angola, use Angola as a sanctuary, nor receive Soviet weapons and supplies through Angola. This will force SWAPO to submit to a democratic process and peacefully compete for governmental power, instead of trying to achieve it through terror and Soviet bullets. Why Chester Crocker [Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs] does not understand this is a mystery.

"Mr. Crocker and the State Department continually call for 'peace and stability' in Angola. What they should be calling for instead, is liberty and democracy. Perhaps they think they can trick Castro into withdrawing through complicated timetables 'linked' to what South Africa does in Namibia. They don't seem to grasp that the only thing Castro respects is power and the determination to use it. Castro will only leave Angola when he is forced to."

The State Department continues to oppose aid to UNITA, and to pretend that its negotiations with the MPLA over Namibia will somehow bring peace to Angola. Unable to extricate itself from its now obviously failed policy of "constructive engagement," it is quite incapable of understanding the enormity of what is at stake now for all of Africa south of the equator.

Should the next Soviet offensive, with a massive commitment of Cuban ground forces, succeed in taking Jamba and effectively defeating UNITA, the Soviet colonialization of Angola would become secure and entrenched. Angolan oil revenues would then be freed to supply Cuban mercenaries to Mozambique to rescue the Marxist regime of Samora Machel, who is at present facing imminent defeat from the Mozambique National Resistance, or RENAMO. SWAPO would be vastly rearmed and revitalized, and Namibia would fall, the SADF pulling out to face full-scale guerrilla and race war launched by the ANC from secure sanctuaries. Zaire would be targeted, and Mobutu personally, for the Soviets have never forgiven him for killing Lumumba and taking Zaire away from them in 1961. Brazzaville-Congo would slide back into the Soviet orbit, Tanzania (a socialist basket case thanks to Julius Nyerere) and Zambia (whose Kenneth Kaunda always blows with the wind and who is playing host to the ANC and its East German tutors) would be obliged to, Zimbabwe's Mugabe would be pleased to, and outflanked Botswana forced to. Once the ANC (which is led by a Soviet KGB agent named Joseph Slovo) succeeds in genocidally converting South Africa into the People's Democracy of Azania, the Soviet colonialization of the entire African continent south of the equator will be complete.

But should the Soviets and Cubans be defeated again by a Stinger-equipped UNITA; should the State Department be forced by President Reagan to call for the democratization of Angola and the withdrawal of American oil companies from Angola as with Libya; should Savimbi be armed and enabled to go back on the offensive, carrying the war into Luanda (and Cobinda), then the consequences for Moscow and Havana would be disastrous.

They would be facing the clear possibility of the military overthrow of their client government—unless a faction within the regime, such as the so-called "Catete Group" of left-wing nationalists staged a palace coup and struck a deal with Savimbi first. In either case, Soviet influence would be terminated in central and southern Africa for the forseeable future.

Such an outcome, resulting in the humiliating ejection of the Cubans from Angola, would be Castro's Dien Ben Phu. The repercussions, both domestically and internationally, would be monumental. The return of 45,000 young soldiers and technicans, many of whom we can presume would be embittered and distressed, to the impoverished cynical tyranny of Castro's Cuba would have grave potential for internal unrest. Castro's prestige and influence would be seriously damaged, perhaps irreparably, throughout the Third World. The impact it would have upon his relations with the Sandinistas in Nicaragua would be shattering, while giving the anti-Sandinista "Contras" an enormous boost in morale. Such consequences may, in fact, usher in the final act of the tragedy (or black humor force) of Fidel Castro, the modern-day Mussolini.

Of all the imperialist gangsters of the 20th century, such as Lenin, Stalin, or Hitler, the one Castro resembles most is Mussolini. Like Mussolini, he is a fascist, a Marxist fascist for whom Cuba has always been too small. Like Mussolini, he has aligned himself with the world's premier evil power of his time, Mussolini to the Nazi, Castro to the Soviets. Like Mussolini, his greatest imperialist success came in Africa, Mussolini in Ethiopia, Castro also in Ethiopia and in Angola.

And like Mussolini, for all the posturing and strutting on the world's stage, for all the murderous ruthlessness and rapacious will to power, for all the mindless pomposity of the rhetoric, the bombast of childish ideology, and the facade of invulnerable self-confidence, he is, at bottom, a quite pathetic buffoon.

The verdict of history is often pitiless. The road from seemingly invincible hero to despised laughingstock can be very short. Mussolini traveled down that road, and quickly. His physical fate at the hands of the Italian people was an ugly one. Should Castro be humiliated in Angola, perhaps a chain of events will be set in motion so that justice will prevail for Castro as it did for Mussolini. Perhaps Fidel Castro will share his fate at the hands of the Cuban people whom he has ground under his boot for so long.

NOTES

[1] Portugal began colonizing among African kingdoms in the area of the Congo River estuary before the end of the 15th century. The slave trade was the basis for what became the colony of Angola, from where 3 million Africans were exported to Brazil from 1580 to 1836 [J. Duffy, Portugal in Africa. Cambridge: Harvard Univ. Press, 1962. p. 59.]. Colonial occupation was, however, limited to the coast and some adjoining plateau areas until the latter half of the 19th century. Effective control of the interior was not secured until the first decades of this century, the entire eastern third of Angola not until 1930. Angola is about twice the size of Texas, almost half a million square miles, with a present population of between 6 to 7 million.

[2] The Belgian Congo gained independence as the Democratic Republic of the Congo (or Congo-Leopoldville) in June, 1960, with Joseph Kasavubu as President and Patrice Lumumba as Prime Minister. Civil war broke out a week later with Kasavubu calling in Belgian and UN peacekeeping troops, and Lumumba asking and receiving direct Soviet aid. Army Col. Joseph Mobutu took over the government in September, expelled all Soviet and Soviet-bloc personnel from the country, arrested Lumumba, had him killed in February, 1961, and turned the government back to Kasavubu. Mobutu (now Gen.) again seized power in November of 1965 and has maintained it since. In 1966 he changed the capital's name from Leopoldville to Kinshasa; in 1971, the country's name to the Republic of Zaire, and his own name to Mobutu Sese Seko.

[3] The Middle Congo of French Equatorial Africa (whose capital of Brazzaville lies directly across the Congo-Zaire river from Kinshasa) gained independence as the Republic of the Congo (today People's Republic of the Congo) in April 1960 with Abbe Youlou as President. In August, 1963 Youlou was deposed by Alphonse Massamba-Debat, who quickly established extensive ties with Havana, Peking, and Moscow. Later that year, Zairean Marxists formed the Comite National de Liberation (CNL) in Brazzaville, dedicated to forcibly overthrowing the Zaire government. C.K. [43] Savimbi first met Roberto in March of 1960 in Switzerland, having fled there to escape PIDE (Portuguese secret police) harassment for refusing to inform on his fellow Angolan students in Portugal. (In September, 1958, The United Church of Christ sent a group of Ovimbundu students to study in Lisbon; Savimbi was among them.) He had already been contacted by the MPLA, and wrote a letter of refusal to join either group in February, 1961. But by the end of that year, he sided with Roberto, accompanying him to New York where they submitted a joint memorandum on Angola to the United Nations. [Marcum, Vol. I, pp. 138, 112, & 221]

[44] Roberto, for example, left Angola at age two to grow up and work in the Belgian Congo. Save for one year at a Baptist school, he only briefly and occasionally visited Angola until he formed the UPA (see n. 32) at age 35 [ibid., pp. 64–67].

[56] Ibid., p. 255.

[57] Marcum cites a New York times article (December 19, 1975) alleging that the National Security Council authorized a $300,000 covert grant to Roberto (but nothing to Savimbi) [Vol. II, p. 257]. He uses this same article to allege that Roberto had received a "modest supply of money and arms" from the CIA from 1962 to 1969, and a "retainer" of $10,000 a year for "'intelligence collection'" thereafter [p. 237]. But he also admits [p. 258] that an independent inquiry by the American Consulate in Luanda determined that Roberto's money in early 1975 came from Portuguese coffee growers (possibly extorted) in Bankongo northern Angola. True or not, to assert, as some have, that Soviet support of the MPLA, its child for twenty years, was a response to US backing of the FNLA to the tune of $300,000 is fatuous—particularly in light of the facts that while Moscow spent as much as $10 million in arms to the MPLA between March and July, 1975 (after $63 million prior to April, 1974, and $6 million in August, 1974 plus additional shipments from then to March, by April, 1975 Roberto was in Iran, Kuwait, and Abu Dhabi with his hat out asking for money [Diario de Noticias, May 1, 1975].
